THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY H. NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

We publish a very able report to the senate, made by Mr. Ewing, of Ohio, on the distribution, among the several states, of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, for a limited time—for the purposes of aiding public education, and internal improvement, &c. It is believed that the amount of this fund will, (in the present year, 1836), exceed twenty-seven millions of dollars; which, if distributed among the states, as surely it ought to be—(being a general fund, and originally intended for a specific object, now no longer demanding it),—must produce effects that will “astonish” the American community, and cause “the wilderness to blossom like the rose,” uniting the most distant parts, and spreading the hum of industry into the yet unimproved “wilds” of the west; producing from 27, to twice twenty-seven millions a year for further distribution, and creating advancements in prosperity at a geometrical ratio, as it were, ad infinitum.

And there is no reason to apprehend that, at present, a stoppage of this prosperity can be brought about, unless from a single cause; and that is under our own guardianship. We allude to the excessive multiplication of banks—and the increasing practice of issuing paper money. It is true, that while the notes of banks freely pass, an improvement made by paper will be just as good as one made by the use of gold—will last as long, and do the same service. But this difficulty occurs—that the profits of honest industry, being paralyzed by the probable failure of many banks—the best portions of society are cast into the unproductive classes, and cease to add to the creations of general wealth, which are indispensable to the well being of a country. This, however, may be partially arrested by a late act of the patriotic state of Pennsylvania—by which 35 millions are retained to the state, and the United States, to correct aberrations from duty in banks—instead of 35 millions being abstracted from the mass of solid matter to do good to us all. For, if the coinage of gold shall exceed the amount calculated by the most sanguine friends of the “gold bill,” the effect will only be, for many years to come, to supply demands, for specie, to be made on the good banks. We shall need a circulation of several hundreds of millions of dollars—and the total of gold cannot be expected to amount to more than 10 or 15 millions* for a long period—do all that we can to increase it.

We have had so many things to bring up this week, that we are compelled yet further to postpone a sketch of the proceedings of the last meeting of the bank of the United States, under its lately expired charter, highly interesting as they are—but shall make a record of them an early day.

A new election has been held, and the following gentlemen will compose the board of directors for the new bank of the United States chartered by the state of Pennsylvania.

Nicholas Biddle,	Richard Price,
John Sergeant,	John Beyland, jr.
Thomas P. Cope,	Henry Froth,
Manuel Eyre,	James Worth, of Bucks,
John R. Neff,	Jno. Roberts, of Montgomery,
William Platt,	John Lippincott,
Charles Chauncey,	Amos Ellmaker, of Lancaster,
Amrose White,	Charles Ogle, of Somerset,
Lawrence Lewis,	Wm. Robinson, Jr. of Allegheny.
Matthew Newkirk,	John A. Brown.

March 1, 1836. At a meeting of the board of directors held this day, Matthew L. Bevan, esq. was duly elected president of the bank, in the place of Nicholas Biddle, esq. resigned. S. JAUDON, cashier.

The Albany Evening Journal, in announcing the winding up of the concerns of the branch bank in N. York, adds the following pithy commentary:

*The Globe, however, supposes that the amount will be 25 millions at the end of 1837.

Vol. L—Sig. 1.

We are now rid of the “monster,” and our citizens will no longer be compelled to borrow its money at six per cent. interest, but be left free to pay from seven to fourteen per cent. as circumstances and their necessities may require.

An English clergyman, at Brussels, has invented a motive power, which promises to rival steam. It is founded on the compression of fluids. Eight pails of water it is computed would be sufficient to carry a vessel to the East Indies!

The state convention which assembled at Columbus, Ohio, on the 22d ult. nominated Wm. H. Harrison for president, Francis Granger for vice president and gen. Joseph Vance for governor. This body was not less remarkable for the respectability and influence, than for the great number of its members. There were one thousand and sixty-four delegates present—and every county and district in the state was represented. The best spirit prevailed in this large body.

A state convention, having the same purposes, has also been held in New York—of which John W. Taylor, esq. was president.

The riots of certain of the working-people, at New York, had ceased. The master riggers and stevedores have had a public meeting, in which they disavow all agency in the late disturbances, entirely condemn it altogether, and declare their purpose not to employ any persons “known to have been engaged in the riots.” This is just to themselves, and takes the true ground.

The Philadelphia price current of Saturday, says that during the last five weeks, there have been loaded daily in that city for Pittsburgh, thirty wagons, each carrying 6,000 lbs.

The bill granting a loan of three millions from the state to the Erie and Hudson rail road company, has passed the legislature of New York. According to estimates made by the engineers who surveyed the route, this is half the sum that will be required to complete the road.

THE PUBLIC LANDS. The surplus revenue. In the course of debate in the senate, Mr. Ewing (of Ohio) stated some striking, we may say astounding, facts, in regard to the revenue and the sales of public lands.

The amount of surplus revenue, or rather of unexpended revenue, already exceeds thirty millions of dollars.

The amount of receipts from sales of public lands during the last month (January) far exceeds any amount heretofore received, as appears from the following statement, by Mr. Ewing, of the amount received in the month of January, 1835, (then unusually large), and the amount received, as far as the several land offices have been heard from, during the corresponding month of the present year:

RECEIPTS FROM PUBLIC LANDS.
	In January, 1835.	In January, 1836.
Ohio,	42,861	111,145
Indiana,	160,893	531,234
Illinois,	56,745	223,087
Missouri,	45,721	126,585
Mississippi,	188,090	426,381
Alabama,	367,263	237,669
Louisiana,	10,348	79,169
Michigan,	43,072	290,749

Should the sales of public lands during the rest of the year bear the same proportion to other years, as is indicated by the sales in the month of January, the revenue from the sales of public lands alone, during the present year (1836) will exceed twenty-seven millions of dollars.

Should the proceeds of the sales of the public lands not be distributed, as proposed, among the states, nor the revenue divided in some other way, the surplus revenue will, in a year from this time, amount, upon reasonable calculation, to fifty millions of dollars! [Nat. Int.]

ARKANSAS. The convention of delegates chosen by the people of Arkansas to digest a constitution and state government, terminated its sitting on the 30th ultimo, after framing and agreeing upon, as the Gazette says, with great unanimity, a constitution and state government for the state of Arkansas. Before adjourning, the convention chose C. F. M. Noland to be the bearer of the constitution to this city. The constitution is to be accompanied by a letter to the secretary of state, signed by the president and countersigned by the secretary of the convention. A memorial to congress, asking the admission of the state into the union, was also adopted.

As far as we can judge from the published journal, the proceedings of this convention have been characterised by propriety and due deliberation. [Nat. Int.]

BANKING CAPITAL. The banking capital of Louisiana will have been enlarged, before the close of the present session of the legislature of that state, to about seventy-two millions of dollars! Upon which it is supposed discounts are and will be made to the amount of one hundred and fifty millions of dollars. If the government of Pennsylvania is to be put down for incorporating thirty-five millions of existing bank capital—if conventions are to be called, and mob-law invoked, to punish the Pennsylvanians for daring thus to understand and pursue the true interest of their state, what shall be done with Louisiana, which has chartered new capital to an amount, (according to federal population), more than ten times as great as the old capital to which a new charter has been granted by Pennsylvania?

The progress of banking in Louisiana has been very rapid, though up to the present year it has not perhaps more than kept pace with the demand created by the increasing culture of sugar and cotton, and the increasing commerce of the port of New Orleans. The following statement of the progressive increase of bank capital in Louisiana will probably not be unacceptable to our readers:

In the year 1811, the amount was.....	$ 754,000
1815.....	1,432,000
1820.....	2,597,420
1830.....	5,665,980
1834.....	23,664,755
1836, about.....	72,000,000

BRIBERY. A bill has been reported in the Virginia legislature, by a committee, proposing to take a bribe of one-fourth of one per cent. per annum on the amount, for the incorporation of new banking capital, and the increase of old, to the aggregate amount of $5,960,000. This bribe is called in the bill a bonus to the state; but as the Richmond Enquirer insists on calling the bonus for education and internal improvements, which is to be given to Pennsylvania by the bank of the United States for a recharter, a bribe, we suppose the sum demanded by the legislature of Virginia for granting banking privileges must be considered a bribe also. If this be not very courteous language, it is at least the language of the court. [Id.]

OHIO AND MICHIGAN BOUNDARY. We shall lay before the public, in a few days, the report made on Tuesday, in the senate, by Mr. Clayton, from the committee on the judiciary, on the interesting subject of the northern boundary of Ohio. It is a document which disencases all the questions connected with the Michigan and Ohio controversy, and fully sustains the principle of the bill to establish the boundary by the line from the southern extreme of Lake Michigan to the most northerly cape of the Miami bay. The committee unanimously agreed that congress has the power thus to settle the boundary, and that it is expedient so to settle it. The results of the investigation by this committee, at the present session, are the same with those at which the same committee of the senate, though differently constituted, has twice before unanimously arrived. The reading of the report occupied more than an hour, and five thousand extra copies of it were then ordered to be printed. Since this report was made in the senate, we understand that the judiciary committee of the house have reported on the same subject. Their report, made yesterday (Wednesday) arrives, it is said, though we have not seen it or heard it read, at the same general results, and was made with nearly equal unanimity.

VERY LATE FROM FLORIDA. A vessel arrived at Charleston on the 25th ult. from St. Augustine, which place she left on the preceding day.

There were seven hundred mounted men arrived at Jacksonville the 21st inst., from Georgia and South Carolina; they would leave next morning for Picolata. An express arrived from Picolata just as the Mills was leaving St. Augustine, which stated that general Scott had arrived there—18 or 20 reports of cannon were at the time in the direction of Picolata, (a salute probably).

St. Augustine, Feb. 23. The militia of this city have been disbanded and disbanded by the orders of gen. Eustis. Considerable excitement prevails on the subject, as it is considered by some to be a disgrace. This measure is regretted by all, especially as the gallant corps of St. Augustine guards who fought so bravely at Dunlawton were included in the order, and were also disbanded. We know of no set of men more worthy of keeping their arms, and none who know how to use them better. Could not some means be devised to procure them arms so that this gallant corps of spirited young men should still continue to exist, and not die with the cause that called them into actual service.

The following is an extract of a letter from an officer of the army to his correspondent in this city, dated Fort Brooke, Tampa Bay, February 13, 1836:

"We arrived here on the 11th, after a very boisterous passage from New Orleans. Each day we have been expecting to start for Fort King, but as yet have been delayed from time to time, until we begin to think we shall not go there at all. We start this morning, however, for the woods, and, if we keep on to Wythlacoochee, it will be very well; if not, why no matter. There will be a force of 1,000 men to take the field, of which 450 will be regulars, and the balance militia. The prospects of a fight are pretty fair, and, in my next, I hope to inform you that we have met and captured a great many Indians. I am in a hurry now, so that you must excuse me for not writing more."

In addition to the above, we learn from other sources that gen. Gaines had reached Fort Brooke; that the sloop of war Pandalia was lying 14 miles below the fort, not being able to get nearer; and that, for some days before, Indian signs had been seen within from 12 to 20 miles of the fort.

TENNESSEE. The house of representatives refused, on the 12th February, to take up the expunging resolutions by a vote of 42 to 23. Some of those who are opposed to them voted for taking them up.

A letter from Valparaiso says—

"We have accounts here stating that Pekin has been destroyed by an earthquake and 100,000 houses engulfed—so that where the city stood there is now a black and stagnant pool." [Rather round-a-bout.]

The republics of Peru, Bolivia and Chili, are in a precious state of fighting and uproar, one with the other—through their rapacious generals and military plunderers.

ITEMS AND SCRAPS.

A singular relic. Among the many other curious papers preserved in the library of the Massachusetts Historical society at Boston, we have seen the leaf of a sermon enclosed in the handwriting of Dr. Eliot.

"Mr. Cotton Mather's leaf of a sermon which the devil was so spiteful as to tear."

The leaf itself has an appearance, in one corner, as if two pieces had been pinched out by the fingers, and near this appearance is the following memorandum in Cotton Mather's handwriting.

"While I was preaching at private fast, (kept for a possessed young woman) on Mark ix. 28, 29, ye devil in ye Damsel flew upon mee, and tore ye leaf, as it is now torn, over against ye text.

November 29, 1692."

The good doctor doubtless preserved this leaf to testify to all posterity of the actual presence of the evil one. What would sir Walter Scott have given for the possession of such a capital fact in Demology? [Greenfield Mercury.]

Greenfield, Massachusetts January 26. Mr. Aretas Ball, of Montague, in this county, had the good fortune to kill on the 20th ultimo, three wild turkeys at one shot—weighing in all 45 lbs. The wild turkey is literally a rara avis in the forests of the more settled portions of New England, having followed the course of empire, and emigrated to the wild woods of the west. It is rare that our Yankee sportsmen have the luck to fall in with, and pick off one of them—much more rare to take down three at one shot.

The Memphis (Tenn.) Gazette of recent date, commences an editorial in the following blasphemous and shocking strain. It must be a bad cause that tolerates such editors, and requires such language to sustain it.

"The opposition of this quarter were perfectly astounded and amazed at the revocation of the nomination of judge White, by the legislature of Alabama. It was like the second coming of Christ: it came when they least expected it."

Elementary education in France. From the report of M. Boulay de la Meurthe. The population of France is 32,509,742 inhabitants. With respect to primary instruction, it may be divided into four classes. The first class composed of children below two years of age, to the number of 1,811,787. The second class, of children above two years and below six years of age, to the number of 2,744,524. The third class, of children above six and below fifteen years of age, to the number of 4,987,261. The fourth class, of adults, fifteen years of age and above, to the number of 22,966,170. The first class, below two years, is wholly under maternal care. The second class ought to be received in asylums, or infant schools, to receive preparatory instruction: 2,500,000 children of this class do not go to them. The third class ought to frequent the primary schools, properly so called: but, out of nearly five millions of children of this class, there are still 2,537,536, namely 838,803 boys and 1,698,733 girls, who never go to them at any time of the year; and 3,740,804, viz: 1,705,890 boys and 2,039,914 girls, who do not attend them in the summer time.

Of the 21,933,170 adults, there are 14,355,856, namely, 5,741,542 males, and 8,612,314 females, who can neither read nor write.

Thus, the number of persons in France, who have no instruction whatever, both children and adults, is 19,391,392 persons; that is to say, sixty-three out of every hundred, or about three-fifths of the total population, deducting the 1,811,787 children under two years of age.

As deduction and complement of these results, the reporter adds these two tables.

A question for antiquaries. In making some alterations in the chapel of the castle of Lassaraz, in Switzerland, there were lately found, in a vault which had been walled up, four statues and cenotaph in stone. Two of the statues represent females, and the other two armed knights. The cuirass of one of these is open, and two toads are seen gnawing his sides; his visor is also up, and two more of the same reptiles are fastened to his cheeks. The legendary history of this curious figure has not been discovered, but as the castle of Lassaraz played a distinguished part in the wars of the country in the middle ages, and as there are numerous chronicles of those times in the library at Lausanne, it possibly may be found there. There is a full length figure attached to the cenotaph, but the four above mentioned evidently do not belong to it. They are all, however, of the 14th century, and were not originally placed where they have been found; but were probably removed there for safety, during some of the convulsions of the country.

Extraordinary power of steam. An ingenious Englishman, named West, has lately erected, on a copper mine at St. Austell, a steam engine, on an economical principle of preserving the heat, in the manner, we should judge from the description, of professor Nott, of our country. In an experiment, it raised 125½ millions of pounds weight one foot high with every bushel of coals consumed!

M. Canson of Annonay, peer of France, has purchased an estate at Algiers, on which he intends to plant 200,000 mulberry trees, and also the sugar cane.

Two linguists, Kwahio and Yuen-foo, have been banished as traitors, for allowing the late lord Napier to arrive at Canton in the Amherst.

Wheeling, Feb. 5, 1836. It will be gratifying to our townsmen to know that the first stone of the bridge over the west branch of the Ohio was laid on the first day of this month—the western abutment at Bridgeport being on that day commenced. The island abutment will be commenced in the course of two or three weeks, and both go forward with all practicable expedition. The building of the piers must depend upon the state of the river. Should it early become low, they will be built before midsummer; should it continue as full as last season, they must be deferred till the fall. The timbers can be laid, and the bridge finished, in a month afterwards.

When the bridge over the eastern or main branch of the river is determined on and about to be commenced, we hope the energetic contractor will not take our citizens by surprise in laying the foundation, as he has done on this occasion.

That event should be accompanied with appropriate ceremonies. The day should be greeted with the loudest welcome that all our bells and all our artillery can bestow: every steamboat, keel and flat boat, should raise high their banners: the great statesman of the west and ardent patron of the national road, HENRY CLAY, should lay the corner stone: an orator should be appointed on the part of the corporation, and another on the part of the different trades and professions: and at night the town should be illuminated. The day that sees begun the first bridge across the Ohio should be a memorable one to our annals.

We understand that Mr. Laberon, the builder, has taken the opportunity afforded by the covering of the river with ice, to measure the precise distance between the abutments. It is, for the west branch, 625 feet; for the east branch, 855. This, then, is the width of the river at the ordinary stage of water in the navigable season—main branch 285 yards, lesser branch 208 do. [Times.]

The convents of Switzerland, are not only numerous but possessed of large wealth. That of Rhineau is estimated at a million of florins.

There were 80 fires in the city of Philadelphia, and its suburbs, last year—the aggregate damage of which was estimated at $119,200.

The governor of the workhouse at Alvington, in Gloucester, England, received a communication from a pauper, short time ago, stating the terms on which the gentleman would graciously consent to become an inmate of the house, in these words: "For the azenent of my mind I have set down the princible part of what I subzist upon. Tee for breckfast, a little tozt well buttered. For dinner, a little mutton and bred, and half a point of good hale. In the evening tee and a boiled eg. The mutton must be lane. I always sleeps in blankets. In this way I have contrived to live nearly eighteen months. With-out these trifels I cannot do." [Nat. Gaz.]

BRIEF NOTICES—CHIEFLY OF NEGLECTED ARTICLES.

The Constitution frigate, commodore Elliott, has been at Athens, when she was visited by the king of Greece, and some of his superior chiefs, with much courtesy.

It seems agreed, that the condition of the mails was never quiet so bad as at present. We have grievous complaints from all quarters. The "Louisville Journal" says—

"If some of our eastern friends will have the goodness to put a few coals of fire upon the backs of Mr. Kendall's mail-terrapins, they will very much oblige us."

Bowen, the black man, who attempted the life of his mistress, in Washington, has been respited until the 2d of June—by the president of the United States.

Robert J. Walker, the new senator from the state of Mississippi, appeared on Monday, the 22d ult. was qualified, and took his seat.

Persons in various parts of the country, taking advantage of the deep snow, have committed great slaughter among the deer, who are benumbed by the cold, and deprived almost of food, and therefore rendered very docile. A man near Binghamton, (according to the Broome county, N. Y. Republican), has killed forty. Another, more humane, has caught a full-grown deer, led it to his home, where it partook of the food that was offered it, and soon became quite tame.

Mr. Gay's power-loom for weaving silk has been found eminently successful at Providence, R. I. The lathe performs 140 strokes per minute. The fabric is equal to the imported article. The little girl who attends it says she can take care of four at a time, turning off 100 yards per day.

The ice on the river Schuylkill is said to be from 22 to 24 inches thick. Should it move off while in a solid state, by a high freshest, much damage may reasonably be expected. [Norristown Herald.]

Advices received at New Orleans, mention that a force of 2,500 Mexicans was advancing upon Texas, and that 1,500 of them had reached the river Frio, 80 miles from San Antonio. It is stated that the Texans have relinquished the contemplated design of privateering against Mexican commerce.

Yale college. From the catalogue of this venerable university for 1835-6, it appears that the whole number of students at the institution is 572. The freshmen number 135, which, it is believed, is the largest class that ever entered any college in the union.

Port of New Orleans. The accumulating wealth and growing commercial importance of this great southern mart, is not less pleasing than remarkable. From a table exhibiting the amount of tonnage annually entered at the New Orleans custom house, furnished by the collector of that port, it appears that in 1821, that it amounted to less than seventy-five thousand tons. In 1835 it had increased to upwards of three hundred and thirty-three thousand tons. During the year 1835, the increase over the preceding year was upwards of seventy-five thousand tons—being 357,414!

Among the indications of the immense wealth of England, none is more striking than the amount of deposits in savings banks. In the year 1832 this amount was thirteen millions of pounds sterling, and in 1834 fifteen millions. As no doubt nearly the whole of this immense sum is deposited by the poorer and laboring classes, the evidence it affords of prosperity is still more gratifying.

The 22d ult. the birth-day of the FATHER OF HIS COUNTRY, the unequalled WASHINGTON, was very generally observed.

Marine Hall, (Boudoin college), was destroyed by fire on the 17th ult. It was also destroyed, in like manner, in 1822.

From returns already received it is ascertained that during the last year upwards of five hundred thousand passengers travelled on the Liverpool and Manchester rail road, exclusive of way-passengers.

Grain. It is a singular fact, that two or three cargoes of wheat, rye and oats, have recently been imported from Europe into New York, and have paid a handsome profit to those concerned in the transactions.

The demand on England for rail road iron to go to the continent and United States, is said to amount to near 300,000 tons.

The great establishment—the “Methodist Book Concern,” at New York, was destroyed by fire, last week. Loss, two hundred and fifty thousand dollars! About 300 persons have thereby been thrown out of employment. The watchman had passed late through the building. The house was thought to be fire proof. It is a profound mystery how it occurred. The building was 121 feet in length by 52 deep, with a projection in the rear 100 feet by 48. The whole was of brick, and six stories high, including the basement. The printing establishment of the concern was very extensive—giving employment to between 60 and 70 compositors, and 32 presses, including one Napier. A great amount of stereotype plates were destroyed in the printing office, together with all the presses, types, &c.

The Delaware 74, capt. John B. Nicholson, bearing the broad pendant of com. Patterson, arrived at Norfolk last week, from the Mediterranean—officers and crew in excellent health.

Oak wood was selling in New York at $16 50 per cord, and pine at $11 25.

Prospects of Monmouth county, New Jersey. For 50 years after the revolution this county existed in a state of supine torpor—not five lots were sold in all this time in the principal town of Freehold. A few years since was made the great discovery of marl, which has been a mine of wealth to the farmers, producing the richest pastures and grazing for cattle and sheep, and for making butter and cheese. The consequence has been that farms which have within 10 years sold at $10 the acre, now bring readily from $50 to $100. So much for the virtue of marl. Such is the wealth and enterprise thus brought into the county, that it is now proposed to make a rail road from the principal town to join the Camden and Amboy rail road at Hightstown, distant 10 or 12 miles, with a spur or branch to the marl pits.

Remarkable fact. In the last number of Silliman's Journal, is an article “on currents in water.” It is asserted that if a tub or other vessel filled with water and a hole made near the middle of the bottom to discharge it, the water will require a rotary motion from west to south, or opposed to the apparent motion of the sun, and if means are used to produce an opposite motion, upon withdrawing those means, the former direction will be resumed. This cannot be the effect of chance, but of natural laws constantly operating. [Boston Trans.]

The Quaker controversy in New Jersey ended. It must be gratifying to both parties of Friends, that the question has at last been settled by a law which recently passed the New Jersey legislature—by the provisions of which the property belonging to the society of Friends, at the time of the separation, is to be divided in proportion to the relative numbers of each party. It passed the assembly by a vote of 32 to 14, and the council 12 to 2. This will of course put the matter at rest. [Mer. Ad.]

Ship letters. There were received at the post office in this city, yesterday, nine thousand five hundred and thirty-nine letters, by the packets from Liverpool and Havre. Five thousand and seven of these for other offices, were marked, stamped and mailed by the forwarding clerks in less than three hours after their arrival, besides attending to the regular ordinary business of making up the mails for the south, east and north. The city letter clerks and carriers were ready for delivery before 6 o'clock P. M. This may be considered a despatch of business unequalled in the annals of the post office department. [*N. Y. The pacha of Egypt has recently suffered a severe reverse in the Hedjaz (Arabia). The Arabs came down upon his troops from the gorges of the mountains, and out of 10,000 Egyptians only 500 were saved.

New York, Feb. 27. It is now a period of more than seventy days since the calamitous fire of December, and while we are penning this paragraph, the smoke from the ruins of the American publication office, (next west of the Merchants Exchange), is issuing forth anew from under the snow with which the cellar of that building is filled. [N. Y. Com. Adv.]

A valuable invention. Dr. McWilliams, of this city, has taken out a patent for a stove for heating carriages of all kinds, which is one of the most valuable inventions which have ever been made. It is remarkable in its structure, and may be sold for six or eight dollars; and it consumes the most inconsiderable quantity of coal. The advantages of such a stove are almost too obvious to be mentioned. Taking up very little room, they may be fitted to the bottom of gigs or chaises, and of every variety of carriage, and are particularly well adapted to rail road cars. The expense of fuel is not above three cents for a hundred miles travelling, at an ordinary rate. It is only necessary to make this invention known, to secure its introduction very generally. For a trifling expense, a stage driver may now be as comfortably situated on his box, as by the room fire; and the pleasures of sleigh-riding, may be enhanced a hundred fold. This stove is now used in the cars of the Baltimore and Washington rail road, and gives entire satisfaction. The passengers are kept warm during the whole journey, and are never annoyed by smoke—the stove being airtight. [Washington Mirror.]

The fine arts. It will no doubt afford satisfaction to the lovers of the fine arts in this country to learn that through the agency of col. Childs, West's splendid picture of death on the pale horse, has been purchased for the Pennsylvania academy of the fine arts. The picture is now in New York, having been brought from London in the packet ship Hannibal, just arrived.

This picture has long been regarded as the chef d'oeuvre of our distinguished countryman. As Americans we feel proud that this great work of art is permanently to remain in this country, and as Philadelphians we are gratified that such a treasure has been added to the already large and valuable collection of works of arts belonging to one of our public institutions. [Herald.]

Sir John Sinclair, bart who recently died at Edinburgh at the age of 82, was one of the most distinguished benefactors of Great Britain. He was a member of the privy council, wrote about 100 volumes on agriculture, finance, &c. and in 1794, by his great influence raised two battalions of volunteers, each 1,000 men.

Pauperism. In the city and county of N. York, during the past year, there were, according to the official statement, 22,696 paupers, and the expense of supporting this number, amounted to $91,813. The whole number in the state, was 39,362—total expense $323,841 12.

Dr. Lardner, in the new edition of his work on “the steam engine,” expresses a conviction that on the line from London to Liverpool, express coaches will go at the rate of fifty miles an hour, and that even a hundred is within the limits of mechanical probability.

The banks of New York are supposed to pay $26,600 a year, in postages!

A steam sleigh has been invented at Galena, by a couple of Yankees, and was to be applied for immediate use. It is water-tight, and is supplied with windows, stoves, &c. It is highly spoken of.

Steam vs. water. The Portsmouth Journal makes a statement, based upon actual experiment, by which it appears that the manufacture of cotton by steam mills, in seaport towns, may very successfully compete with the best water power in the interior. The cost of operating a mill at Lowell, of 10,000 spindles is put down at 150 dollars per week; that of a steam mill of the same power, at 125 dollars—making a difference in favor of steam of 25 dollars per week.

More than four years—five winters, have passed since the opening of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road to Frederick—60 miles. Since which, though we have had some "terrible" snow storms, a single trip has not been lost, some were a little delayed, to give the snow cars time to operate. Many trips have been lost on the Philadelphia and Columbia, and Camden and Amboy rail roads, and certain others; not more incommoded by snow than the Baltimore and Ohio. Their trains have also been repeatedly fired, and much damage sustained—but, by the use of anthracite coal, the latter have been safe. This coal, too, is a product of Pennsylvania.

FOREIGN NEWS.

From Paris papers of the 15th Jan.

Paris, Jan. 8. At 8 o'clock last evening, the grand deputation of the chamber of peers was received by the king, and presented to his majesty the address from the chamber in answer to the speech from the throne; [already published in this paper.]

The following is his majesty's reply:—"Gentlemen, I am affected by the sentiments you have expressed towards my children and myself, and, both as a father and a king, I feel joy from those which you manifest towards my eldest son. The increasing prosperity of France, the testimonies of confidence and attachment with which I am more and more surrounded by the nation, are additional motives for my receiving happiness from the congratulations you present to me. I participate in your hopes that all our wishes will be accomplished, and that our efforts, crowned with success, will continue to preserve to France that repose, that liberty, that grandeur, which I am happy in having contributed to ensure to her."

CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES.

Sitting of January 8.

The order of the day being the communication of the draught of the address, in reply to the speech from the throne, the document was read by the president as follows:

"Sir,—The chamber of deputies, faithfully interpreting the desires and the wants of the country, congratulates itself on having to lay before your majesty words of satisfaction and of hope. Profound peace reigns in this state, and France has faith in its duration. This security, by consulting our union at home, augments the assurance of our power abroad. Happy the country which feels in so high a degree the consciousness of its strength, when all its wishes are for peace.

"This prosperous situation is due to the action of time, and to the progress of public reason, which have triumphed over the most difficult circumstances. Not long since France saw public order and our institutions struggling against the desperate efforts of factions. To defend them, sire, your government appealed only to the force of the laws, and we take pleasure in acknowledging, with your majesty, the happy effects of the legislative measures adopted by the constitutional powers. Seconded in every instance by the good sense of the nation, they have restored the respect due to the laws and public morals; the attacks against the sovereign and constitution of the country have ceased, and the confidence of all good citizens now rallies around those great interests, which are henceforth inviolable.

"A catastrophe, with which the most lamentable recollections are connected, has thrown the country into consternation; it will have served only to display in their true light the magnanimity of the sovereign, and the affection of France. Providence, who watches over her destinies, has visibly protected your majesty's days, which are the nation's dearest patrimony.

"Your royal family, sire, has also its part in the hopes of the country. Your sons have passed their earliest years with ours, and we now find them in the camp amidst our valorous youth. In this noble participation of labor and of peril, France recognizes the national character of the dynasty of which she has made choice. She has seen with emotion the eldest of her princes sharing in the fatigues and the dangers of our army, and the chamber having sympathized with your just solicitude, is entitled to participate in your satisfaction as a father and a king. That chamber, sire, hopes that the residence of the heir to the throne in our African possessions, will contribute to enlighten the government as to the measures best calculated to conciliate, with regard to those possessions, the wishes of civilization and the real interests of France.

"The first necessity of civilization, sire, is peace, and we have welcomed with heartfelt gratification the assurance which has fallen from your majesty's lips, that the state of our relations with foreign powers is satisfactory. Our intimate union with great Britain is an additional guarantee for the duration of peace! It insures the duration and maintenance of rights consecrated by treaties, the execution of which is of importance to the balance of power in Europe.

"France, sire, sets an example of the faithful fulfilment of promises. On the frontiers of Spain, your majesty's government has taken the necessary measures to insure the accomplishment of the treaty of the 28th April, 1834. The chamber sincerely desires that those measures, continued with vigilant firmness, may contribute to the internal pacification of the Peninsula, and the consolidation of the throne of Isabella II.

"The chamber regrets with your majesty that the treaty of the 4th of July, 1831, has not received its complete execution. In the friendly mediation of Great Britain, the chamber has seen a fresh proof of the alliance which unites both countries. The declarations contained in a recent act enables us at length to hope for a determination equally honorable to two great nations.

"Peace, sire, can serve only to augment the prosperity of our finances; their satisfactory condition, as your majesty informs us, will permit us at length to obtain, in all its reality, that equilibrium which is so desirable between the revenues and the expenditures of the state. To attain and preserve this important result, we are aware of the maturity that is required in the regulation of the credits, of all the steadiness that is necessary in the maintenance of their limits, and of all the prudence that must be observed in the valuation of the receipts which are to provide for that object. In this spirit we shall examine the financial laws that may be presented to us. A well-advised economy is a sacred duty to the government, and also for a chamber which is the guardian of the public fortune.

After three days discussion, the address was adopted (246 to 67), with no material amendments except the following, proposed by M. Mornay to be added to the 5th paragraph:

"This happy harmony affords us a hope that, in concert with Great Britain, and the powers whose interests are connected with ours, you may be able, sire, to restore the European balance, so necessary to the maintenance of peace, and that the first pledge of it may be the preservation of the ancient nationality of Poland, which has been consecrated by treaties."

The adoption of this amendment was received with loud and prolonged cheers of the deputies of the opposition.

The Journal des Debats says the paragraph on which the amendment was moved, evidently related to Poland, and was so understood by every body; it was therefore incumbent upon the chamber to make it explicit, or to withdraw it altogether. As for the ground work of the matter, every body was agreed; the government had protested against the union of Poland with Russia, and expressed its determination to maintain their protestations in face of the chamber, that is to say, of all Europe; there was, therefore, every reason why the address should embody those opinions. This would, perhaps, not have been done but for the speech of Warsaw, which made the chamber refuse to pass over in silence an usurpation upon which Russia had effected no reserve; the address of the chamber is, therefore, a just satisfaction given to the public indignation. Although there was a difference of opinion as to the suitableness of the protestation, there was none as to the foundation of the matter.

Paris, Jan. 11. Deplorable excesses were committed at Barcelona on the 4th inst. Upwards of a hundred prisoners were massacred by the populace, in the citadel. The body of col. O'Connell was horribly mutilated. The disturbance continued on the 5th. The lives of all persons suspected of Carlism were threatened. On the 4th, upon receiving an account of these disorders, gen. Mina left San Lorenzo for Barcelona.

The city of Guetaria has been captured by the Carlists and burnt. The citadel, by the last accounts, remained in the hands of the constitutionalists.

Much sympathy is expressed both by the London and Paris papers, on account of the late calamitous fire in New York.—In Paris a subscription was opened for the relief of the sufferers. It was anticipated that a great many bills would come back dishonored, but in this there will be a happy disappointment.

A letter from Constantinople of the 15th ult. published in the Augsburg Gazette, contains the following intelligence:—"Diplomatic negotiations are still very brisk; and the French ambassador in particular has frequent conferences with the reis effendi. It is said that the subject of them is the demand of a considerable sum of money by France from the dey of Tripoli.

The queen of Portugal was married, by proxy, on the 1st of January. The prince, her husband, is said to be strongly inclined in favor of French interests. No farther change of ministry had taken place, but the weakness of the marquis de Loulé, the new premier, became daily more apparent. Her majesty opened the session of the chambers on the 2d with a speech, in which we do not find any thing of so much interest or importance as to induce us to copy it.

A letter from Lemberg, in Galicia, dated Dec. 31, says: "Russian troops are concentrating between Plock and Lublin; and three regiments of cavalry have taken up their quarters on the other side of the Vistula, which is attributed to the arrival of a new and strong division from the government of Wilna. The Austrian commanders appear to be carefully watching these movements. The republic of Cracow is urging the three courts to acknowledge its independence, to which Russia opposes exorbitant pretensions and pecuniary demands, which it is impossible for Cracow to satisfy. They are waiting for answers from Vienna."

Admiral Mackau remained at Paris on the 14th of January! Whence the ridiculous stories about his arrival in the Antilles? It has been "humbugged" even in congress.

Latest from England. London dates of Feb. 4.

The accounts of the state of the cotton market, are highly favorable.

The political intelligence is not of much importance. We see nothing in the papers, respecting the French indemnity. Mr. Vail, our charge at London, had had an interview and was in correspondence with the French minister at that court.

The London Times of the 21st states that the question of the recognition of the independence of the trans-Atlantic states, is now under consideration at Madrid, and expresses a hope that the holders of stock of those countries may by such a measure be enabled to obtain their claims, which now amount to £25,000,000. It was believed that the independence of all of those states would be, at once, acknowledged.

It is reported that the French ministry is still in danger. The question of the reduction of the five per cents. still agitated the public mind, and it is asserted that the new minister of finance was in favor of the same measure as led to the resignation of his predecessor.

The late conflagration at New York.

The right honorable the lord mayor has given his ready approval of and consent to call a public meeting expressive of the deep sympathy of the metropolis of England in regard to the conflagration at New York.

The following answer of his lordship to George Jones, esq. the projector of the meeting, will at once be gratifying and satisfactory in regard to the liberality of our chief magistrate:—

Mansion-house Jan. 29, 1836.

"Sir: Whenever the requisition is presented to me I shall be most happy to convene a meeting for so noble a purpose, &c. &c. I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant, W. T. COPELAND.

Paris, Jan. 24. The fire at New York has produced its effect at St. Etienne, where silks to the value of 1,300,000 francs have been sold this week, with a rise of 4 francs per lb. on organdies.

The trial of Fieschi appears to have recovered all its original interest with the Parisians. Tickets of admission to the court are said to have been sold in some instances for the extraordinary sum of twelve pounds sterling; and so numerous have been the applications for them, that the allowance to the foreign ministers for the first day was limited to two each. The court was extremely crowded on Saturday to witness the commencement of the trial. At half past twelve, the prisoners were placed at the bar. Fieschi entered the hall sniffing, and appeared highly gratified that his trial was about to commence. Morey is evidently in a bad state of health. Pepin also appeared much depressed. Bescher seemed to preserve a perfect self-possession and composure; and the other prisoner, Boireau, who is quite a youth in appearance, was perfectly calm and unembarrassed. The court consisted of 175 peers, including prince Talleyrand.

TWENTY-FOURTH CONGRESS—FIRST SESSION.

SENATE.

February 19. This day was chiefly expended in receiving petitions and resolutions, and in various discussions of no particular, or present, general interest. Adjourned to Monday.

February 22. A message was received from the president, (see last volume), after the reading of which and some remarks from Mr. Clay, the senate adjourned.

February 23. After a variety of incidental business—the senate took up the fortification bill, and made some progress therein. Mr. Benton spoke, at length, on the policy of the country, in regard to it. The senate adjourned on the motion of Mr. Preston.

February 24. A message was received from the president of the United States, enclosing a report from the secretary of war, concerning the improvement of Red river; which was ordered to be printed.

Several private bills were passed.

On motion of Mr. Tomlinson, the committee on pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of the widow and children of Major Dade, and it was referred to the committee on military affairs.

Mr. Tomlinson stated that the committee on pensions did not wish to make any extension of the pension system, but, under the circumstances of this case, major Dade having been killed in Florida, the military committee might probably propose some allowance in the form of extra pay.

The fortification bill chiefly occupied this day. Mr. Benton and Mr. Preston were the principal speakers, the latter gave way for the purpose of going into executive business.

February 25. Mr. Robbins, from the committee on the library, reported a joint resolution authorising a subscription to Carey, Lea, & Co's history of congress.

Laid upon the table.

The fortification bill was further discussed, and Mr. Preston concluded the remarks commenced by him yesterday, by moving to amend the bill by striking out the clause appropriating for the fortification at Kennebeck.

Mr. Clay suggested the propriety of laying the bill on the table, and having the various tables printed which had been referred to by gentlemen, before the details of the bill were decided on. As the works embraced in this bill were all new ones, there was no immediate haste necessary in acting on this bill. The wisest course would be to make appropriation promptly for the old works not provided for last session, and to take time for a full examination of the various subjects of appropriation in this bill.

Mr. Preston expressed his acquiescence in the force of the remark.

The fortification bill was laid on the table, and the papers were ordered to be printed.

On motion of Mr. Buchanan, the senate proceeded, with closed doors, to consider executive business; after which, The senate adjourned.

February 26. A message from the president was received, with the following enclosure:—

Department of State, Feb. 24, 1836.

To the president of the U. States.

The secretary of state, to whom was referred the resolution of the senate, requesting the president to "cause to be communicated to the senate, so far as there may be information in the department of state, the number and amount of claims for spoiliations presented to the commissioners under the French treaty of eighteen hundred and thirty-one, which were rejected and the reasons for said rejection," has the honor to report: That it appears from the register of the commissioners that the number of claims presented amounted to.....3,148 Of which allowances have been made, in whole or in part, on.....1,567 Leaving the number upon which no allowances have been made.....1,581

The books of the commissioners do not, generally, give any information respecting the amount claimed in the rejected cases; nor do they, in any instance, furnish the reasons for rejection. In many of the cases in which allowances were made, these allowances were partial only, portions of the claim having been rejected. It appears, therefore, that the records of the commissioners do not furnish the means of complying with the resolution of the senate.

An estimate of the amount of the rejected claims, and a conjectural statement of the reasons for the rejection, approximating the truth, might probably be made upon a careful examination and comparison of all the papers on file in the department relative to the claims presented to the commissioners. But such an estimate and statement are not believed to be within the terms of the resolution, and would not repay the time and labor which, from the great number of the papers would necessarily be employed in preparing them. All which is respectfully submitted,

JOHN FORSYTH.

The message was ordered to be printed.

On motion of Mr. Hendricks, the senate postponed all the previous orders, and resumed the consideration of the bill for the continuation of the Cumberland road.

Mr. Hendricks withdrew the amendment proposed by him, and pending when the bill was last under consideration, to add $20,000 to the amount of appropriation for Indiana.

Mr. Clay, after some remarks, to which Mr. Tipton replied, moved to amend the bill by reducing the items of appropriation to the amounts in the bill of the last session, as far as relates to Ohio and Indiana, and appropriating for the graduating only of the road in Illinois.

Some debate took place on this motion, in which Mr. Ewing, Mr. Robinson, Mr. Linn, Mr. Hendricks, Mr. Crittenden, Mr. Buchanan, Mr. Niles, Mr. Benton, and Mr. Davis, participated.

*As corrected the next day.

Before the discussion had terminated, it was, on motion of Mr. Clay,

Ordered, That when the senate adjourns, it adjourns to meet on Monday.

The senate then adjourned.

February 29. A communication was received from the war department, enclosing a report, in compliance with a resolution of the senate, of the effective force of the army; which was referred to the committee on military affairs, and ordered to be printed.

The following letter was received, and laid before the senate by the chair:

Washington, Feb. 29, 1836.

SIR: I beg leave through you to inform the senate that I have on this day resigned into the hands of the general assembly of Virginia, for reasons fully made known to it, my seat in the senate of the United States, as a senator from that state. This announcement is now made so as to enable the senate, at its earliest pleasure, to fill such vacancies in the several committees as may be created by my resignation.

In taking leave of the body over which you preside, I should be faithless to the feelings of my heart, if I did not frankly confess that I do so with no ordinary emotions. I look to the body itself, as the representative of those federative principles of our system, to preserve which unimpaired has been the unceasing object of my public life. I separate from many with whom I have been associated for years, and part with friends whose recollection I shall cherish to the close of my life. These are sacrifices which it gives me pain to make. Be pleased to assure the senate that I carry with me into retirement sentiments of respect towards its members; and that, in bidding them adieu, I extend to each and all my best wishes for their health, happiness and long life. I have the honor to be, sir, your most obedient servant,

JOHN TYLER.*

Hon. Mr. Van Buren.

The senate proceeded to consider the petition of the friends assembled at Philadelphia, praying for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia.

Messrs. Wall, Black, King, of Geo. and Porter, having spoken on the subject—

Mr. Leigh, by general consent, laid on the table some resolutions of the general assembly of Virginia, on the subject of slavery; and

The senate adjourned.

March 1. Mr. Clayton, from the committee on the judiciary, to which was referred the bill to establish the northern boundary line of the state of Ohio, and the joint resolution on the same subject, made a report, which was read.

The report is very long, and occupied the greater part of the morning in the reading.

Mr. Ewing, of Ohio, moved that the report be laid on the table and printed, and that 5,000 extra copies be printed.

Mr. Buchanan rose to put himself right as to one single point. He concurred in the report of the bill, and he also concurred generally in the reasoning of the committee. There was, however, one point on which he dissented. He did not think that the provision in the constitution of Ohio imposed on the government of the United States, any obligation, express or implied, to demand from Michigan the disputed territory, as a matter of right. In reference to its expediency, he agreed with the committee. He thought the better course would be to give the territory to Ohio, and make it up to Michigan out of the territory of Wisconsin. He thought that Ohio had no greater right to demand this territory of Michigan, than Michigan had to claim it.

Mr. Clayton said it was unnecessary at this time to debate the differences between the member from Pennsylvania and the rest of the committee. It was a fact, however, which perhaps it was well should be made known, that, in the results to which the committee had arrived, every member concurred. The gentleman from Pennsylvania differs from the rest of us only in a single part of the reasoning which brought us to these results, and that is this: we consider it not only expedient, but due to our sense of justice, to confirm the Ohio line; the gentleman thinks it expedient only. We have not decided that Ohio has the line she claims as a matter of strict legal right. On the contrary, the report we have made negatives such a pretension. Had we decided that Ohio has, without our further legislation, a vested and indefeasible right to the boundary proposed in the bill, we should not have reported the bill, but have remitted the parties to the judicial tribunals of the country.

The motion to print five thousand extra copies was then agreed to.

The chair laid before the senate a communication from the secretary of the treasury on the subject of a resolution of a previous session, concerning the safety of steam-boat navigation.

Also, a communication from the treasury department, in reply to a resolution of the senate, reporting the balance of money in the treasury on the latest day on which that balance was ascertained.

These communications were laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

The senate proceeded to consider the petition of the society of Friends, praying for the abolition of slavery.

[*It is stated that Mr. Leigh will not resign—at least at the present time—for which he has given his reasons.]

The question being on the motion of Mr. Calhoun, that the petition be not received,

After some remarks from Mr. Prentice, Mr. Webster and Mr. Preston—the senate adjourned.

March 2. The message which follows was received from the president of the United States, and was ordered to be printed.

Washington, Feb. 29, 1836.

To the senate and house of representatives of the U. States:

I transmit a report of the secretary of state, communicating an application from the charge d'affaires of Portugal, for the passage by congress of a special act abolishing discriminating duties upon the cargoes of Portuguese vessels, imported into the United States from these parts of the government of Portugal, in which no discriminating duties are charged upon the vessels of the United States, of their cargoes, and providing for a return of the discriminating duties which have been exacted upon the cargoes of Portuguese vessels thus circumstanced since the 18th of April, 1834. I also transmit a copy of the correspondence which has taken place on the subject between the department of state, and the charge d'affaires of Portugal.

The whole matter is submitted to the discretion of congress, with this suggestion, that if an act should be passed placing the cargoes of Portuguese vessels coming from certain parts of the territories of Portugal on the footing of those imported in vessels of the United States, or deciding upon the propriety of restoring the duties heretofore levied, and the time which they should be restored, regard should be had to the fact that the decree of the 18th of April, 1834, which is made the basis of the present application, took effect on the Island of Madeira and the Azores many months after its promulgation, and to the more important fact that, until the first of February instant, an indirect advantage was allowed by Portugal to importations from Great Britain over those from other countries, including the United States.

ANDREW JACKSON.

Mr. Ewing, of Ohio, from the committee on public lands, reported a bill to re-organize the general land office; which was read and ordered to a second reading, and, with a document from the commissioner, ordered to be printed.

Some further discussion took place by Messrs. Buchanan, Walker and White, on the abolition question; and on motion of Mr. Goldsborough, the senate adjourned.

March 3. After other business—

The senate proceeded to the special order, being the petition of the society of Friends of Philadelphia, praying for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia.

And Messrs. Goldsborough and King, of Ala. spoke on it. Mr. Culbert requested to be indulged until to-morrow; and the senate then proceeded to the consideration of executive business, on the motion of Mr. Clay.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Friday, Feb. 19. On motion of Mr. Thomas, the bill from the senate extending the charters of the bank of Alexandria and the bank of Columbia for three years, together with the amendment thereto reported from the committee of the house was taken up for consideration.

The amendment was concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill read a third time.

The bill was then read a third time, and passed.

The New York relief bill was further considered—but the house adjourned without arriving at any conclusive decision about it.

[Adjourned till Tuesday—on account of Washington's birth day happening on Monday.]

Tuesday, Feb. 23. The message from the president, relative to our affairs with France, was received and read.

The printing of 10,000, 25,000 and 40,000 copies were proposed—25,000 agreed to.

Mr. Lay, of New York, having moved to amend the motion so as to require that the documents should be laid on the tables completed by the 1st of June. Lost.

Petitions being in order, on the unfinished business of Monday—and one for the abolition of slavery in the District coming up—it occupied the remainder of the day; in the course of which a decision of the chair was reversed—147 to 56.

Wednesday, Feb. 24. After other business—

Mr. Boyd, from the committee on elections, made a report on the subject of the contested election in North Carolina, and moved that it be printed, and made the order of the day for Wednesday next.

[The report is adverse to the claim of the sitting member.]

Mr. W. B. Shepard expressed a hope that a more distant day would be chosen, and moved to strike out Wednesday next, and insert this day three weeks.

Mr. Bynum said the subject had been three months before the house, and opposed any further postponement.

Mr. Claiborne stated that the committee were divided in opinion as to the person who had been elected, and that a counter-report would be made. It would be necessary to print both reports and the whole of the testimony, and afford sufficient time for the house to form an opinion upon the case. He thought the motion did not allow sufficient time for this purpose.

Mr. A. H. Sheppard made some remarks in favor of deliberate action upon the subject, and expressed a hope that it would not be approached hastily, nor under any feeling of excitement.

Mr. Hardin said that the two reports, with the accompanying documents, would, perhaps, occupy three or four hundred pages. It would be necessary for the members to acquaint themselves intimately with the laws of the state of North Carolina in relation to elections before they commenced the examination of the case. He felt disposed, if he knew himself, to do justice between the parties, and he thought one week too short a time to allow him to form a decision upon the question. He protested against the admission of counsel, either before the committee or before the house, on the subject.

Mr. Graham, of North Carolina, (the member whose seat is contested), presented a paper in relation to the subject, the reading of which he called for.

No objection being made, the paper was read.

Mr. G. moved that the paper be laid on the table, and printed.

Mr. Hard moved that the report be recommitted, with instructions to allow further time for the collection of testimony.

The chair decided that, the motion to postpone being under consideration, the motion to recommit was not in order.

Mr. Bell explained that the motion to recommit had priority over the other motion, and appealed from the decision of the chair, but, after some conversation with the chair, withdrew it.

The chair announced the arrival of the hour for taking up the special order.

Mr. Cambreleng presumed, he said, that it was the desire of the house to finish the business under consideration last Friday, when the house adjourned, and moved that the order be suspended for the purpose of resuming the consideration of "the bill for the relief of the sufferers by the late fire in the city of New York?" which motion was agreed to.

The bill was then taken up; and the question being on the motion of Mr. Chambers, of Ken. to strike out the second section of the bill,

Mr. Williams briefly opposed the motion, and stated that its effect would be to lose to the government at least $350,000. The sum to which the section applied was $2,700,000, of which two millions had fallen due. The prosecution of these bonds would cost one or two hundred thousand dollars, and the interest on the bonds, if they were collected and paid into the deposit banks, would also be lost. But, besides this loss, the government would be obliged to run the risk of losing a portion of the amount, by forcing the payment of the bonds at this time.

Mr. Williams, of Ken. spoke in favor of the motion to strike out the second section, and opposed the bill generally, as a bill in effect, to loan money.

Mr. Howard spoke, at considerable length, in opposition to the motion to strike out, and in support of the bill.

Mr. Dunlap followed on the other side.

Mr. Chambers, of Ken. moved a call of the house, which was ordered.

The proceeding of the call was, after some time, suspended, on motion of Mr. Robertson.

The question being then taken on the motion to strike out the second section, was determined in the negative—yeas 69, nays 116.

Mr. Williams, of Ky. moved to amend the bill by adding to it the following proviso:

And provided also, That the indulgence authorised under the provisions of this act shall in no case be given without other and sufficient security be given, when, in the opinion of the collector, it shall be necessary to secure to the government the sum due by the person or persons who ask the indulgence.

After a few words from Messrs. Cambreleng and Williams,

The question was taken and the amendment rejected.

Mr. Briggs moved to amend the bill by adding to the second section the following proviso:

Provided also, That if, in the opinion of the collector aforesaid, any of the bonds which may be given under the act, or the payment of which may be postponed, shall at any time be insecure, it shall be the duty of the said collector to require such additional security as shall be satisfactory to him; and on failure of such additional security being furnished, the payment of such bonds shall be enforced forthwith.

The amendment was agreed to.

The question being then taken on ordering the amendments to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time, it was determined in the affirmative, yeas 125, nays 84, as follows:

Mr. Cambreleng asked the indulgence of the house to go into committee of the whole on some short bills connected with the dissolution of the United States bank.

Objections being made.

Mr. C. moved to suspend the rules; which was not agreed to. On motion of Wise, the house then adjourned.

Thursday Feb. 25. The chair announced the expiration of the hour for the consideration of morning business.

Mr. McKay moved to suspend the rules for one hour, for the purpose of continuing the consideration of the report of the committee on elections, which motion was not agreed to.

By consent of the house, several bills from the senate on the speaker's table were taken up, read twice, and referred to the appropriate committees.

The bill from the senate, commonly called the executive patronage bill, was taken up on its second reading, two motions pending, one to refer it to the committee on the judiciary, and the other to refer it to a select committee.

Mr. Patton moved that the house do now proceed to consider and dispose of the bill, and upon this motion he asked the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

The question being taken, there appeared yeas 104, nays 104.

There being a tie, the chair voted in the affirmative.

So the question was decided in the affirmative.

The bill being taken up, and the chair having stated the question.

Mr. Patton spoke, at some length, in opposition to the motion to refer the subject to the committee on the judiciary.

Mr. Dromgoole was not convinced (he said) by the arguments which he had heard, that the bill ought to be referred either to the committee on the judiciary or to a select committee. He moved to refer it to the committee of the whole on the state of the union, in order that it might be discussed in a free and untrammelled manner. He thought it proper to exclude any report on one side or the other, and to place the bill where it might be fully discussed by gentlemen of all parties, and by gentlemen of no party, if any such there were in the house.

The motion to refer the bill to the committee of the whole on the state of the union was agreed to.

The bill for the relief of the sufferers by the fire in New York was read a third time; and the question being on its passage.

Mr. Pearce of Rhode Island, took the floor, and spoke at great length against the bill.

Without concluding, Mr. Pearce gave way to a motion to adjourn.

And the house then adjourned.

Friday, Feb. 26. The house resumed the consideration of the report of the committee on elections on the subject of the North Carolina contested election, as the unfinished business of yesterday morning. The motion being to postpone the consideration of the report till next Wednesday, and to make it the special order for that day.

Mr. A. H. Shepperd made some remarks in favor of granting further time for the sitting member to obtain testimony, and of postponing the action of the house on the subject for a longer time than was proposed by the committee.

Mr. Mann, of New York, moved to postpone the consideration of the question till next Tuesday week.

Mr. Bynum spoke in favor of an early decision of the question, but said he would vote for the motion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. Graham addressed the house at some length, on the subject, and urged various considerations and facts in favor of such a course as would enable him to obtain further testimony, which he thought essential to a proper understanding of the case. He stated the reasons which had prevented him from obtaining that testimony within the time allowed by the committee.

Mr. Howard expressed a wish that the majority of the committee would inform the house what reason induced them to deny further time to the sitting member after the 16th of January to obtain further testimony.

Mr. Boyd explained that the committee had reason to believe that both parties had been allowed ample time to present their case fully to the house, and on this ground had made their decision against allowing further time.

Mr. Hard said that the minority of the committee were in favor of allowing further time to take depositions; he was prepared to state the reasons which influenced their opinion.

The hour for the consideration of reports having expired.

Mr. Rencher moved that the rules be suspended for the purpose of continuing the consideration of the report from the committee on elections; which motion was not agreed to.

Mr. Cambreleng moved that the rules be suspended for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the New York relief bill, now on its passage which motion was not agreed to.

The house then proceeded to the orders of the day for Friday. The unfinished business of Friday, the 12th inst. was resumed, viz: the "bill for the relief of Jesse Smith and others." The question being on its passage.

Mr. Owens resumed the floor, and concluded the remarks in opposition to the bill commenced by him on a former day.

Mr. Whittlesey followed in support of the bill.

Mr. Craig spoke in opposition to the bill.

Mr. Dunlap, thinking, he said, that sufficient time had been occupied with the consideration of this subject, and believing that the house was as ready now to dispose of it as it ever would be, moved the previous question.

A quorum not voting on the question whether the house seconded the motion,

A call of the house was ordered, and the main question directed to be put.

The question on the passage of the bill was then taken, and decided in the affirmative; yeas 111, nays 72.

So the bill was passed.

The rest of the day was consumed on private bills.

Saturday, Feb. 27. After several unsuccessful attempts by members to procure a suspension of the rules, for the purpose of presenting petitions, the house resumed the consideration of the report of the committee on elections, against the sitting member (Mr. Graham), on the subject of the North Carolina contested election; two motions pending, one to postpone the consideration of the subject to next Wednesday, and make it the special order for that day; and the motion of Mr. Mann, of New York, to postpone it to Tuesday week.

Several gentlemen having spoken, and

The hour of one o'clock having arrived, Mr. Whittlesey called for the orders of the day.

Mr. Boyd moved that the rules be suspended, in order to proceed in the consideration of the report of the committee on elections; which motion was lost.

Mr. Graham, by leave of the house, made some explanations in regard to the facts he expected to establish in case further time should be allowed for taking depositions.

The orders of the day were then taken up—and many private bills were ordered to a third reading.

Monday, Feb. 29. The house resumed the consideration of the question of order which was pending on Tuesday last when the house adjourned.

The chair stated the question as follows: the house had decided that all petitions on the subject of the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia were committed to the select committee on that subject, under a resolution adopted by the house. In virtue of this decision, the chair considered that the petition in question was already referred to that committee. The gentleman from Alabama (Mr. Lawler) had moved to refer the petition to that committee, with certain instructions, which motion the chair decided to be out of order, the petition having been already referred. From this decision the gentleman from Alabama had appealed, and the question now was, "shall the decision of the speaker stand as the judgment of the house?"

Mr. Lawler modified his proposed instructions so as to require the committee to report a resolution, declaring that congress has no power, under the constitution, to legislate on the subject of slavery in the District of Columbia.

Mr. Lawler spoke in support of the appeal.

After some remarks from Messrs. Mercer, Vinton, Wm. B. Shepard and Lawler,

The appeal was withdrawn.

The chair proceeded to call the states, in order, for petitions, commencing with Massachusetts.

And many petitions were presented—among them two memorials, signed by 536 male citizens of Washington county, Pennsylvania, praying for the abolition of slavery and the slave trade in the District of Columbia. Also a memorial signed by 210 females of the borough of Washington, Pennsylvania, on the same subject.

Mr. Patton presented a letter from the governor of Virginia, transmitting certain resolutions on the subject of the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia, and sent to the chair the following motion, in relation to the communication:

1. Resolved, That congress has no constitutional power to abolish slavery in the District of Columbia or in the territories of the United States.

2. Resolved, That any act of congress having for its object the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia or the territories of the United States, ought to be regarded as affording just cause of alarm to the slaveholding states, and bringing the union into imminent peril.

The chair decided that the motion was not in order, inasmuch as the resolution adopted by the house on the subject had committed "every paper and proposition," on the subject of abolition, to the select committee appointed under that resolution.

From this decision Mr. Patton appealed.

Mr. Patton spoke in support of the appeal.

Mr. Wise followed on the same side.

The chair having decided that the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. Wise) were out of order.

At length the decision of chair was affirmed—143 to 40.

Mr. Patton asked if he could withdraw the resolutions.

The chair replied that he supposed the gentleman might withdraw them.

Mr. Patton. I do withdraw them then.

But Mr. Mason having suggested a different course, and objections to a withdrawal being made.

The chair then stated that he was compelled to say that the resolutions could not be withdrawn without leave of the house. He had not anticipated that there would be any objection.

The house adjourned, on the motion of Mr. Briggs.

Tuesday, March 1. The clerk proceeded to read the journal of yesterday.

Mr. Peyton rose and questioned the correctness of that portion of the journal which recorded the motion of the gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. Mason), that his colleague (Mr. Wise) who had been called to order, be permitted to proceed. Mr. P. stated that the motion was, according to his understanding, that the gentleman from Virginia be permitted to proceed in order, and he moved that the journal be amended accordingly.

After some conversation,

Mr. J. Y. Mason explained that his motion was that his colleague "have leave to proceed," at the same time explaining, in reply to the question of a member near him, that if the gentleman was permitted to proceed, he must proceed subject to the rules of order.

Mr. Peyton withdrew the motion, and moved that the words in the journal be so corrected as to read that the "member from Virginia have leave to proceed," striking out the additional words recorded, "in his speech."

After some words from Messrs. Parker, Adams and Mann, N. Y.

Mr. J. Y. Mason stated that he had no recollection of adding the words, "in his speech."

The motion to strike out those words was then agreed to.

Mr. Briggs moved to suspend the rules of the house, in order to proceed in the call of petitions, commencing with Virginia, and excluding the consideration of the motion relating to the letter of the governor of Virginia, presented yesterday; which motion was agreed to.

Certain abolition proceedings being disposed of—petitions were presented, beginning with Virginia; and a large number of them, with a large quantity of resolutions, were presented—chiefly relating to local or personal matters.

Wednesday, March 2. Mr. Denny, with the consent of the house moved to print 5,000 extra copies of the letter of the secretary of the treasury, transmitting the report of the Franklin Institute, on the subject of the explosion of steam boilers, &c.

On motion of Mr. Williams of N. C. the further consideration of the subject was postponed until to-morrow, by a vote of 70 to 64.

The house resumed the consideration of the report of the committee on elections, on the subject of the North Carolina contested election, as the unfinished business on Saturday last.

Mr. Hard moved that the petitioner Mr. Newland be admitted to a seat within the bar of the house, and be permitted to address the house in his own behalf, upon the subject before it, if he chooses to do so.

Mr. Bynum moved to amend the motion so as to provide that the petitioner have leave to be heard by himself and counsel on the main question.

Mr. Thomas, of Maryland, moved that the rules of the house be suspended for the purpose of making a report, accompanied by a bill, from the committee on the territories, in relation to the controversy between Michigan and Ohio; which motion was agreed to.

Mr. Thomas reported a bill to establish the northern boundary line of the state of Ohio, and to admit the territory of Michigan in the union on certain conditions.

The bill and report were ordered to be printed.

An unsuccessful attempt was made by Mr. Cambreleng to get up the bill for the relief of the city of New York.

The house then, in pursuance of the special order of the day, proceeded, in committee of the whole on the state of the union, (Mr. Miller in the chair) to consider the bill making appropriations for the naval service of the United States for the year 1836.

The question being on the motion of Mr. Bell to reduce the appropriation for the navy yard at Portsmouth from $67,000 to $35,500.

Mr. Thompson, of S. C. took the floor, and spoke at great length in opposition to some of the features of the bill, and to the system of expenditure adopted by the government, in relation to all measures for the national defence, both on the coast and in the interior.

At half past 4 o'clock Mr. Thompson, without concluding, gave way to a motion for the committee to rise.

The committee then rose, and the house adjourned.

Thursday, March 3. Mr. Cambreleng moved that the committee of the whole on the state of the union be discharged from the further consideration of the "bill to authorise the secretary of the treasury to act as the agent of the United States in all matters relative to their stock in the bank of the United States;" which motion was agreed to.

The bill was then taken up for consideration, and, on motion of Mr. Cambreleng, verbally amended, and then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and subsequently read a third time and passed.

Mr. Patton, from the committee on the territories, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That the fourth Thursday and Friday of the present month be set apart for the consideration of bills relative to the territories of the United States."

Mr. Bell moved to amend the resolution, by adding to it the following words: "Provided that before that time the several appropriation bills shall be disposed of by the house."

The motion to amend was agreed to, and the resolution was rejected.

Mr. Thomas, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That the bill to establish the northern boundary line of the state of Ohio, and to provide for the admission of Michigan into the union, on certain conditions, be made the special order of the day for the 15th of the present month.

Mr. Bell moved to amend, by adding thereto the following: "Provided that the several appropriation bills shall have been previously disposed of by the house." Which was agreed to.

The question being on the adoption of the resolution as amended, Mr. Thomas asked for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The question being taken, it was decided in the negative; yeas 74, nays 121.

Mr. Jarvis, from the committee on naval affairs offered the following, which lies over one day—

Resolved, That the secretary of the navy be directed to cause a course of experiments to be instituted, for the purpose of ascertaining the efficiency of testing the safety of the medium or light guns of the navy, and of comparing their effect with the guns for which they were proposed to be substituted.

After a great deal of other business,

On motion of Mr. Cambreleng, the house resolved itself into a committee of the whole on the state of the union, (Mr. Miller in the chair).

The consideration of the bill making appropriations for the naval service of the United States for the year 1836, was resumed by the committee.

Which bill was further debated, and then laid aside.

On motion of Mr. Mason, of Virginia, the committee took up the bill to carry into effect the convention with Spain.

Mr. Mason, by order of the committee on foreign affairs, moved a substitute for the above bill, the object of which motion he explained.

After some remarks from Mr. J. Q. Adams, expressing his preference of the substitute to the original bill,

Mr. Cushing said that he desired to avail himself of this occasion to express his strong sense of the justice and honor exhibited by the government of Spain in the treaty of which this bill was the consummation. In the midst of national calamities, which she met with, her characteristic fortitude, with a deadly civil war raging in her bosom, and weighed down by financial embarrassments, Spain has acknowledged and satisfied the claims of our citizens in a spirit of manly promptitude and frankness strikingly contrasted with the conduct of some other European powers in a similar matter. This procedure on the part of that gallant and high-minded nation did honor to the liberal policy which actuated her present rulers; and, united, as Spain and the United States are, by the ties of a close intercourse reciprocally beneficial to both, he felt that it was the duty of the American congress, in passing this bill, to bear emphatic testimony to the integrity and dignified sentiment of self-respect manifested in this affair by the queen regent of Spain.

The amendment was then agreed to.

THE WAR IN FLORIDA.

The following letter was transmitted a few days ago from the war department to the speaker of the house of representatives, in reply to a resolution of that body:

War department, Feb. 18, 1836.

Sir: In obedience to a resolution of the house of representatives of the 13th instant, I have the honor to report, that major general Scott has proceeded to the theatre of hostilities in Florida, with full authority to call into the field such a force as may be necessary to subdue the Seminole Indians, and also with instructions to inquire into the situation of the Creeks, and to take all proper measures to prevent or suppress any hostilities meditated or committed by them. The latest accounts from the Creek country justify the belief that the great body of the Indians of that tribe have no intentions of committing outrages upon our citizens, though it is probable that some of the young men may have joined the Seminoles. But of this fact the department has no authentic evidence.

If the operations in Florida did not require the presence of all the disposable troops of the United States which can readily be concentrated in that quarter, I should certainly think it proper, under existing circumstances, to station a respectable force in the Creek country as long as the excitement among the Indians continues. But this cannot be done for the want of means; and as general Scott has power to call for any militia force that he may deem necessary, and as he is near the Creek country, and can judge correctly of their intentions, it seems more proper to permit him to adopt the requisite measures than to act upon the subject here.

I am not aware that any further legislation, in connexion with this subject, is necessary, except what may relate to the increase of the numerical strength of the army, or to the removal of the Creek Indians. The question of an increase of the army has been already presented to the department by the committee on military affairs, and a report will be transmitted as soon as all the necessary information can be obtained. The removal of the Creeks I consider a measure of indispensable necessity. But there are already existing appropriations, providing the necessary funds for the present, and others will be asked for of congress as soon as it is ascertained they will be needed. Arrangements are, and for some time have been, in progress for the removal of the Creeks. These have not been as successful in their operation as was desirable. Should, however, these Indians continue much longer to decline removing, and to disturb the tranquillity of the country where they are situated, a just regard to their own existence, as well as to the peace of our citizens, will require the adoption of more energetic measures, and perhaps the application of other principles to their condition. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

LEWIS CASS.

Hon. James K. Polk, speaker of the house of rep.

From the Georgia Courier.

Augusta, Feb. 19.

Our anxiety is entirely relieved by the return of Mr. Forrest, (the volunteer who was accidentally shot through the foot), who informs us that capt. Bone's company and other volunteers, and about fifty United States troops, accompanied the blues on their march to camp Kings, in all, about 250 men. They may have a fight, what, we presume, the boys are looking for, but we will answer for it they will be hard to whip.

We ventured in our last to express our fear that the Seminole trouble could not be soon ended. The nature of the country is an insuperable obstacle; and in two or three months more, in which time it is possible for the Indians to prevent our seeing a single individual of them, the climate must drive every white man from the country, or bury him beneath its soil. In conformity with these views, we have the opinion of a Floridian of high standing and intelligence, and who will command a regiment of militia in the service, who thus writes:

"You may wish my opinion as to the continuation of the war. I am of the opinion, if the Indians are disposed to continue their defence, that they can continue it for years. The situation of the country, the facilities it affords for their concealment, the easy acquisition of game, fish and arrow root, will enable them to avoid us for years, and yet live without making a crop of any kind. I am of the opinion, too, that the alarm created is not warranted by the number or activity of the Indians, and that most of the difficulties which have existed have grown out of the want of a prudent forecast in our rulers. I am also of the opinion that the Indians will not again meet the whites in general fight, but will separate into small bands, and operate in predatory excursions, and that, therefore, it will be rather an Indian hunt than settled warfare."

THE SUPREME COURT.

From the National Intelligencer.

The judges of the supreme court adjourned their session on Friday last. It is the shortest session which we remember. We have been furnished, however, with an account of the causes heard and decided, which shows that, however short, it has proved efficient for the despatch of judicial business. The whole number of causes on the docket was one hundred and seven. The docket was gone through with three several times, according to the rules of the court, and every cause was heard which was ready for argument. Every cause argued was decided. Forty-six written opinions were delivered by the court, besides several oral judgments. The whole number of causes finally disposed of was sixty-five. Of the continued causes, twenty-five are suits of the Commonwealth bank of Kentucky, in which the sole question is supposed to be whether that institution was constitutionally created. One decision, of course, will settle all these cases. Three others of the continued causes involve constitutional questions, two of which have been ordered for a second argument: these cases involving constitutional questions, were postponed for a full court.

Mr. Justice Story, as senior justice, presided during the term; and we have heard from members of the bar and others ample commendation of the ability and urbanity with which he discharged the duties of his situation. The central chair, so long filled by the illustrious chief justice Marshall, stood vacant during the session. The effect of this appeared to us to be striking. Accustomed, for more than thirty years, to see his venerable form in the midst of his judicial associates, we could not behold his seat vacant, from the beginning to the end of the term, without the recurrence of sober and solemn feeling.

Our readers will remember that a bill has passed the senate, we believe nearly unanimously, for the re-organization of the judicial system, so far as is necessary, in order to extend the circuit courts to all the states in the union. The western states have long and earnestly insisted on this extension, and we sincerely hope that what seems so just and equal may be accomplished. More than all, however, our desires and prayers are fervent, that the character, usefulness and dignity of this high tribunal may long be preserved.

OFFICIAL.

Circular to receivers of public moneys, collectors, disbursing officers, and the deposit banks of the United States.

The established policy of the treasury department, so far as may be practicable, under its present powers over the collection, keeping and disbursement of the public money, is to diminish the circulation of small bank notes, and to substitute specie, and especially gold, for such notes, with the view of rendering the currency of the country, through which its fiscal operations are performed, more safe, sound and uniform. In pursuance of that policy, a circular was issued last April, which prohibited, after the 30th September, 1835, the receipt, on account of the government, of any bank notes of a less denomination than five dollars; and which intimated that other steps to promote the desirable objects before named, would, in due time, be taken.

Consequently, in further pursuance of the same policy, you are hereby required, after the 1st of May next, not to pay the demands of any public officer or creditor in any bank notes of a less denomination than five dollars; and, except when it may be otherwise prescribed by law, after the 4th of July next, not to receive or pay on account of the government, any bank notes of a less denomination than ten dollars.

All the deposit banks are requested to supply themselves with such a quantity of American gold coin as to be able to pay, and which a public officer or creditor prefers it, and his demand does not exceed five hundred dollars, to pay at least one-fifth of such demand in that coin. It is also requested that the deposit banks will not, after the 4th of July next, issue any notes of a less denomination than five dollars; and that after the 3d of March, 1837, they will not, unless the subject be otherwise regulated by congress, issue any notes of a less denomination than ten dollars. It is believed that the amount of gold which by that time shall be coined at the mint, will be sufficient to admit of the convenient substitution of it for small notes, in a much greater extent than at present; and it is deemed reasonable, that while the deposit banks have the use, without interest, of unusually large sums of the public money, they should make some further temporary sacrifices to obtain and circulate gold, and in other respects to enlarge the specie basis of our circulating medium. From these considerations, and from the liberal spirit evinced by most of the public depositories in a late correspondence with them on this subject, it is confidently expected that, in this state of things, they will cheerfully comply with the above requests, and with all others which have been made by the department, with a view of improving the currency, nor will it, I trust, be considered unjust or impolitic, while the deposit banks shall continue to enjoy great privileges from the treasury, to regard a neglect or refusal by any of them to comply with those requests, as sufficient cause for discontinuing the employment of such banks as a fiscal agent.

At a proper time it will be decided, under what circumstances and at what periods, these restrictions on the agents and officers of the treasury, shall be extended to notes of any denomination under twenty dollars.

This communication is made with the sanction of the president of the United States, and it is hoped that, till otherwise prescribed by congress, or by this department, these requirements and requests will be faithfully complied with by all the fiscal agents of this department, and all the collecting and disbursing officers of the government.

Treasury department, 22d Feb. 1836.

VIRGINIA LEGISLATURE.

House of delegates, Tuesday February 23, 1836.

The following message was received from the governor of the commonwealth:

To the house of delegates:

I have just received a paper containing the preamble and resolutions adopted by the general assembly on the subject of expunging from the journal of the senate of the United States a resolution of that body.

By the last of the resolutions contained in this paper, I am requested to perform two several acts. I am desired to transmit these resolutions to each of the senators from Virginia, in the congress of the U. States, and also to accompany this communication with a request to the senators, on my part, that they would lay the same before the body of which they are members.

Neither of the acts I am thus requested to perform, is embraced within the sphere of any duty assigned to the governor of this commonwealth, either by its constitution or laws; but as neither is thereby prohibited to him, I should not have hesitated to comply with the requests of the general assembly, if, in doing so, I was not obliged to add my approbation to their resolves, and to unite my solicitations to their commands.—Such a conclusion, however, is inevitable; for the terms employed in the resolutions, as well as the very nature of one of the acts I am thereby requested to perform, announce plainly, that both these acts are considered by the general assembly as merely voluntary, on my part, to the performance of which acts, I am not compelled by the obligations of my legal duties. Therefore, it would be impossible for me to avoid the conclusions I have stated, should I comply with these requests. Even an addition to the communication I am requested to make, of such a disclaimer as might suffice to acquit me of this imputation, would be in direct conflict with the expressed wishes of the general assembly, and therefore would not comport, as I think with that respectful consideration which is due to that body, especially by every other department of this government.

Placed thus, in a situation where my voluntary compliance with the wishes of the general assembly must expose me to an imputation that injustice to myself, I ought to disclaim; and should I do so, being constrained to depart from the course which my respect for them would induce me to adopt; no alternative is left but for me to decline a compliance with their request. This I beg leave to do in the most respectful manner; and I hasten to communicate to them this, my determination, to the end that if the general assembly think it proper, the task which I have been requested to perform, may be promptly assigned to some other agent, whose situation or opinions, in this respect, may be different from mine.

No ordinary circumstances would justify me, even to myself, in declining to co-operate with the general assembly, by the performance of any act on my part, that they might think useful to give effect to their wishes; and in that mode which to them might seem most proper. But I should be justly regarded by all, as unworthy of the high trust confided in me, if I were capable of permitting any consideration whatever, even my sincere wish to comply with the requests of the general assembly, to cause me to disregard my most sacred obligations. And, as I cannot consider the resolutions I am requested to transmit, otherwise than as requiring a palpable violation of the constitution of the United States, I should incur guilt, from which not even the approving voice of the present general assembly would suffice to absolve me, were I to lend my aid knowingly in any way to give effect to such a purpose. Greatly indeed would this guilt be magnified, if while entertaining these opinions, I should dare request others to incur such criminality.

I may be mistaken in these opinions, but they are approved by my most deliberate judgment, and, while so approved, it is my duty to act in conformity with them. Should I not do so, I should offend against my own conscience; and as by this I should justly merit the scorn and contempt of my fellow citizens, I presume I should also incur that of the general assembly itself.

The courtesy and respect due to a co-ordinate department of the government, restrains me from stating here, the various considerations which have induced me to entertain the opinion I have expressed, that the resolutions I am requested to transmit, require a palpable violation of the constitution of the U. States. The same motives induce me to abstain from characterizing the act I am requested to perform, in soliciting honorable and high-minded functionaries of Virginia to do that which, if it is their duty to do, they will surely perform without any officious request from me; and, if it is contrary to their duty, none ought to desire of them to perform it, especially one who cannot claim authority of any kind to determine such a question for them.

The adoption of these resolutions, must be considered by all as sufficient evidence that they who have sanctioned them by their approving votes think differently from me in these particulars. This their opinion has now passed into an irreversible judgment. Therefore it would ill become me to address an argument to the body itself, which has so decided, to show that this its solemn and recorded and promulgated judgment was erroneous. It was necessary for my own justification, to state the fact, that I did not concur in this judgment, but to do more than this would be as improper as it would be now useless. Hence, I am restrained from presenting my own views of this subject to the general assembly, for the sincerity of whose expressed opinions I entertain the same respect that I claim for my own.

But, if it should please the general assembly, either in kindness to me, or in justice to the people of Virginia, our common sovereign, to permit me to spread upon their journals a document, respectful to those to whom it will be addressed, and dutiful to that sovereign to which only our allegiance is due, I should be gratified by such a permission, and I will gladly avail myself of it, to state in that way, the various considerations which have induced me to dissent from the opinions of the general assembly, as set forth in the resolutions. Without such permission, however, not even my own vindication can tempt me to be guilty of what I should consider as indecorous to any co-ordinate department of the government of my country, by which department I am addressed in terms of such courtesy as it has pleased the general assembly to employ in these resolutions towards me.

(Signed)

LITTON W. TAZEWELL.

Executive department, Richmond, Feb. 22.

The message having been read,

Mr. Watkins moved the following preamble and resolution, which, after some debate, were agreed to:

Whereas a "preamble and resolutions upon the subject of expunging from the journal of the senate of the United States a resolution of that body, and relative to the right of instruction," were passed by this general assembly on the 20th day of the present month, (February, 1836), and by one of the said resolutions, the governor of this commonwealth was requested to transmit the same "to each of the senators from Virginia in the congress of the United States, with a request that they lay the same before the senate," and whereas, the governor of this commonwealth has refused to transmit the aforesaid preamble and resolutions, in pursuance of the request aforesaid, and contrary to the usage of the executive of this state: Therefore,

Resolved by the general assembly of Virginia, That the speakers of the senate and house of delegates be, and they are hereby requested forthwith to transmit the aforesaid preamble and resolutions to each of the senators from Virginia in the congress of the United States.

Before adopting these resolutions,

A protracted conversation ensued, in which Messrs. Watkins, Madison, Woolfolk, Fontaine and Wilson of Bot. of the majority, and Messrs. Stanard, Parker, Witcher, Gilmer, Botts, Powell and Brown of Pet. on the part of the minority took part, on the point whether the governor's course was a departure from usage or not. The minority contended that although the usage was for the executive to transmit—yet in this case, a new feature was added, the governor being requested to request the senators, &c. They alleged that no precedent could be shown when a former governor had been put under this requisition, quoted precedents showing the contrary, and argued that therefore Mr. Tazewell's refusal was not against usage. Mr. Witcher added, that no governor before had been required to transmit instructions which he believed unconstitutional, and that this was the first case of the kind in which a legislature and governor had disagreed. The majority alleged precedent, without going into distinctions.

Mr. Parker moved to strike out the words "against usage," Mr. Watkins assented, but finally voted against the motion. Mr. Fontaine alone of the expunging majority we believe, voted for it.

Mr. Watkins' preamble and resolution were finally adopted, and the speakers made the organs of transmission.

PROCEEDS OF LAND SALES.

In senate, January 27.

Mr. Ewing, of Ohio, made the following report:

The committee on public lands, to whom was referred a bill to appropriate, for a limited time, the proceeds of the sales of the public lands of the United States, and for granting lands to certain states, report:

That they look upon the leading measure proposed by the bill as one of great national importance. The gradual operation of a system, devised in the early history of our government, for the support of the public credit, and for reducing the public debt, has, within a short time past, produced its full and final effect. The public debt is discharged, and existing commercial regulations, which the condition of our country renders indispensable, together with the sales of the public lands, bring yearly a large surplus fund into the treasury. This fund which is no longer taken up in the payment of a national debt, and which still remains unappropriated, has already arisen to the amount of about twenty-four millions of dollars; and as it does not arise from transient causes, it goes on increasing, and must continue to increase. This state of things is not at all desirable. Its natural tendency is to produce extravagance in the appropriation and wastefulness in the expenditure of public money. Indeed, it seems to be conceded by all that this large surplus ought not to remain and accumulate in the public treasury; and it has been suggested, as means of lessening the amount, and preventing a future accumulation—

First. The reduction of the customs;

Second. Increased expenditures in the navy and fortifications;

Third. A reduction of the price of public lands, and the surrender of large portions of them to the states in which they lie; and,

Lastly. This bill, which proposes to distribute the proceeds of the public lands among the several states, leaving the receipts from customs to defray the ordinary expenses of government in time of peace.

The first named measure—a reduction of the customs—cannot be resorted to without awakening feelings dangerous to the peace and harmony of the country. The tariff law now in force is the result of a compromise of the opinions of the citizens of different sections of the union, and ought not to be disturbed, unless a strong political necessity call for its modification. Under this law, or, indeed, any law, keeping up such duties as are necessary for the proper regulation of commerce, it is believed that the customs will produce a revenue at least equal to the ordinary wants of the government. The surplus, therefore, cannot be reduced by lessening the amount of the customs.

The next measure proposed is a large increase of appropriations upon our fortifications and navy, so as to absorb the surplus revenue, and at the same time put the country in an attitude of defence in the event of a foreign war. Such increased appropriation, to some extent, is, in the opinion of your committee, necessary and proper. There ought to be dealt out with a liberal hand all that can be well applied to render the seaboard safe from foreign aggression; but the amount asked by the executive for both these purposes does not, with the other current expenses of government, exceed the probable receipts from customs for the ensuing year, if the country be not involved in war. And is it not, in the opinion of your committee, proper that an expenditure should be made in the construction of fortifications or naval armaments for the purpose of exhausting the surplus revenue. If it be, the expenditure of money is made at once the primary object, and the improvement of the national defenses but subordinate or auxiliary thereto. This would be true in fact, as well as in form. If much money were expended, it would necessarily be applied to little purpose. We might on a sudden emergency, in a short time, by large expenditure, prepare fortifications which would serve the purpose of a temporary defence; but all those substantial works which are to stand as our future and permanent fortresses require time, a selection of materials, and skilful engineers, which it is not in our power to supply much beyond what is necessary in expending judiciously and skilfully our ordinary appropriations. So also, with respect to the navy.

But to this project there is another and a serious objection. The expenditures in support of the government are, much the larger portion of them, upon our seacoast, and in our great commercial cities. This proposed extraordinary expenditure would very much increase that amount, and draw to the seacoast other large sums of money which ought properly to have a general distribution over the whole United States. Nor could we expect such a system, if once adopted, to cease, or even to diminish, for ages. No nation was yet ever known voluntarily to lessen its expenditures. If we commence a system of fortifications for the purpose of expending money chiefly, and put in a secondary degree only for defences, there will be no limit or end to the means it will furnish us of exhausting our national resources. Hundreds of millions may be expended with a tolerable show of public necessity or convenience, when it is not, on the other hand, deemed necessary to guard and to save the public treasure. It appears clear to your committee, therefore, that an amount of money large enough to exhaust the surplus revenue could not, at present, be expended in this manner advantageously to the country.

The reducing of the price of the public lands, and ceding them to the states in which they lie, is another mode proposed to lessen the receipts in the treasury, and thus prevent the influx of a surplus revenue.

Propositions such as these were referred to the committee on manufactures at the first session of the twenty-second congress, and on the 16th of April, 1832, they presented a detailed report to the senate, in the general views and reasoning of which your committee concur; and they herewith present the same, and make it a part of their report. That paper, in the opinion of your committee, demonstrates the injustice and impolicy of such a disposition of the national domain; and subsequent experience has confirmed their reasoning.

But other similar propositions, varying from those considered in that report, in some of their features, have been referred to your committee. Among these, are

A proposition to graduate the price of the public lands according to quality; and

To grant the lands to the states in which they lie, after they shall have been offered for sale for a given time.

To each of these your committee have given a careful consideration.

These propositions appear to be suggested for the benefit of the states in which the public lands are situated, for it is easy to prove that the interests of the United States, as the great landed proprietor, would not be subserved by either of them. The graduation of the price of the public lands is in no wise necessary or expedient, as a measure to effect their sale. Lands which have been long in market become surrounded by settlements. If they be hilly, they become valuable for their timber and stone, and other mineral productions. If swampy, or barren, they form a convenient appendage to neighboring farms for pasturage; and if not worth entering at the minimum price for any of these purposes, the public suffers no loss in permitting them to remain open and unappropriated.

Experience has fully shown that the rise in the value of the public lands increases in proportion to the time that it is in market, or rather to the number of the sales and density of the settlement near and around it. This fact is strongly illustrated by a reference to the sales of the public lands at the several land offices for a series of years. By this it will be seen that a larger per centum of the lands actually in market at private sale has generally sold at the old than at the new offices, and that per centum has generally increased in proportion to the time the lands have been in market. It is a remarkable fact, bearing upon this proposition, that in no state or territory have the sales of public lands at private sale been so great in proportion to the quantity in market within the last five years, as in Ohio, in which state the public lands have been longest exposed to sale.

Your committee are also of opinion that such graduation or reduction in the price of the public lands would operate to the injury, and not the benefit of the section of country in which such lands lie. If the amount of public land, the price of which was thus reduced, be great, its first and immediate effect would be to reduce the value of all the lands in its vicinity pro rata with the reduction of the public lands. To those who were full handed, and able to make large purchases, it might open a fine field for speculation and profitable investment of capital; and if the price were reduced low, so as to make it an object with the capitalist, the public lands would be purchased up at once, on speculation, and retailed at an advanced price. It would thus cause a fluctuation in the value of land, a fall and a rise in its price, which is ever favorable to the sharp-sighted and sagacious speculator, but inimical to the interests of the agricultural portion of the community. Your committee therefore think that no interest which ought to be cherished and protected by the government requires the graduation of the price of the public lands.

The proposition to cede the public lands to the states in which they lie, after they shall have been offered for sale a given number of years, is liable to many and serious objections. This project is, no doubt, well calculated to meet with favor in those states in which there is yet much public land unsold, as it holds out to them an apparent prospect of a vast accession to their resources. But it is, in the opinion of your committee, entirely delusive. The several states which form parties to the national compact have all an equal right to, and an equal interest in, the national domain, and such an application of it to the use of some of the states, which is not just to all, cannot be expected to meet with general favor.

Such a disposition of the public lands would be, indeed, a violation of a solemn contract which was adopted by, and made binding under, the constitution of the United States. The deed of cession of Virginia, by virtue of which we hold by far the largest and most valuable portion of our territory east of the Mississippi river, contains a clause, common to all the cessions of the several states, which provides that, after certain reservations shall have been made, and certain bounties satisfied, the lands so ceded "shall be considered a common fund, for the use and benefit of all of the United States, members of the federal alliance;" "and shall be faithfully and bona fide disposed of for that purpose, and for no other use or purpose whatsoever." This deed of cession was made by Virginia and accepted by congress prior to the adoption of the constitution. It therefore became and was a compact before the adoption of the constitution, and is referred to and made binding by the first section of the fifth article of that instrument. It is, in the opinion of your committee, too clear to require an argument, that the giving of all the residue of these lands to the states in which they lie, after they shall have been offered for sale for a period of years, will not, if any lands of value remain unsold, be disposing of them bona fide, for the benefit of all the states, according to the requisition of this solemn compact. The principle on which grants of land have been made to the several states in which the public lands lie, for public works of any kind, is, that the United States being a large landholder, have, in the management of that property, a right to do what any other landholder, who consulted his own interest, would do—appropriate a portion of his lands, or their proceeds, to open roads and canals, and to construct public works in their neighborhood, so as to enhance their value, or bring them sooner to a market. But this proposed gift or cession of the residue of the lands, after they shall have been in market five or ten years, cannot be sustained on that ground. A gift or conveyance of a part, on condition that it be so applied as to make the residue more valuable than the whole would otherwise have been, is a bona fide disposition of such part of the fund for the use of all those who are entitled to share in it; but, if we give away the whole residue at any time, when that residue possesses value, we as certainly misapply the fund and abuse the trust; for, in that state of things, nothing remains to be enhanced in value, and the gift is to one state or to a few states, whereas the trust is for all, and congress is required to dispose of the land bona fide for the benefit of all.

But, if congress had the right to give the residue of the lands, after they should have been offered for sale five or ten years and still remain unsold, to the states in which they lie, such a disposition of them would be unequal among themselves, and therefore unjust. It would not give them lands in proportion to the population of each, or to the amount that each, or the citizens of each, had paid for lands into the public treasury. The state of Ohio would receive, on this proposition, certainly less than four millions of acres, (the amount depending upon the time the land should be in market before it be surrendered) that is, about four acres to each individual in the state, while the public lands in the state of Ohio have brought into the treasury about seventeen millions of dollars, besides satisfying to a large amount the debts of the government.

Missouri, upon a like mode of distribution or surrender, would have not less than twenty-five millions of acres, or about one hundred and sixty acres to each individual, black and white, according to the census of 1830. Thus, one inhabitant of Missouri would receive a quantity of land equal to what would be received by forty inhabitants of Ohio; and, while the lands in Ohio have brought seventeen millions into the public treasury, the lands in Missouri have brought in less than four millions. This disparity, therefore, would be very unjust to Ohio, but still more so to the other states of the union having equal rights, and which, on this principle of surrender, would receive nothing. It cannot, therefore, be expected by any one, however strongly solicitous he may feel for the advancement of the new states, that such a measure will be adopted. Something more equal and more just must be thought of by those who wish to promote their interests and add to their prosperity.

There are other measures proposed, which, if adopted, would affect, more or less, the interest of the United States in the public land, by lessening its general value, and rendering its management more complicated and difficult. One of the first, and not the least important of these, is the law granting pre-emptions to actual settlers, and which was first passed on the 29th day of May, 1830, and which, with some modification, is still in force. The intent of this law was that of kindness and benevolence. It was enacted for the benefit of the poorer class of citizens, who, having pushed forward beyond the lands offered for sale, settled and improved the public lands, and made themselves a home, with some comforts around them, and had become able, by their industry, to pay for these lands at the minimum price. It seemed hard that these pioneers, who had thus improved the lands by their labor, should be compelled to enter into competition with new adventurers at the sales, and thus pay for improvements which they themselves had made. Such appear to have been the reasons for the enactment of these laws. They provided that, when two individuals cultivated one quarter-section of land, each should be entitled to the pre-emption of half the tract so jointly cultivated, and each, also, to a pre-emption of eighty acres any where in the same land district; and, by a supplementary law, the claims were made assignable.

Your committee have satisfactory information that these laws have been the cause of frauds and perjuries, to an amount and number almost incredible. Thousands of pre-emptions have been proved under them, and certificates granted, when the whole case was without the least shadow of foundation. In other cases, the cutting down of a single tree, the marking it with a hatchet, or encamping for the night, has been made the ground of pre-emption claims. In most of the last named cases, two individuals would together cut down their sapling, or tie each his horse upon the same quarter-section of land; this, with the oath founded upon it, which appears to be always according to form, would get for each of the individuals a certificate or warrant, now familiarly called "a float," which they might lay on any of the lands of the United States which was surveyed, and not offered for sale; thus taking, at the minimum price of $1 25 per acre, lands worth, in many instances, more than twenty times that sum. Large companies, it is believed, have been formed, who procure affidavits of improvements to be made, get the warrants issued upon them, and, whenever a good tract of land is ready for sale, cover it over with their floats, and thus put down competition. The frauds upon the public within the past year, from this single source, have arisen to many millions of dollars.

Your committee believe that a great error was committed by the passage of these laws, and that no amendment or modification will guard against the mischiefs which they have heretofore produced. Claims of this kind cannot, in the very nature of things, be subjected to judicial investigation: or, if they were, the means of eliciting truth, the confronting of witness against witness by parties who are stimulated on both sides to the utmost to rebut and repel, cannot be brought to bear upon the examination of these claims. Hence a few individuals, whose evidence can be purchased with a price, and who can appear under different names at pleasure, may, under the auspices of these laws, divert millions of money from the public treasury into the coffers of their employers.

The system early adopted for the disposition of the public lands of the United States is admirable, and, in the opinion of your committee, ought not to be broken in upon or departed from. The pre-emption laws have, more than any other cause, tended to unsettle and derange them, and they have thrown upon the general land office a mass of labor, most unpleasant in its character, and difficult to be performed. The good which they do bears no comparison to the evil; for every dollar which the poorer settlers save by them, hundreds are lost by the government, and fraud, and perjury, and unlawful combination and lawless violence, to put down competition at public sales, have arisen out of their provisions. In the opinion of your committee, they ought to cease.

There are also connected in some measure, with this subject, several bills and memorials referred to your committee, proposing or praying for grants of land for seminaries of learning, for public education, or to aid in constructing works of internal improvement. These are all meritorious objects, and your committee are disposed to give the most favorable consideration. But there are many difficulties attending the action of congress on these special subjects. The very great extent of our country, the general feeling that all parts of it have equal rights to the munificence of congress, the impossibility of determining which, among many institutions in the same state, ought to have such bounty as congress might be disposed to bestow on objects of this kind, all lead to the conclusion that it were better to put it in the power of the several states to confer these bounties, and select the most worthy objects, than to attempt here to perform that office.

The rapidity with which the public lands now sell, the ease with which they are converted into money, the abundance of money now in the treasury, and the moral certainty that there will be, for a long time, enough, and more than enough, to meet the current expenses of the government, have impressed strongly upon your committee the opinion that it is impolitic and inexpedient to make a donation of land for any object, where a donation of money may be as lawfully made, and will effect the same end. These donations or transfers of land are liable to the objection that they tend more or less to confuse and complicate the land system. They all add something to the duties of the officers of the United States who have charge of the public lands, and they serve to embarrass the purchaser, who has not, as he would without them have, one set, and one only, of land offices to whom he is to resort for the entry of lands. There is another objection. Though it be the fact that a donation of land by law is equivalent to a donation of money, yet we do not always feel it exactly so. There is a natural tendency to consider it more highly than it deserves, and to treat it too highly in legislation.

Your committee, on the whole believe that it is better, if congress have the constitutional power, to distribute among the several states, according to their respective rights, the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, allowing the states to use it for any or all of the purposes set forth and recommended in these bills and memorials; but that the lands themselves should not be assigned over, given away, or granted by congress; that the ancient system of sales should be carefully preserved, and that all the deviations from it, which have caused much waste and confusion, should, as soon as possible, be corrected, and the former order of things fully restored.

The question of constitutional power has occupied the careful and sedulous attention of the committee; and they here present to the senate the course of reasoning on that subject which they consider sound and just, and which has led them to the conclusion that congress possesses the power to distribute the proceeds of the public lands according to the principles of this bill.

At the time the deed of cession from Virginia was made and accepted, the union was held together by the articles of confederation of 1778, which, in its 8th article, provides "that all charges of war and other expenses that shall be incurred for the common defence, or general welfare, and allowed by the United States in congress assembled, shall be defrayed out of a common treasury, which shall be supplied by the several states."

The mode of determining the proportion which each of the states shall bear of the public charges, is particularly pointed out, and it is there provided that "the taxes for paying that proportion shall be laid and levied by the authority and direction of the several states." To this state of things, existing at the time of the delivery of the Virginia deed of cession, its provisions must necessarily apply. It was to a confederacy of independent states, who kept up a common treasury out of contributions from each of its several members, according to a determinate regulation, that this deed was made; and after making certain reservations specially set forth, it declares the trust in the following distinct and unequivocal terms: "That all the lands within the territory so ceded to the United States, and not reserved for, or appropriated to, any of the before-mentioned purposes, or disposed of in bounties to the officers and soldiers of the American army, shall be considered as a common fund for the use and benefit of such of the United States as have become, or shall become, members of the confederation; Virginia inclusive, according to their usual respective proportions in the general charge and expenditure, and shall be faithfully and bona fide disposed of for that purpose, and for no other use or purpose whatsoever." If, then, we had still continued, down to the present time, a confederation of states, bound together by the articles of 1778, and if, as is now the case, the public debt were discharged, the public expenses borne by revenues from other quarters, and the public land pouring its millions into the treasury, what ought congress, as the trustee of that common fund, do with it? It is a trust fund, placed in the hands of congress "for the use and benefit of the several states," and it is to be disposed of "bona fide" for that purpose, "and for no other use or purpose whatsoever."

So long as there was a public debt to be paid, this fund was well applied for the common benefit in the payment of that debt, as the debt was a common charge upon all, "according to their usual respective proportions in the public expenditures." And so long as it was necessary for the support of government; its application to that purpose was right, for the same reason; but when this state of things has ceased, when the proceeds of the public lands are no longer necessary for either of these purposes, what is it the duty of the trustee to do with it, according to the letter and spirit of the deed of trust? And what, were it a case between individuals, would a court of equity compel him to do? The answer is plain and obvious. He not only might pay it, but he would be bound to pay it over to those for whose benefit he held it. If it were not necessary to disburse it for them, he must restore it to them. This, as between individuals, would be a plain case, and your committee cannot perceive how it is varied when applied between states and nations. If, then, we had remained as we were, members of the old confederation; if the constitution had not intervened, to change in anywise the relations of the states to each other, or to the whole, it would have been not only the right, but the duty of congress, pursuant to the spirit of that deed of cession, to have distributed among the several states the proceeds of the sales of the lands contained within the bounds of that grant. The delivery and acceptance of this deed amounted to a contract, and the above is, according to the opinion of your committee, the just construction of that contract.

But the rights and duties of the United States, as a contracting party, are not at all changed by the adoption of the constitution. The 1st section of the 6th article of that instrument provides "that all debts contracted, and engagements entered into, before the adoption of this constitution, shall be as valid against the United States under this constitution as under the confederation;" so that our rights and our duties, with regard to this trust, are the same precisely that they would have been under the old confederation. All that has been said relative to the deed of cession from Virginia, applies equally to the cessions from the other states, except Georgia, whose deed bears date after the adoption of the federal constitution; but, with this exception, it is in tenor and spirit the same with the deed above considered.

Your committee are hence led to the conclusion that, with respect to the proceeds of all the lands north of the 31st degree of latitude, and east of the Mississippi river, congress not only has the constitutional power to make the proposed distribution, but it is a duty enjoined on them by a contract which is recognized and adopted by the constitution.

As to the land lying within the bounds of the original purchase of Louisiana and Florida, our right so to apply it rests upon less satisfactory grounds. We have no compact concerning it; no constitutional provision, or any agreement recognized by the constitution, which expressly authorised the purchase of this additional territory, or which places the land so purchased in the same situation with that which was originally transferred to congress by the states. But the right to acquire the additional territory is no longer an open question. It has been settled, and, by virtue of its adjustment, we have already received into the union two states, and the prosperity of the whole country has been thereby greatly enhanced. It would seem that, when a large extent of territory was added to that which heretofore belonged to the United States, it ought to be subjected to the same constitutional and legal principles which governed in the disposition and management of the lands which we held at the time of the formation of the constitution. It has been so, strictly, in all things, so far as it related to jurisdiction; it would seem just and reasonable that it should be so as to soil also.

But, in every estimate which has been as yet presented of the costs and the proceeds of the public lands, whether by the secretary of the treasury or by committees of congress, the money paid for Louisiana and Florida has been charged to this fund, and it continues to be so down to the last report of the secretary of the treasury, of the 8th of December, 1835. If this be correct, if the public lands have been made the fund out of which this large purchase has been paid, it is in truth but a conversion of the receipts for land into other lands, which would, as a necessary consequence, follow the same law of distribution which applied to the original subject out of which the payments were made. The fact that other great and important advantages were derived to the union from the purchase of these two territories, does not at all weaken the force of the argument, but leaves it, in this particular instance, precisely as it would have stood if there had been a purchase of land merely out of the funds arising from the sales of lands; and, by the well-known principles of equity, the trust attends the fund, whenever invested.

Your committee have not taken into consideration the question whether congress have power, under the constitution, to distribute a portion of the general revenue among the several states, but have chosen to rest the measure proposed by this bill on its own special grounds.

The expediency of this measure appears from considerations heretofore suggested, nor those alone. The distribution of the proceeds of the public lands among the several states would cause a watchfulness over this branch of the public revenues, which has fallen into confusion by past negligence and inattention. The representatives in congress from the several states would be induced, by the interest which their immediate constituents must feel in the subject, to prevent the waste of the public lands as well as of public money, and to watch over the national domain as a matter in which those to whom they are responsible have a direct and immediate interest.

It would withdraw from the treasury of the United States the surplus revenue without infringing on the constitution, or touching any of its provisions. The money so withdrawn will be, in effect, restored to the pockets of the people, as it will then enable the several states to exempt their citizens from a direct and burdensome taxation, which they now of necessity impose to effect those public improvements which the situation of the whole country demands, and which are requisite to the prosperity and advancement of each particular state. So long as the law may be continued in force, it will be a steady, regular and certain resource for these and like purposes to the several states, nor ought they, or will they, feel that it is a gift gratuitously given and submissively received. If our views of the subject be just, it is, in the present state of the treasury, their own as a matter of equity, not of mere favor; and state pride would not be humbled, or state independence endangered, by receiving it.

By a provision of the constitution of the United States, the several states are denied the right of laying imposts upon commerce—that easy and indirect mode of raising a revenue which is hardly felt by a people. They are, therefore, generally compelled to resort to direct taxes upon land and goods, and in the western states, on land especially, to provide for the wants of government, and to construct such works of internal improvement as their wants and welfare may require; and in some of the states those taxes have borne heavily upon the people. That burden, by the distribution proposed by this bill, would be lightened, and a large annual fund placed in the hands of the several states, which would enable them to extend the benefit of their improvements as fast and as far as the general interests might require.

Your committee entertain no doubt that, if our country continued in a state of peace, and if no unforeseen calamity should visit it and mar its prosperity, the receipts from customs brought down to the lowest standard that existing laws contemplate will still be amply sufficient for all the current expenses of the government, economically administered. The estimates which are sent us from the secretary of the treasury of those probable receipts have not for some time past approached very nearly to accuracy; they, therefore, cannot be received as the basis of an estimate.

The increased population and business of the country, the very force of circumstances, which none can control, pours into the treasury millions upon millions, which its officers were not led to anticipate, and which they hardly seem yet to realize. In the report of the secretary of the treasury of the 8th of December, 1835, he estimates the revenue of the last quarter of that year at $4,950,000. But, in answer to a resolution of the senate of the 5th of the present month, he shows that the actual receipts for the same quarter have in fact amounted to about $11,149,000, exceeding the amount of the estimate by about $6,200,000, while the whole receipts of the year 1835 have exceeded his estimate by about $14,629,000.

Having formed the opinion that it is within the constitutional power of congress to pass this measure; that the finances of the nation will not be too much diminished, or at all deranged by it; and that the general prosperity of the country would be increased by its adoption, your committee have thought it within the range of their duty to estimate, as nearly as may be, from the data within their power, the probable annual amount which will arise from the sales of the public lands, and be subject to distribution, should this bill become a law.

In looking into the future of human affairs, and judging of them from the past, we are constantly liable to error, arising from the difficulty of estimating all the disturbing causes which may intervene to produce a fluctuation in the course and current of events. On this subject, however, there are more stable and constant elements, which go to make up the data of our calculations, than generally enter into financial estimates.

The sales of the public lands rest essentially on the wants of the husbandman, and are limited to a quantity little exceeding those wants. It is true, when the price is much below its actual value, it may become a subject of extensive speculation, but even then the amount of sales resolves itself into the same element, and speculation merely goes in advance of the farmer, who purchases for actual occupation, without increasing the aggregate of sales in a series of years. The principles of population which have developed themselves in the United States in the last forty years will not, probably, change materially in a like period to come, for, within that time, none of those causes which operate as checks upon population can, in the ordinary course of things, have existence here; nor is it probable that the pursuits of the great body of the people will essentially change; for the same causes which have made us an agricultural community are likely to continue, without diminution, so long as the means of subsistence remain, as now, abundant and easy to be procured; and so long as there is a wide public domain parcelled out and ready for sale on moderate terms, placing a home and a freehold in the power of all that have the wish to possess them. The population of our country is, therefore, likely to continue its ratio of increase, and the habits and pursuits of our people to remain the same. Hence the investments in land for the use of the agriculturists will increase in like ratio as heretofore with the increase of our population.

Prior to the year 1800, but little land had been sold by the United States, and there was at that time, of wild and uncultivated land within the bounds of the now states of Maine, Vermont, New York, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Georgia, Tennessee, Kentucky and Ohio, belonging to the states and individuals, a very large quantity, the amount of which cannot be very accurately ascertained, but it is safe to say that it exceeded one hundred millions of acres. This has all, or nearly all, since passed into the hands of actual settlers; and there have been sold and granted, of the lands of the United States within that period, about fifty millions of acres. Thus it appears there have been taken up and converted to the use of the husbandman, within the last thirty-five years, about one hundred and fifty millions of acres of wild land; and in the mean time little or none heretofore cultivated has been abandoned. The population of the United States in 1800 was four millions nearly; at this time it is about fourteen millions five hundred thousand; and as the increase upon four millions has, in thirty-five years, required one hundred and fifty millions of acres of new land, it follows that a like increase upon fourteen millions five hundred thousand will, in a like period, require about five hundred and forty millions of acres, rising from the beginning to the end of the period in a ratio of progression; the average amount being about fifteen millions per year.

From the above data, your committee estimate the average receipts from the sales of the public lands for the next ten years, if the country continue in peace, if the land system be faithfully preserved, and if the sales be guarded from combination and fraud, at an average of something more than ten millions of dollars per annum. There is already in hand, to be divided by the terms of this bill, $20,571,125 75; of this, the several states will be entitled to receive the sums shown by the annexed table, and of the receipts of the next succeeding year, until the next census, in nearly the same proportions:

Your committee report the bill back with amendments, and recommend its passage.

The following tables form a part of the appendix to the report, and, being considered valuable, are here inserted (the first of them having been heretofore published, but worth repeating):

THE BILL.

The following is a copy of the bill introduced into the senate some weeks ago, and which is the subject of the foregoing report:

A bill to appropriate, for a limited time, the proceeds of the sales of the public lands of the United States, and for granting land to certain states.

Be it enacted, &c. That from and after the thirty-first day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-two, there be allowed and paid to each of the states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Alabama, Missouri, Mississippi and Louisiana, over and above what each of the said states is entitled to by the terms of the compacts entered into between them, respectively, upon their admission into the union and the United States, the sum of ten per centum upon the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands which, subsequent to the day aforesaid, shall have been or may be made within the several limits of the said states; which said sum of ten per centum shall be applied to some object or objects of internal improvement or education within the said states, under the direction of their respective legislatures: Provided, That the sum so allowed to the said states, respectively, shall be in no wise affected or diminished on account of any sums which have been heretofore, or shall be hereafter, applied to the construction or continuance of the Cumberland road, but that the disbursements for the said road shall remain, as heretofore, chargeable on the two per centum fund provided for by compacts with several of the said states.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That, after deducting the said per centum, and what, by the compacts aforesaid, has heretofore been allowed to the states aforesaid, the residue of the net proceeds of all the public lands of the United States, wherever situated, which shall have been or may be sold subsequent to the said thirty-first day of December, shall be divided among the twenty-four states of the union, according to their respective federal representative population, as ascertained by the last census, to be applied by the legislatures of the said states to such objects of education, internal improvement, colonization of free persons of color, or reimbursement of any existing debt contracted for internal improvements, as the said legislatures may severally designate and authorise: Provided That nothing herein contained shall be construed to the prejudice of future applications for a reduction of the price of the public lands, or to the prejudice of applications for a transfer of the public lands, on reasonable terms, to the states within which they lie, nor to impair the power of congress to make such future disposition of the public lands, or any part thereof, as it may deem expedient.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the several sums of money received in the treasury, as the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands for the years eighteen hundred and thirty-three, eighteen hundred and thirty-four and eighteen hundred and thirty-five, shall be paid and distributed as aforesaid at the treasury of the United States, on the first day of May, eighteen hundred and thirty-six; and those which shall be received for the years eighteen hundred and thirty-six and eighteen hundred and thirty-seven shall also be paid at the treasury half-yearly, on the first day of July and January in each of those years, to such person or persons as the respective legislatures of the said states shall authorise and direct to receive the same.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That this act shall continue and be in force until the thirty-first day of December, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven, unless the United States shall become involved in war with any foreign power, in which event, from the commencement of hostilities, this act shall cease and be no longer in force: Provided, nevertheless, That if, prior to the expiration of this act, any new state or states shall be admitted into the union, the power is reserved of assigning by law to such new state or states the proportion to which such state or states may be entitled upon the principles of this act, and upon the principles of any of the compacts made as aforesaid with either of the seven states first mentioned.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That, until the said thirty-first day of December, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven, there shall be annually appropriated for completing the surveys of said lands, a sum not less than eighty thousand dollars; and the minimum price at which the public lands are now sold at private sale shall not be increased; and in case the same shall be increased by law, within the period aforesaid, so much of this act as provides that the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands shall be distributed among the several states shall, from and after the increase of the minimum price thereof, cease and become utterly null and of no effect, any thing in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That whenever, for two successive years, it shall appear to the secretary of the treasury that the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands, within any land district now established, or which may hereafter be established by law, shall not be sufficient to discharge the salaries of the officers employed by the United States within such district, he may discontinue such officers, and the lands contained in such district remaining unsold shall, in such case, be annexed to the adjoining district.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That there shall be granted to each of the states of Mississippi, Louisiana and Missouri, the quantity of five hundred thousand acres of land; to the state of Indiana, one hundred and fifteen thousand two hundred and seventy-two acres; to the state of Illinois, twenty thousand acres; and to the state of Alabama, one hundred thousand acres of land, lying within the limits of said states, respectively; to be selected in such manner as the legislatures thereof shall direct, and located in parcels, conformably to sectional divisions and subdivisions of not less than three hundred and twenty acres in any one location on any public land subject to entry at private sale; which said locations may be made at any time within five years after the lands of the United States, in said states, respectively, shall have been surveyed, and offered at public sale according to existing laws.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That the lands herein granted to the states above named shall not be disposed of at a price less than one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, until otherwise directed by law; and the net proceeds of the sales of said lands shall be faithfully applied to objects of internal improvement within the states aforesaid, respectively, namely, roads, bridges, canals and improvement of watercourses, and draining swamps; and such roads, canals, bridges and watercourses, when made or improved, shall be free for the transportation of the United States mail, and munitions of war, and for the passage of their troops, without the payment of any toll whatever.

NILES' WEEKLY REGISTER.

FOURTH SERIES. No. 2—VOL. XIV.] BALTIMORE, MARCH 12, 1836. [VOL. L. WHOLE No. 1,277

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY H. NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

We make a record of the doings of the last meeting of the stockholders of the bank of the United States, under its late charter—as being highly interesting, and absolutely necessary to a history of that important establishment. It shews a triumphant result.

We also present the letter of Mr. Tyler, resigning his seat as one of the senators from Virginia, with various proceedings, as to his successor, &c. and the letter from Mr. Leigh, refusing to resign his seat, both which we recommend to the serious consideration of all our readers—none of whom will fail to observe, that Mr. Leigh has acted, in congress, on the very principles which he was sent there to maintain! The politicians of Virginia have shifted their ground since the last year—not he. "What has happened may happen again"—and Mr. Rives be instructed out of congress in the next year, for doing those things which he is now appointed to do! Senators are elected for six years—but thus they may be rendered annual appointments. This neither is the letter, nor the spirit, of the constitution—but such is the "Virginia construction" of the right in this matter. If Mr. Leigh is supported by "the people," at the next election—Mr. Rives must, on his own principles, resign! And thus the Virginia doctrine will run into a ridiculous farce.

From the Independent Register, published at Fincastle, Va.

It will be seen that Mr. Tyler has resigned his seat in the senate of the United States, because he cannot obey the expunging instructions of the legislature. Our legislature has, to all practical purposes, altered and subverted the constitution of the United States, by changing the term of service of United States senators from six years to that of its own good will and pleasure. We have great respect for Mr. Tyler, and do not intend to censure his motives, while we express our disapprobation of his course, in giving his sanction to the principle of obedience to legislative instruction.

Mr. Rives resigned his seat in the senate because he differed from our legislature on the deposite question, and Mr. Leigh was elected in his place; now another legislature, of different party politics, has caused Mr. Tyler to resign by means of instructions; and thus within the compass of one year we have two forced resignations of an office, the term of which is fixed by the constitution at six years. It is thus that our legislature overleaps the constitution of the United States, degrades the senate by making it subject to its changeful whims, and reduces itself to an arena for political demagogues, where graver duties are neglected for declamation, and the discussion of the conduct, duties and powers of the senate of the United States, or any other (to them) equally abstract question.

Mr. Leigh has not resigned,* and we do not know what course he will pursue. But, an advocate himself of the right of legislative instruction, he may well entrench himself within the terms of the Virginia resolutions of 1812, and refuse to obey or to resign. Those resolutions declare the right of instruction and the duty of obedience, unless the instructions require the instructed "to commit a violation of the constitution, or an act of moral turpitude." This proviso necessarily constitutes the instructed the sole judge of the constitutionality or purity of the act required to be done.

From the "Norfolk Herald"—

Mr. Tyler, it will be seen, has resigned his seat in the senate. So far, the expungers have succeeded in their efforts to break down the independence of the senate, and render it subservient to the will of the executive. The check which the constitution provided against the possible excesses of the popular branches of the government, is, so far as forcing Mr. Tyler to resign can expedite it, one step further advanced towards its removal. Yes, we may truly say, that the senate is in a fair way to be wrested from its high destiny as the guardian of the rights of the states and liberties of the republic, which was assigned it by the framers of the constitution, and converted into a mere machine to toe the mark, and to serve the purposes of a party, of which the president is avowed to be the head.

We find no fault with Mr. Tyler for resigning; but however much we may venerate the right of instruction, we could have excused him, in such a case as this, if he had disobeyed.

In the house of representatives of Pennsylvania, March 7.

*And will not—see his letter.

VOL. L.—S16. 2.

Resolved, by the senate and house of representatives of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in general assembly met, That our senators in congress, viz: general Samuel McKean and James Buchanan, esq. are hereby instructed to vote against any and every resolution which has been or may be introduced into the senate of the United States, to expunge from the journals of the senate a resolution passed on the 28th day of March, A. D. 1834, in the following words, viz: "Resolved, That the president, in the late executive proceedings in relation to the public revenue, has assumed upon himself authority and power not conferred by the constitution and laws, but in derogation of both."

Resolved, That the governor be requested to communicate a copy of the above resolution to the senators aforesaid.

The said resolutions were passed by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Atkinson, Bringham, Brooke, Buckman, Carson, Clarke, Conly, Cowen, Cox, Davies, Emmert, Ewing, Frew, Garretson, Gebhart, Gilbert, Graham, Harrison, Harsh, Hubbell, Hunter, Hutchison, (Ches.) Kars, Kauffman, Kennedy, Kirk, D. Krause, J. Krause, McCarty, McConnell, McDonald, McGiffin, McSherry, Mathers, Meyer, Mendenhall, Metzger, Montelius, Meyer, Neal, Nesbit, Norton, Oliver, Parker, Pennypacker, Reed, Riegel, Schall, Scott, G. W. Smith, J. B. Smith, T. S. Smith, Spackman, Stevens, Stahr, Taylor, Thompson, Trego, Wagner, Walker, (Alleg.) Walker, (Erie), Watson, Watts, Middlesworth, Syr.—64.

NAYS—Messrs. Bidlack, Bullock, Burson, Conrad, Curran, Deir, Dewart, Douglass, Ferguson, Gamble, Hall, Hasson, Hill, Hottenstein, Huston, (Fay.) Huston, (North) Jackson, Jones, Rinehart, Scheetz, Stouffer, Stout, Taggart, Woodward, Work—25.

This is an important resolution—and let it be recollected that Mr. Buchanan avowed, in his letter accepting the appointment, he would obey all instructions from the legislature or resign. They will pass the senate in a few days. He will then have a chance of acting on the principle, when it cuts against himself. They will find a sword sometimes cuts two ways.

The "American Sentinel," of Philadelphia, supposed it probable that such resolutions might, also, pass the senate, when the propriety of them was first suggested. But as senates are out of fashion, now-a-days—the representatives being only the depository of the people's rights, it is n'importe with those who hold such doctrines! Yet the senate of Pennsylvania, we think, will pass them.

The long articles in the present sheet, have excluded many minor articles and notices of events. It is hard for us to keep pace with the press of matter demanding an insertion; and we must do, just as well as we can.

Several interesting particulars of events that have happened in Florida, and notices of preparations for the future, have been received—but must be deferred. No new incident of hostility had occurred, on the part of the Indians, (as we believe), except a solitary murder; and general Scott has now about 3,000 men under his command to commence operations against them, which may soon be expected; and he will, probably, end the war in a short time. Many Indians were coming in—to shield themselves from the effects of American vengeance.

The "American" of Thursday says—

In the first branch of the city council, yesterday afternoon, a resolution was passed, by a vote of 14 to 10, to memorialise the legislature to amend the law authorising a subscription by the city to the stock of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road, so as to give to the city a larger number of directors in the rail road company than are allowed by that law. This is a virtual rejection, by that branch, of the law recently passed by the legislature, authorising the city to subscribe three millions to the rail road.

This, we believe, is the plain truth of the whole matter. The object seems to be, to make a party engine of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road—which nine-tenths, or more, of the present holders of the stock, and of the payers of taxes in the city of Baltimore, and the legislature of the state, will not, and cannot, agree to. The hopes of success in the completion of the road, therefore, must depend on the public spirit of the legislature of the state, and of the private citizens of Baltimore; the latter of whom, would, in any event, be liable for any loss that might happen, under the authority to borrow money to the amount of three millions, and they might as well make a credit of necessity, and encounter it—without the nominal sanction of the "corporation." The second branch of the council, however, with only one dissenting vote, has rejected the doings of the first branch.

A report has been made to the legislature of Maryland, by the committee of ways and means, to lend the credit of the state for eight millions of dollars, to the following purposes—3 millions, each, to the Ohio and Chesapeake canal, and to the Baltimore and Ohio rail road; one million to make a rail road on the Eastern Shore; and half a million each to extend the Ohio and Chesapeake canal to Baltimore, and to make a canal at Annapolis.

We shall, probably, have the reports of both committees of the two houses of congress, on the admission of Michigan, into the union—in the course of the ensuing week. It would appear that they have each arrived at pretty nearly the same general conclusions, (though by different arguments), which materially affects the boundaries of Michigan, as determined by her state legislature! We have not, however seen both reports, and, therefore, speak "without book."

We are furnished, through the National Intelligencer, with a copy of Mr. Clayton's speech in the senate, on Mr. Benton's resolutions, when he moved to strike out the word "surplus"—which prevailed. It is a display of beauty and power that has rarely been equalled and never excelled.

There have been other riots in New York, in consequence of the outrageous conduct of individuals, in attempting to force persons from employments, with the payments for which they were satisfied, that they might obtain higher rates of wages. The determined conduct of the police prevented the designs of the rioters, and arrested many of them. In the present case they were nearly all foreigners.

The U. S. frigate Columbia, a first rate vessel of her class, was safely and beautifully launched, at the navy yard, in Washington, on Wednesday last, in the presence of thousands—among them the president and vice president of the United States, heads of departments, members of congress and other official persons, and private citizens. The Columbia is a beautiful vessel. The house of representatives adjourned, for the day, to witness her descent into her "destined element."

A "whole" fool, in the legislature of Ohio, as is officially announced in the "Globe" has introduced a bill, thundering the cry of "mad-dog" at the new bank which Pennsylvania has established, and prohibiting, (under severe penalties), the ordinary use of its notes in that state—whereupon certain "check-mate" resolutions have been introduced into the senate of Pennsylvania, rendering the same courtesy to the state of Ohio; which are, for the present "hung up to dry" but will CERTAINLY take the forms of a law, and become a law, if the outrageous and impudent resolutions of Ohio shall be so passed by the legislature of that state. There are two that can play at this game—and Pennsylvania will not any longer "play a second fiddle." The fact is—she has been used as though she were a slave—dictated to like a child, and expected to hurrah, and lend her wind, whenever required, and even against her own favorite measures, on many important occasions. She will not do so hereafter.

And what is this hubbub about? Is the ability of the bank to pay its debts "questioned?" Ask the merchants at Canton, in China! Its drafts sell there for 5s. 9d. to the dollar—or for six or eight cents more than the dollar is worth at London, on which they are drawn, and made payable at six months after date!

But Pennsylvania has gone yet further—she stands upon her own rights—firmly based and fully capable of defending herself on any occasion, and on this especially; as the following will shew, being an extract from the proceedings of the house of representatives.

The bill to require the several banks of this state to make a statement of their affairs to the auditor general when requested so to do by him, was taken up on second reading.

Mr. Stevens offered the following new sections to the bill when it was postponed till to-morrow, that they might be printed. They will pass into a law.

That if any one of the United States should prohibit the circulation within its limits of the notes of any bank chartered by this commonwealth, then all the notes of all the banks chartered by such state shall be and are hereby prohibited from circulation within the state of Pennsylvania; and it shall be the duty of the governor to give notice of such prohibition, by proclamation, as soon as any state shall have prohibited the circulation of the notes of the bank of Pennsylvania above stated—and if any person within this state shall receive or pay out any bank note of any state, thus prohibited, after the expiration of thirty days from the publication of such proclamation, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall undergo imprisonment for not more than sixty days, or pay a fine of not less than fifty, or more than two hundred dollars. Provided, that this act shall not extend to the notes of any state which may prohibit the circulation of the notes of a particular denomination of the branches of this state, provided such law be general and applies to the bank notes of the same denomination of all other states, including the state thus making the prohibition.

Sec. 2d. That if any bank or banks chartered, or which may hereafter be chartered by this commonwealth, and now selected, or which may hereafter be selected by the general government or any of its departments, to receive the public deposits, shall permit the general government or any of its departments to regulate the amount of specie which it or they may be required to possess, or the denomination of notes which it or they shall receive of the notes of such banks, it or they shall refuse to receive of any of the banks chartered by authority of this commonwealth, or if any of said banks shall obey any recommendation issued by any department of the general government in reference to those subjects; then the charter or charters of said bank or banks shall become ipso facto void, and be repealed; and shall be so declared by the supreme court upon sieri facias, issued returnable to them—Provided, that any issue of fact in relation to such course of forfeiture and repeal shall be tried by jury; and the governor of this commonwealth or the legislature may order such sieri facias to issue whenever he or they may deem sufficient cause to exist.

The "Delaware Breakwater" appears to answer the great purpose intended, of sheltering vessels in the winter season. We observe there are many arrivals, at Philadelphia, of ships and other vessels from it. It has afforded protection to many from foreign ports.

The "National Intelligencer" says—

From Kentucky, we learn that a good deal of difficulty had recently existed among our whig friends in that state in reference to their candidate for governor, some urging the support of Judge Clarke for that office, and others insisting on the nomination of lieutenant governor Morehead, who has been for some time acting governor of the state. In this state of things, a Van Buren convention was held at Frankfort, the week before last, to nominate an electoral ticket. Perceiving the difference of opinion among the whigs as to their state officers, they determined, contrary to previous design, to nominate candidates of their own for governor; for which offices they selected M. Flournoy and Elisha Ilise, very popular candidates. It became necessary for the whigs, therefore, to unite on one candidate. Mr. Morehead magnanimously withdrew his claim as soon as this state of things occurred, and the whig members of the legislature forthwith assembled, and unanimously nominated James Clark for governor, and Charles Wickliffe for lieutenant governor. This movement leaves no doubt of the success of the entire whig ticket at the elections in this state.

The arrival at Annapolis of Mr. Fox, the new British minister, has been improved by the citizens of that ancient capital, in a manner worthy of its renown for elegant hospitality. He has been invited to, and accepted a ball which took place on Monday evening last. He arrived in the armed vessel, the Wanderer, from Rio Janeiro.

A petition of the citizens of Louisville was, on the 20th of February, presented to the legislature of Kentucky, relative to a branch of the United States bank recently chartered by Pennsylvania. It was referred to a select committee of twelve by a vote of 60 to 33. Branches will be asked for—by several other states. A circulation is wanted, that will extend to Canton, if needed, and bear a premium!

The speech of the British king, inserted in the present sheet, will be found interesting.

We have accounts from Canton to a late day in November. We do not believe that the report of the destruction of a large part of Peking, by an earthquake, is true, though it is possible, from the slowness of communications in China, which has neither rail roads nor steamboats—and it is said to have been derived from the Pekin Gazette. It appears however, that

A very destructive fire broke out in Canton, in China, on the 22d November, about 7 o'clock, the wind blowing directly towards the foreign factories, none of which were burnt, but the goods removed on board of boats. It was reported that about two thousand houses were burnt, with an immense quantity of merchandise, and a great many lives lost. The Europeans took advantage of the disorder from the fire, and entered the walls, some of whom paid for their presumption by getting bamboozed. This is the first time that Americans or Europeans could obtain an entrance.

Resolutions have passed the senate of Indiana, directing the delegation in congress from that state to oppose all further appropriations intended for the support of West Point academy; and to advocate the sale of the public buildings, library, and apparatus thereto, for the public benefit! Yeas 15—nays 10.

Fridays and Saturdays, in the house of representatives, are called "Mr. Whittlesey's days"—that is, they are days devoted to business. Can a higher compliment be paid to the industrious and indefatigable member from Ohio, who is worth more to the country than all the speech-makers and long-talkers in the house put together! [Alex. Gaz.]

At Annapolis, in the house of delegates, on the 3d instant—Mr. Mercer submitted a series of resolutions in relation to the contemplated movement in the senate of the United States, to expunge from the journal of that body, the resolution declaring "that the president, in the executive proceedings in relation to the public revenue, assumed upon himself authority and power not conferred by the constitution and laws, but in derogation of both." The resolutions declare that "the expunging from the journal of either house, any part of the proceedings of that body, is a manifest and dangerous violation of the constitution of the United States." And they request our senators and representatives "to use all constitutional means to prevent a measure fraught with such danger to constitutional freedom." They were read the first time and laid the table.

TWENTY-FOURTH CONGRESS—FIRST SESSION.

SENATE.

March 4. Mr. Porter presented the credentials of R. C. Nicholas, appointed a senator from Louisiana, and the oath was administered, and Mr. Nicholas took his seat.

Mr. Ewing, of Ohio, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the secretary of the treasury be directed to inform the senate what part of the whole expenditure, under the head of the Indian department, from the commencement of the government to the 30th Sept. 1835, as stated in his report to the senate of the 25th of January last, was paid to the Indians for lands purchased of them by the United States. Also that he transmit to the senate a statement of the balance of public moneys in each of the deposit banks on the latest day to which he has received their accounts current.

Mr. Benton expressed a wish to amend the resolution by adding to it a call on the secretary of the treasury to report what will be the amount of the balance in the treasury, after the passage of the appropriation bills which are now in progress.

Mr. Ewing suggested that such an amendment would have been german to a previous which he had offered, but would not be relevant to this.

Mr. Benton said he took blame to himself for not having proposed such an amendment. He would not press his motion now, but take another opportunity to submit it hereafter.

The resolution was then agreed to.

Mr. Benton gave notice that he should introduce his expunging resolution in the course of a few days, as soon as the senate should be full.

Mr. Webster asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to allow a drawback of the duties on imported cordage which may be afterwards exported; which was read twice, and referred to the committee on manufactures.

Mr. Preston offered the following resolution; which lies one day for consideration:

Resolved, That it is expedient, the states of Maryland and Virginia assenting thereto, to retrocede the District of Columbia to those states, with such reservations as may be necessary for the government.

On motion of Mr. Buchanan, it was Ordered, That when the senate adjourns, it adjourns to meet on Monday.

Several bills were passed.

Mr. Hendricks moved to postpone the previous orders, and to take up the bill for the continuation of the Cumberland road, Yeas 18, nays 12.

An amendment being made in the amount of the appropriation, on the motion of Mr. Clay—

Mr. Clay moved to amend the next section of the bill by inserting the following provision:

"Provided, That the expenditure of the appropriation hereinafter made for the state of Illinois be limited to the graduating and bridging the road therein, and shall not be construed to pledge congress to future appropriations for the purpose of Macadamizing the same."

After a few words from Mr. Clay and Mr. Robinson, the question was taken by yeas and nays, and decided as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Black, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Goldsborough, Hill, Kent, King, of Ala. King, of Ga. Knight, Leigh, McKean, Mangum, Moore, Naudain, Nicholas, Niles, Porter, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Shepley, Swift, Tallmadge, Tomlinson, Walker, Wall, Webster, White—30.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Cuthbert, Ewing, of Illinois, Ewing, of Ohio, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, Linn, Morris, Robinson, Tipton, Wright—14.

So the amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Naudain, the appropriations in Ohio and Indiana were restricted to the entire completion of the road as far as it could be done, so that such parts might be surrendered to the state.

Mr. Crittenden moved to strike out that portion of the bill which designates these appropriations as to be derived from a fund supposed to be created by the compact between the United States and three north western states.

Before the question was taken on this amendment, the senate adjourned.

March 7. Mr. Clay offered the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the secretary of the treasury be directed to communicate to the senate the total amount expended in constructing and repairing the Cumberland road, (including bridging), and distinguishing the sums expended east of Wheeling, and in the three states of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois; and that he also communicate to the senate the total amount of the two per cent. which, by the compacts with the states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Missouri, respectively, was received out of the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands for making roads or canals leading to these several states, distinguishing between the amounts of that fund which have accrued in each of these states.

Mr. Kent offered the following resolution; which lies one day for consideration:

Resolved, That the judiciary committee inquire into the propriety of giving to the District of Columbia a delegate on the floor of the house of representatives; and thereby place them on an equal footing with the other territories of the United States.

Mr. Ewing moved that the senate proceed to the consideration of the bill to appropriate for a limited time the proceeds of the public lands, &c. which motion was rejected—yeas 18, nays 22.

The senate proceeded to consider the petition of the society of Friends of Philadelphia, praying for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia.

The question being on the motion of Mr. Calhoun that the petition be not received,

The debate thereon, and some time expended in executive business, occupied the remainder of the day.

March 8. Mr. Clay presented the memorial of a committee of management on the subject of a marine hospital in Louisville.

Mr. Clay, on presenting this memorial, gave a brief description of the class of citizens concerned in the navigation of the western waters, and of the great proportion which they bear to the seamen of the United States; and urged the necessity of making some provision for their comfort in the hour of sickness and destitution. He moved that the petition be laid on the table, and printed.

Mr. Davis informed the senate, that this subject was before the committee on commerce—and he went into a variety of illustrations of the condition of the marine hospitals; among which he presented the following table, shewing the amount of the tax collected of seamen employed on board of registered, enrolled and licensed vessels, for such hospitals, from 1802 to 1833, inclusive—

Instead, therefore, (said Mr. D.) of $12,000, as the petitioners represent, the whole amount contributed above New Orleans, which he considered an Atlantic port, was less than $4,000. How the craft of these waters escaped was not very apparent to his mind, nor had he been able to learn to his satisfaction the cause.

The motion to print was agreed to.

The subject of the petition of the Friends of Philadelphia, playing for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia, was resumed—the question being on the motion of Mr. Calhoun, that the petition be not received.

The debate was continued by Messrs. Grundy, Morris, Kent and Ewing; and, on motion of Mr. Calhoun,

The senate adjourned.

March 9. The resolution offered by Mr. Kent, referring to the judiciary committee to consider the expediency of allowing the District of Columbia a delegate on the floor of the house of representatives, was considered and agreed to.

After other business—

The senate proceeded to consider the petition of the society of Friends in Philadelphia, on the subject of the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia.

The question being on the motion "that the petition be not received"—

Mr. Calhoun addressed the senate in reply to what had fallen from other senators on the subject.

Mr. Clay made a few remarks in explanation, called for by some part of the remarks of the senator from South Carolina.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. Calhoun, "Shall the petition be received?" and decided as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing, of Ill. Ewing, of Ohio, Goldsborough, Grundy, Hendricks, Hill, Hubbard, Kent, King, of Alabama, King, of Georgia, Knight, Linn, McKean, Morris, Naudain, Niles, Prentiss, Robbins, Robinson, Ruggles, Shepley, Southard, Swift, Tallmadge, Tipton, Tomlinson, Wall, Webster, Wright—36.

NAYS—Messrs. Black, Calhoun, Cuthbert, Leigh, Moore, Nicholas, Preston, Porter, Walker, White—10.

The question being next on the motion of Mr. Buchanan, to reject the prayer of the petition,

Mr. Clay made some remarks on the motion, and concluded by moving to amend it by adding to it—

For the senate, without now affirming or denying the constitutional power of congress to grant the prayer of the petition, believes, even supposing the power uncontested, which it is not, that the exercise of it would be inexpedient.

1st. Because the people of the District of Columbia have not themselves petitioned for the abolition of slavery within the District.

2d. Because the states of Virginia and Maryland would be injuriously affected by such a measure, whilst the institution of slavery continues to subsist within their respective jurisdictions, and neither of these states would probably have ceded to the United States the territory now forming the District if it had anticipated the adoption of any such measure without clearly and expressly guarding against it. And,

3d. Because the injury which would be inflicted by exciting alarm and apprehension in the states tolerating slavery, and by disturbing the harmony between them and the other members of the confederacy, would far exceed any practical benefit which could possibly flow from the abolition of slavery within the District.

Mr. Porter wished more time to reflect, and moved to lay the motion on the table, but withdrew it at the instance of Mr. Buchanan.

Mr. Buchanan then addressed the senate in defence of his motion, as it originally stood.

Mr. Preston said there may be other reasons; he had some which were stronger than those assigned, and he should vote against these, which contained a negative pregnant, looking to a state of things when congress could act on the subject.

Mr. Porter said one of his reasons for wishing to lay on the table the amendments was, that he might examine them, and ascertain if such reasons as would be satisfactory to him, so as to command his vote, could be assigned. He renewed his motion, and again withdrew it when

Mr. Clay stated that he had no objection to let the amendment lie for further examination.

After a few words from Mr. Cuthbert,

On motion of Mr. Morris, the senate adjourned.

March 10. A message was received from the president of the United States, transmitting the proceedings of a convention held at Little Rock, in the territory of Arkansas, to form a constitution and state government for that territory.

Mr. Buchanan moved to refer the message to a select committee.

Mr. Clayton moved to refer it to the select committee raised on the Michigan application.

Mr. Buchanan's motion prevailed by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Cuthbert, Ewing, of Ill. Grundy, Hendricks, Hill, Hubbard, King, of Geo. Linn, McKean, Morris, Nicholas, Niles, Robinson, Ruggles, Shepley, Tallmadge, Tipton, Wall, White—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Black, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Davis, Ewing, of Ohio, Goldsborough, Knight, Leigh, Naudain, Porter, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson—17.

Several bills were reported, &c.

The abolition subject, with the pending resolution of Mr. Clay, was on the motion of Mr. Leigh, was laid upon the table, by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Black, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Cuthbert, (in hope of avoiding the question), Davis, Ewing, of Ohio, Goldsborough, King, of Alab. Knight, Leigh, McKean, Moore, Naudain, Nicholas, Porter, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson, White—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Ewing, of Ill. Grundy, Hendricks, Hill, Hubbard, King, of Georgia, Linn, Morris, Niles, Robinson, Ruggles, Shepley, Tallmadge, Tipton, Walker, Wall, Wright—20.

On motion of Mr. Ewing, of Ohio, the preceding orders were then postponed, and the senate proceeded to consider the bill to establish the northern boundary of Ohio.

The bill being under consideration, as in committee of the whole,

Mr. Morris moved to amend the bill so as to conform to the views he had embodied in his joint resolution on the subject.

Some discussion took place, in which Messrs. Morris, Clayton and Ewing briefly participated.

Mr. Morris asked for the yeas and nays on his amendment which were ordered, and taken; and his amendment was rejected.

The question being on the engrossment of the bill, on which the yeas and nays were ordered, the decision was as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Cuthbert, Davis, Ewing, of Illinois, Ewing, of Ohio, Goldsborough, Grundy, Hendricks, Hill, Hubbard, King, of Ala. King, of Georgia, Knight, Leigh, Linn, McKean, Morris, Naudain, Nicholas, Porter, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Robinson, Southard, Tallmadge, Tipton, Tomlinson, Walker, Wall, White—36.

NAYS—Messrs. Niles, Ruggles, Shepley—3.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, in the following form:

A bill to settle and establish the northern boundary line of the state of Ohio.

Be it enacted, &c. That the northern boundary of the state of Ohio shall be established by, and extend to, a direct line running from the southern extremity of Lake Michigan to the most northerly cape of the Miami bay; thence, north east, to the northern boundary line of the United States; thence, with said line, to the Pennsylvania line.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the boundary line surveyed, marked, and designated agreeably to "an act to authorise the president of the United States to ascertain and designate the northern boundary of the state of Indiana," approved March the second, eighteen hundred and twenty-seven, shall be deemed and taken as the east and west line mentioned in the constitution of the state of Indiana, drawn through a point ten miles north of the southern extreme of Lake Michigan, and shall be and forever remain the northern boundary of said state.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the northern boundary line ascertained, surveyed, and marked, agreeably to a law of congress entitled "an act to ascertain and mark the line between the state of Alabama and the territory of Florida, and the northern boundary of the state of Illinois, and for other purposes," approved March second, eighteen hundred and thirty-one, shall be deemed and taken as the line west from the middle of Lake Michigan, in north latitude forty-two degrees thirty minutes, to the middle of the Mississippi river, as defined in the act of congress entitled "an act to enable the people of the Illinois territory to form a constitution and state government, and for the admission of such state into the union on an equal footing with the original states," approved eighteenth of April, eighteen hundred and eighteen, and shall be and forever remain the northern boundary line of said state.

The senate then adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Friday, March 4. The house resumed the consideration of the motion of Mr. Patton to suspend the rules in order to enable him to submit a motion to withdraw the letter of the governor of Virginia, presented by him, enclosing certain resolutions of the assembly of Virginia, on the subject of the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia.

After remarks from several members—

The question being taken on the motion to suspend the rules, it was decided in the negative—yeas 89, nays 56.

Mr. Spangler moved that the vote of the house rejecting the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina, (Mr. Bynum), to permit the petitioner, in the case of the North Carolina contested election, to be heard, by counsel, on the main question, be reconsidered. [This motion lies over.]

Other business being attended to, and petitions presented, &c. Mr. Robertson asked the consent of the house to submit the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the committee for the District of Columbia be instructed to inquire into the expediency of ceding the said District back to the states of Virginia and Maryland respectively, and to report specially—

1st. The prominent objections (if any) to the validity of such cession.

2d. The advantages or disadvantages likely to result from this measure (if adopted) to the said states, to the District itself, and its inhabitants, or to the United States.

3d. The reservations and provisions that should accompany such cession, with a view to the permanent continuance of the seat of government in the said District, the entire protection and preservation of the property of the United States therein, and the attainment of such other objects as the committee may deem necessary and proper, to guard the rights and interests of all; and that the said committee have power to send for persons and papers.

Objections being made, Mr. Robertson moved the suspension of the rules, in order to enable him to offer the resolution.

Mr. Garland, of Louisiana, called for the yeas and nays on this motion, and they were ordered.

Mr. Bouldin, remarking that this was an important subject, and that the house was thin, moved a call of the house; which was ordered.

After some time, on motion of Mr. Vanderpoel, the call was suspended.

The question being taken, it was decided in the negative yeas 71, nays 114.

So the house refused to suspend the rules for the purpose indicated.

Mr. Slade presented memorials praying for the abolition of slavery and the slave trade in the District of Columbia, from 487 females and 19 male citizens of the state of Vermont, from 548 females and 274 male citizens of Dover, in the state of New Hampshire, and from 66 females and 54 male citizens of Derry, in the same state; which were referred to the committee appointed under the resolution offered by Mr. Pinckney, of South Carolina.

Many resolutions of inquiry were proposed this day.

Saturday, March 5. After some conversation, the resolution on the subject was modified, and was adopted in the following form:

Resolved, That 5,000 copies of the report and bill in relation to the northern boundary of Ohio, be printed for the use of the members of this house.

The house resumed the consideration of the report of the committee on elections on the North Carolina contested election. The question being on the motion of Mr. Hard, to allow the petitioner, David Newland, a place within the bar of the house; and permit him to address the house in his own behalf; which motion Mr. Bynum had moved so to amend as to permit the petitioner to be heard by counsel on the main question.

After debate—

Mr. Whittlesy here called for the orders of the day.

And the remainder of the day was expended in private business.

Monday, March 7. Mr. Hannegan remarked that he had seen with regret a settled determination, on the part of the majority of the house, to resist any attempt to expose the abuses of the military academy at West Point. He wanted the house that they could not smother the truth, and that, one way or another, the facts should be made known.

[Here Mr. H. was loudly called to order both by the chair and many members of the house.]

Mr. Hannegan moved that the rules be suspended, in order to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the report of the select committee appointed during the last congress, to investigate the affairs of the West Point military academy, be withdrawn from the files, and that ten thousand copies thereof be printed.

Mr. Hannegan expressed the hope that the house would indulge him with the yeas and nays on the question, and they were ordered.

Mr. Vanderpoel asked whether it was in order to show that the report alluded to in the resolution was not the report of the majority of the committee.

The chair replied that no discussion of the subject could be tolerated.

The question being taken, it was determined in the negative: yeas 112, nays 82.

The house resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of elections on the North Carolina contested election. The question being on the motion of Mr. Hard, as amended at the suggestion of Mr. Mann, of New York, to allow the petitioner, David Newland, a seat within the bar of the house, and also to permit him to be heard in his own behalf; which motion Mr. Bynum had moved to amend by adding that the petitioner have leave to be heard by counsel.

The discussion of this motion to amend was continued.

After some time Mr. Whittlesy called for the orders of the day.

Mr. Boyd moved to suspend the rules in order to continue the discussion of this report.

Mr. Bynum rose to a point of order, and contended that, according to the rule, which he read, it required but a bare majority of the house to suspend private orders.

The chair decided that it would require a vote of two-thirds. The question being taken on the motion of Mr. Boyd, it was decided in the negative, 87 to 83, not two-thirds.

Mr. Bynum appealed from the decision of the chair on the point of order above stated.

Many gentlemen having spoken,

Mr. Hamer moved the previous question.

The chair stated the question, and briefly supported his views in regard to it.

The motion for the previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The question being then taken, "shall the decision of the speaker stand as the judgment of the house?" it was decided in the affirmative: yeas 132, nays 61.

The chair announced the order of the day, which was private bills; and a large number were passed.

The engrossed bill to carry into effect the convention with Spain was read a third time, and passed.

Several bills from the senate were read a first and second time, and referred.

The chair presented a letter from the secretary of the treasury, transmitting statements and notes relative to the cultivation and manufacture of cotton, and the exports and imports thereof, in conformity with a resolution of the house of the 12th ultimo.

On motion of Mr. Judson, the document was referred to the committee on manufactures, and ordered to be printed.

Adjourned.

Tuesday, March 8. Mr. Dixon H. Lewis, a member of the house of representatives, from the state of Alabama, appeared, was qualified, and took his seat.

Mr. Jarvis stated that the ship of war Columbia would be launched, at the navy yard, to-morrow morning; and, as many members had never witnessed such an exhibition, but were desirous of so doing, he moved to suspend the rules, in order to submit the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That when this house adjourns, it adjourn to meet to-morrow at 2 o'clock.

The resolution being so amended as to adjourn for the day — was passed. A call for the yeas and nays on the amendment was refused.

Mr. Hannegan moved to suspend the rules for the purpose of offering the following resolution; which was read.

Resolved, That the report of the select committee appointed during the last congress, to investigate the affairs of the West Point military academy, be withdrawn from the files, and that ten thousand copies thereof be printed.

Mr. H. asked the yeas and nays on the question, but remarked that he did not expect any of those gentlemen to vote for the motion, who had brothers, sons and kinsmen at this institution.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The motion to suspend the rules was then rejected.

The motion of Mr. Spangler to reconsider the vote rejecting the proposition of the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. Bynum), to allow the petitioner, in the case of the North Carolina contested election, to appear, by counsel, before the house—on the main question,

Mr. Spangler briefly supported the motion, and Mr. Grennell opposed it.

Before Mr. Grennell had concluded his remarks,

The chair announced the expiration of the hour assigned for the consideration of morning business.

Mr. Lawrence rose, and remarked that it was now between two and three months since a bill had been reported to this house for the relief of the sufferers by the late conflagration in the city of New York, and it was hoped by the friends of the bill that it would have passed long ago. The time had now arrived, and he had remarked the other day, that those who had suffered from that calamity should know what they had to depend upon from this house; and now, throwing himself upon the indulgence of the house in behalf of those sufferers, he asked them to sustain him in the motion he was about to make, with a view to take up that bill, and, as he hoped, finally to dispose of it this day. He felt confident that the friends of the bill were prepared to vote upon it, without any further discussion. Mr. L. then moved to suspend the rules, in order to take up the New York relief bill.

Mr. Cambreleng would barely remark, he said, that the public interest was as deeply concerned in the subject of this bill as in that of the special order, and he hoped that the motion would prevail.

After a great variety of propositions, in which Mr. Cambreleng, in reply to a question by Mr. Parks, "whether it was intended by that committee to bring forward, after the passage of this bill, any further measures of relief?"—said, it had been his (Mr. C's) impression all along that it was proper to remit the duties on all the goods destroyed in entire packages, and, should the committee instruct him to report such a bill, he would do it with great pleasure; but he felt persuaded, from the first decisions of the house, and from other circumstances, that the measure would not be sustained, however much he might himself be in favor of it; the bill was put upon its passage, by the previous question, and decided as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, U. Allen, Anthony, Ash, Bailey, Banks, Barton, Beardsley, Booke, Briggs, Brown, William B. Calhoun, Cambreleng, Chapin, Childs, Cleveland, Coffee, Corwin, Cramer, Crane, Cushing, Dardington, Dickerson, Doubleday, Evans, Fairfield, Farlin, Philo C. Fuller, William K. Fuller, Rice Garland, Gillet, Glascock, Grainger, Grantland, Grennell, Hale, Hard, Harper, Haynes, Hazeltine, Henderson, Heister, Hoar, Kelsey, Howard, Howell, Hubley, Hunt, Huntington, Huntsman, Ingersoll, Ingham, Jabez Jackson, James, Jarvis, R. M. Johnson, Cave Johnson, Henry Johnson, Judson, Kennon, Kilgore, Lane, Lansing, Lawrence, Lay, G. Lee, J. Lee, Thomas Lee, Leonard, Lincoln, Love, Loyall, Lyon, Abijah Mann, Manning, William Mason, M. Mason, Sampson Mason, McKennan, McKee, McKim, Mercer, Miller, Milligan, Moore, Muhlenberg, Owens, Page, Parker, Patterson, Phelps, Phillips, Potts, Reed, J. Reynolds, Rogers, Russell, Shinn, Sickles, Slade, Smith, Spangler, Steele, Storrie, Sutherland, Taylor, John Thomson, Toucey, Towns, Turritt, Vanderpool, Vinton, Ward, Wardwell—114.

NAYS—Messrs. Chilton, Allan, Ashley, Beale, Bean, Beaumont, Bell, Bond, Boon, Borden, Bouldin, Boyd, Bunch, John Calhoun, Campbell, Carr, Carter, Casey, George Chambers, J. Chambers, Chapman, Claiborne, Coles, Connor, Craig, Cushman, Davis, Deberry, Denny, Dickson, Dromgoole, Dunlap, Everett, Forester, French, Fry, Galbraith, James Garland, Graham, Graves, Grayson, Griffin, Joseph Hall, Hamer, Hannegan, Hardin, Harlan, S. S. Harrison, A. G. Harrison, Hawes, Hawkins, Hopkins, Jenifer, Joseph Johnson, J. W. Jones, Kinnard, Kingsmith, Lawler, Luke Lea, Lewis, Logan, Job Mann, Martin, John Y. Mason, Maury, McCarty, McCormas, McKay, McLene, Montgomery, Morgan, Morris, Parks, Patton, F. Pierce, Dutee J. Pearce, Peyton, Pickens, Rencher, John Reynolds, Roane, Robertson, Aug. H. Shepperd, Shields, Standfer, Thomas, Turner, Underwood, Webster, Weeks, White, Whitlesey, L. Williams, Sherrod Williams, Wise—94.

So the bill was passed.
The title of the having been read, and the question being whether this should be the title,

Mr. Pearce, of Rhode Island, said it was universally conceded that the present title of the bill did not express its true character, and he moved to amend it by substituting the following: "An act to relieve and confer exclusive benefits on certain merchants and importers in the city of New York."

Mr. Wise asked if this question was debatable.

The chair replied that it was.

Mr. Wise moved that the house do now adjourn. Lost.

The motion to amend the title was rejected, and the title, as it stood, was agreed to.

On motion, the house adjourned.

The house did not sit on Wednesday.

On Monday, Mr. Turner presented the memorial of a large and respectable portion of the citizens of Harford county, Maryland, praying that an appropriation may be made for removing obstructions at or near the head of the bay below the port of Havre de Grace, and causing the channel to be deepened. Mr. T. said: Mr. Speaker, the substance of this memorial is of such a character that it speaks for itself but I cannot forbear saying that the magnitude and importance of its object are such as redound to the credit of the memorialists. The enterprise is one which, if carried into effect, will do much to promote the interest, not only of the citizens of Havre de Grace and its vicinity, but of the citizens of the great states of Pennsylvania and New York, by creating an export market immediately at the mouth of this magnificent river, where all the great mass of produce that descends the Susquehanna for hundreds of miles from the interior of a rich and fertile country abounding in wealth, must concentrate, and ultimately make the town of Havre de Grace what it ought to have been years ago. I therefore move that the memorial be referred, without reading, to the committee on commerce, under a full assurance that they will give it that due consideration that its importance demands.

Thursday, March 10. The North Carolina contested election occupied the house, until the orders of the day were called for—when many preparatory matters were attended to, though nothing decidedly acted upon.

LATER FROM ENGLAND.

New York, March 8. Yesterday, says the Courier, our news schooner boarded at sea, the Liverpool packet ship North America, captain Dixey, which sailed on the 5th ultimo. We received the newspapers brought by her at an early hour this morning. They are from London of the 4th, and Liverpool of the 5th. About six hours later than those brought by the previous arrival.

The speech of the king of England, on opening the present session of parliament will be found below. It is most important as it regards the measures of internal policy to which it alludes; these are of deep interest, involving vast results, and will no doubt produce a sharp and obstinate collision between the two great bodies into which the house of commons is so nearly divided.

The Spanish cortes has been unexpectedly dissolved by the queen. It appears the new minister, Mendizabal, finding himself in a minority on an important question, determined on taking the sense of the nation, by recurring to a new election.

London, Thursday evening, Feb. 4. His majesty this day opened the session of parliament with the usual formalities.—He went in state from St. James' Place, preceded and followed by the whole of his household retinue, in a carriage drawn by eight horses, richly caparisoned, with superb new harness—the positions and footmen in attendance being also dressed in new state liveries.

His majesty's departure from the palace, and arrival at the house of peers, was announced by the firing of cannon.

Though the day was far from favorable, the crowds of people to view the procession were very great, and along the whole line of road which his majesty passed, he was received with loud cheers.

His majesty, we are happy to state, appeared to be in the possession of excellent health.

On his majesty's arrival at the house of peers, he was conducted to the throne with the usual ceremonies, and in a firm and distinct voice delivered the following most gracious speech:

"My lords and gentlemen:

"It is with great satisfaction that I again meet the great council of the nation assembled in parliament. I am ever anxious to avail myself of your advice and assistance, and I rejoice that the present state of public affairs both at home and abroad, is such as to permit you to proceed, without delay or interruption, to the calm examination of those measures which will be submitted to your consideration.

"I continue to receive from my allies, and generally from all foreign powers, assurances of their unaltered desire to cultivate with me those friendly relations which it is equally my wish to maintain with them; and the intimate union which happily subsists between this country and France, is a pledge to Europe for the continuance of the general peace.

"Desirous on all occasions to use my friendly endeavors to remove causes of disagreement between others, I have offered my mediation in order to compose the difference which has arisen between France and the United States. This offer has been accepted by the king of the French. The answer of the president of the United States has not yet been received; but I entertain a confident hope that a misunderstanding between two nations so enlightened and high minded, will be settled in a manner satisfactory to the feelings, and consistent with the honor of both.

"I have still to lament the continuance of the civil contest in the northern provinces of Spain. The measures which I have taken, and the engagement into which I have entered, sufficiently prove my deep anxiety for its termination; and the prudent and vigorous conduct of the present government of Spain inspires me with the hope that the authority of the queen will soon be established in every part of her dominions, and that the Spanish nation, so long connected by friendship with Great Britain, will again enjoy the blessing of internal tranquility and union.

"I have given directions that there be laid before you the treaty which I have concluded with the queen of Spain for the suppression of the slave trade.

"Gentlemen of the house of commons:

"I have directed the estimates of the year to be prepared, and laid before you without delay. They have been framed with the strictest regard to well-considered economy.

"The necessity for maintaining the maritime strength of the country, and of giving adequate protection to the extended commerce of my subjects, has occasioned some increase in the estimates for the naval branch of the public service.

"The state of the commerce and manufactures of the United Kingdom is highly satisfactory. I lament that any class of my subjects should still suffer distress; and the difficulties which continue to be felt in important branches of agriculture may deserve your inquiry, with the view of ascertaining whether there are any measures which parliament can advantageously adopt for the alleviation of this pressure.

"My lords and gentlemen:

"I have not yet received the further report of the commission appointed to consider the state of the several dioceses of England and Wales; but I have reason to believe that their recommendations upon most of the important subjects submitted to them are nearly prepared. They shall be laid before you without delay; and you will direct your early attention to the ecclesiastical establishment, with the intention of rendering it more efficient for the holy purposes for which it has been instituted.

"Another subject, which will naturally occupy you, is the state of the title in England and Wales, and a measure will be submitted to you having for its end the rendering this mode of providing for the clergy more fixed and certain, and calculated to relieve it from that fluctuation, and from those objections to which it has hitherto been subject.

"The principles of toleration by which I have been invariably guided, must render me desirous of removing any cause of offence or trouble to the consciences of any portion of my subjects, and I am, therefore, anxious that you should consider whether measures may not be framed, which, while they remedy any grievances which affect those who dissent from the doctrine or discipline of the established church, will also be of general advantage to the whole body of the community.

"The speedy and satisfactory administration of justice is the first and most sacred duty of a sovereign; and I earnestly recommend you to consider whether better provisions may not be made for this great purpose in some of the departments of the law, and more particularly in the court of chancery.

"I trust that you will be able to effect a just settlement of the question of title in Ireland, upon such principles as will tend at length to establish harmony and peace in that country.

"You are already in possession of the report of the commission appointed to inquire into the state of the municipal corporations in Ireland, and I entertain the hope that it will be in your power to apply to any defects and evils which may have been shown to exist in those institutions, a remedy founded upon the same principles as those of the acts which have been already passed for England and Scotland."

"A further report of the commission of inquiry into the condition of the poorer classes of my subjects in Ireland will speedily be laid before you. You will approach this subject with the caution due to its importance and difficulty, and the experience of the salutary effect of the act for the amendment of the laws relating to the poor in England and Wales, may in many respects assist your deliberations."

"I rely upon your prudence and wisdom, and upon your determination to maintain, as well as to amend, the laws and institutions of the country; and I commit these questions of domestic policy, to which I have deemed it my duty to direct your attention, into your hands, persuaded that you will so treat them as to increase the happiness and prosperity, by promoting the religion and morality, of my people."

BANK OF THE UNITED STATES.

Bank of the United States, February 20, 1836.

The stockholders met at 12 o'clock M. pursuant to adjournment.

Benj. W. Crowninshield, esq. of Massachusetts, was called to the chair,

Thos. P. Cope, John A. Brown, secretaries.

Nicholas Biddle, esq. the president of the bank, presented to the meeting a certified copy of "an act to repeal the state tax on personal property, and to continue and extend the improvements of the state by rail roads and canals, and to charter a state bank, to be called the United States bank." The president read so much of the said act as relates to the bank, commented upon its various provisions, and recommended it to the acceptance of the stockholders.

Resolutions for accepting the charter were then offered by John Sergeant, esq. and unanimously adopted, after which,

The following resolutions were offered by Henry Nison, esq. and were adopted unanimously:

Whereas, The stockholders of the bank of the United States, convened in general meeting, deem it their duty, before the expiration of the charter granted by congress, to express some of the sentiments with which they are animated in regard to the past administration of the bank, and to the officers by whom it has been conducted: be it therefore

Resolved, That the said stockholders have approved, and do approve, of the administration of the said bank during the last seven years; and that they select this period for their especial approbation, because for nearly the whole of that term the institution has been exposed to both persecution and obloquy, which the public investigation of its transactions, and their undeniable benefit to the nation, have enabled them to know, and entitle them to say were unmerited and unjust.

Resolved, That the said stockholders regard it as their particular duty to make a public expression of their thanks to Nicholas Biddle, the president of the said bank, for the fidelity with which he has executed his trust, and of their admiration for the talents and comprehensive intelligence with which he has arranged and superintended all the parts of this extended institution, to the signal and lasting advantage of the country, and to the establishment of his own reputation.

Resolved, That the thanks of the stockholders be also given to the different boards of directors for the zeal and ability with which they have discharged their respective duties, and for the manner, both faithful and fearless, in which they have united with the president of the said bank in resisting every effort, whether of power or of popular clamor, to deter them from administering the affairs of the bank according to the principles of the charter, in execution of the rights of the stockholders, and for the advancement of the public good.

Resolved, That the thanks of the stockholders be also given to the cashiers and other officers of the institution for their various services, equally intelligent and faithful, in the performance of their respective duties: and that it be recommended to the president and directors to offer to them such testimonial of regard as they may deem proper, and to promote their employment and advancement in such other stations as they may find it expedient to seek, after their connexion with the present bank shall cease.

Benj. W. Crowninshield, esq. submitted the following resolution, which was seconded by John Sergeant, esq. and adopted unanimously:

Resolved, That the directors be requested to cause to be prepared, and presented to Nicholas Biddle, esquire, a splendid service of plate, with suitable inscriptions, in token and commemoration of the gratitude of the stockholders for his faithful, zealous and fearless devotion to their interests.

Mr. Sergeant, having risen to answer a suggestion made by a stockholder, said that, being up, if the meeting would indulge him, he would proceed to say a few words upon the immediate question before them. His first intention, he remarked was to remain entirely silent. He was upon a footing of friendship with the president, and had long been so: and it was a natural impulse of feeling, to consider a tribute to an intimate friend as a thing for which one was to be thankful, participating as it were, on his behalf, in the acceptance, rather than even seeming to promote it, however merited it might be. Reflection had convinced him that there were occasions upon which a different course ought to be pursued, and that this was one of them. I stand here, he said, not to eulogize any one, nor to contend with any one. I stand here as a witness to testify to what I know. And why should the testimony be withheld? He had frequently, he said, been a director of the bank; he had professional relations with the bank, and he had had at all times the freest and most confidential intercourse with the president. These were his means of knowledge; and why should the opportunities they afforded, because they had fixed in him a settled respect and regard for the president, founded in the most assured sense of his merits and services, debar him from bearing that testimony which these very opportunities had peculiarly enabled him to give? On the contrary, he thought it due to the great cause of public morals, to common justice between man and man, to the vindication, at length, of the truth, that those who knew should stand up and testify to what they did know. Under the influence of such considerations, he had determined to suppress all personal feelings that might restrain him, and bear that testimony which he conscientiously believed to be just.

This (he said further) was perhaps the last meeting there would ever be of the stockholders of the bank of the U. States, incorporated under the authority of the government of the U. States. The struggle was over. The strife was at an end. We have nothing more to hope; and, thanks to the legislature of Pennsylvania, actuated by a true Pennsylvania spirit, we have nothing to fear. The bank, incorporated by congress, was at the close of its existence; not in the agony of dissolution, it was true, but quietly, and by an easy process, transferring its capacities and its means to the legal being created by the legislature of the state, under whose powerful protection they would continue to be applied to the benefit of the public. But, still, the bank incorporated by congress touched the end of its existence. It was no longer subject to accident or change. Its history was finished.

The materials for judgment upon it were complete, as when death closes the life of an individual. At this moment, then, he would venture to say, without the least hesitation or doubt, that no man will ever have cause to be ashamed of having been a friend to the bank.

In the early part of its career there may have been errors—errors unavoidably incident, perhaps, to the stage of its existence, and to the objects it was expected to accomplish. Whatever they were, they were injurious only to the stockholders. The people of the United States experienced the full benefits which had been promised, and even in greater measure than any reasonable man could have expected.

During a short period afterwards, the measures deemed necessary to correct those errors fell with distressing weight upon the stockholders, a part of the time yielding them no income at all, and the rest a very reduced one.

It was at this time, and under these circumstances, that the present president had been placed at the head of the institution, where he had continued for the last thirteen years. Of the ability and success with which its affairs had been administered during all that time, the stockholders were fully aware. They had received the most substantial proofs. He need not dwell upon these things. The statement they had just heard was of itself conclusive. There were persons who were, perhaps, unable—there were some, he was afraid, who were not willing—fully and fairly to appreciate the extraordinary skill and talent with which the patriotic care of the common concerns, especially the concerns of the great mercantile portion of the United States, had been invariably reconciled with the interests of the stockholders. And yet it was true that both had been cherished and promoted. When danger threatened; when credit was trembling; when confidence was shaken; whenever, in a word, a revulsion was threatened, with its disastrous train of consequences, this bank, strong in its power, stronger in its inclination to do good, anticipated and averted the crisis. By judicious liberality, it prevented or relieved the pressure, it encouraged by its example and support, it cheered by its countenance.

Whatever may be the merits of a board of directors, every one knows that the chief part of the labor and responsibility is with the permanent officer who is the head of the institution. To him, attaches the censure, where censure is imputed. To him of right, is justly due the praise, where zeal, industry, ability and untiring devotion are manifest in his fruits.

There are points of character in that officer, which, if it were not to be almost too personal, deserve also to be noticed, as qualifications which have aided him in the performance of his duties, always arduous, at times extremely trying. I have seen him (said Mr. S.) within the last seven years, under provocations sufficiently exciting—too much, almost, one would have thought, to be borne with composure. I have seen him assailed with menaces, enough to cause alarm and despondency. But I never saw him irritated, and I never saw him dismayed. When those who were about him yielded to indignant feeling, he calmed and tranquilized them by his cheerful good humor. When they were almost ready to despair, he animated and assured them by his undaunted firmness. However the storm might rage without, there was peace and order within the institution. The ordinary business went on with calm regularity. I am not able to recall to my recollection, nor do I believe there exists a single instance, in which the smallest detail was neglected in consequence of the engrossing demands of the war which was waged against the bank.

Let it be further said, in justice to the administration of this great institution, that its measures never were aggressive. Asailed as it was by principalities and powers, it stood upon its defence, as it rightfully might do, vigorously and fearlessly, but never exceeding the limits of a just and necessary defence. If it has offended, it was because it resisted unlawful aggression, and would not tamely surrender its right or its independence at the bidding of any man, however powerful.

The unvarying courtesy and kindness of the president, in the business of the bank, as well as in his social intercourse, did not fail to win regard for the institution as well as for himself. He held many attached even when their party affinities would have inclined them to an opposite direction, and they did not separate themselves until dragged away in spite of themselves by the irresistible attraction of party gravitation. An enemy to the bank he never made. Enemies, indeed, he has none, that I know of, but such as have become so because he would not betray or surrender the trusts confided to him by the stockholders.

It is fit and just now, in this final meeting, when those whose interests have been resolutely protected at the risk of his own peace, and not without hazard to his reputation, are to review his conduct, that there should be a clear judgment, and an expressive and enduring record of it. As already intimated, this is due to the cause of public morals, and to justice between man and man. Hereafter, if search should be made among the rubbish of the years that are past, some things may be found in the wanton license of the press, which, unexplained, or falling into the hands of persons unacquainted with the times, might lead to the belief that this was indeed a strange sort of a bank, and the president of it a very strange sort of man. The record of this day's proceedings will be their triumphant contradiction, and the memorial of it, proposed to be presented to the president, will be to him and to his descendants a grateful trophy of a victory won at last by integrity and truth over unmerited and unmeasured calumny.

In submitting the charter to the meeting, Mr. Biddle explained in detail its provisions, comparing them with the corresponding parts of the existing charter. We understood him to say that the new charter had the advantage over the old one:

1st. In its longer duration—thirty years—while the present charter was for only twenty years, and the charter granted by congress, and vetoed by the president, was for only fifteen years.

2d. In the enlargement of its powers, especially its authority to deal in stocks of the United States or of Pennsylvania, and in all the improvement stocks of the state.

3d. In confining the rate of discount at half per cent. for thirty days to loans in the state of Pennsylvania, leaving the bank elsewhere to the rate of interest fixed by the local laws.

4th. In its exemption from the expense of doing the business of the government, in loan offices and pension agencies, and in transferring the public funds without charge.

5th. In its total separation from all the officers of the general government—an unnatural connexion, beneficial neither to the bank nor the government.

6th. In its not being obliged to incur the expense of establishing branches.

The disadvantages were—

1st. The loss of the right of establishing branches; but this he did not regard as a matter of regret, as the new bank would not probably desire to establish any.

2d. The loss of the public deposits. These were undoubtedly a considerable benefit, but it was diminished by the necessity which attended it of doing the public business, and the gratuitous transfer of the public funds; and although these deposits have been more than two years withdrawn, the bank still prospers, and its dividends were undiminished.

The next consideration was the bonus.

This consists of—

A cash payment of.....	$2,500,000
An annual payment, amounting in the whole to.....	2,000,000
A subscription to various improvements, amounting to.....	675,000

Making an aggregate of.....$5,175,000

An obligation to lend to the state six millions, either at four per cent. at par or five per cent. with a premium of ten per cent. making a gain of.....600,000

And a total profit to the state of.....$5,775,000

And finally, an obligation to make temporary loans to the state, of one million at a time, at an interest of four per cent.

These, he said, were undoubtedly large sums; they gave great benefits to the state. To a new institution they would be oppressive; but the object of the bank was to deal largely and liberally with the state, and to give her every advantage consistent with the interests of the stockholders. It was fortunate that the interests of the state and the bank were the same. That charter was better for the state than a new charter; it was worth more to the present bank than it would be to a new bank, and the present bank could afford to give more than a new bank.

1st. The charter was worth more to the state than a charter to a new bank. The question is not to bring into the state a new capital, which might be impracticable, but to retain an existing capital, which would leave the state, and not merely leave the state, but go into the service of its neighbors to make rival improvements to its own. It would be to lose the advantage of being, as it has been for forty years, the seat of the great commercial and banking institution of the United States, and thus fall from its high standing in the union. By this charter it appropriates to its own exclusive use a vast amount of capital, which alone is wanted to develop her native resources. Here it is already collected in the state, belonging mainly to persons out of the state, but left here to be managed by Pennsylvanians, and for the benefit of Pennsylvania. After all, too, the bonus is a very trifling part of the advantage to the state. The great benefit is the employment of the capital among her industrious citizens, the bonus being in fact only a part of the capital paid immediately to the state, for the privilege of lending to her citizens the remainder.

2d. The charter was worth more to the present bank than to a new one.

Because the capital was all paid, and ready for immediate employment, with the expense of time and money necessary to collect a new capital, even if it could be obtained;

Because it supercedes the necessity of winding up immediately its large outstanding concerns, in which much loss would be inevitable;

Because, bearing the same name, continuing in the same place and with the same organization, it enjoys its established credit, as well as its old connections, abroad and at home, and it inherits a circulation of twenty-two millions;

Because, although it could doubtless have obtained a charter elsewhere on much lower terms, wherever it went it would have been an exile, instead of continuing to be what there has been for forty years, the bank of the United States at Philadelphia.

3d. If it be worth more to the present bank than to any new one, the present bank can afford to pay more than any new one.

The bank has, for many years, divided annually more than half a million less than its earnings, and thus accumulated a large reserved fund, which it can now employ, instead of dividing it among its stockholders, in the purchase of the new charter. He then entered into details of these surplus funds, which showed—

That the bank will be able, out of its reserved profits, to pay the whole bonus of $2,500,000, and provide for the annual payments of $100,000 for 20 years.

To these were to be added any profit which might grow out of the sale of seven millions of new stock, to be substituted for the same amount of stock now owned by the United States government.

He concluded that, notwithstanding the bonus was large and greatly beneficial to the state, though not to be compared, in point of importance, to the indirect advantages which this charter would confer on all the great interests of Pennsylvania, still the bank would be able to meet it by its past economies.

He then proceeded to explain the process of winding up the present concerns according to which every stockholder, instead of waiting for a series of years the return of his capital by small instalments, might in a few days be put in possession, not of his original investment of one hundred dollars a share, but of a new share, which he could dispose of for one hundred and twenty, or one hundred and thirty dollars.

He dwelt emphatically on the fact that every stockholder would have this advantage. "It would have been far easier," he concluded, (addressing the chairman, Mr. Crowninshield, of Massachusetts), "it would have been far easier for us, of Pennsylvania, to have built up a small institution for the exclusive benefit of the Pennsylvania stockholders, discarding those who lived beyond her own borders. But no such selfish calculation tempted the stockholders of Pennsylvania, nor influenced the councils of our noble commonwealth, which, while faithful to its own interests, was not the less true to its own honor. She gave the glorious example that they who confide their fortunes to its protection will never be deserted nor deceived, and she has this day, by this charter, placed the humblest citizen of the remotest state of the union, and the unknown and obscure inhabitant of distant countries, on an equal footing with the wealthiest men in Pennsylvania. This is a great and glorious triumph, and accordingly I perform one of the most delightful duties of my life by offering this charter, which will hereafter place your fortunes under the protection of the laws of Pennsylvania. Take it; for you have earned it by your constancy to the institution. May you enjoy it long, for you have well deserved it."

After the resolutions of thanks to the president, directors and officers of the bank, and for the service of plate to the president, were unanimously adopted, Mr. Biddle rose, and addressed a few words to the meeting.

When I said that in presenting this charter, which conferred so many benefits on my native state while it protected all your interests, I performed one of the most pleasing duties of my life, I scarcely thought it possible to add to my gratification. I was mistaken. The kind expressions of personal regard which you have just addressed to me have rendered that duty doubly grateful. I thank you for them cordially—I feel them deeply and intensely. I feel them the more, because your considerate praise extends to all those excellent officers with whom I have been so long and so happily associated—officers whose intelligence and urbanity softened the severity of duty—and who, wanting no discipline but their own well-regulated conduct, were the friends rather than the agents of those who guided their labors. If my respected colleagues will allow me to speak in their names, I will return their acknowledgments too for your approbation—the only reward they have ever received for their services, and in their estimation the best reward which they ever could receive. I should wrong my own feelings, if I did not take, this occasion to bear my willing testimony how well that reward is deserved. During our long and anxious struggle for your interests, not one of them, no, not one of them, ever faltered in the path of duty, or sacrificed the smallest of your rights to propitiate power, or to seek favor for themselves. Certainly never had any body of gentlemen more faithful representatives, and I will proudly add, never had any presiding officer, in times of danger, more stout-hearted colleagues or more true-hearted friends.

Allow me to add a very few words on an ungrateful topic—myself; and if I should overstep the narrow limits natural to such a subject, you must pardon the error into which you have yourselves tempted me, since the approval of such friends might well raise the humblest in his own esteem. It is the first time and it shall be the last.

It is now nearly 16 years since I first entered your service. It is more than thirteen years since a general meeting of stockholders from various parts of the union invited me to the station I now occupy. I assumed it with a deep conviction that more development of its powers and a more extended usefulness might be given to our noble institution. It was then conceded, and so represented by the bank to congress, that owing to an organic defect in its formation—chiefly to the universal receivability of its notes—the bank could not accomplish the object of its creation, the diffusion of a sound currency, and the regulation of the exchanges. Believing the difficulties not insuperable, and feeling that every citizen, however humble, should strive to benefit his country, my ambition was to establish for this nation a better system of currency and of exchanges than existed in any other nation. After years of gradual and anxious experiment, I may be permitted to say that the subject has become historical, I may be permitted to say that, under the administration of the bank of the U. States, the currency and the exchanges—the basis of all commercial prosperity—attained a perfection not exceeded, if equalled elsewhere. In my deliberate judgment, there exists in no country so extensive as the United States, any currency which, for the soundness of it, the general confidence in it, its universal and equal value, is comparable to that furnished by the bank of the United States, and that in no other country are the internal exchanges effected more safely, easily and cheaply than they were by the bank of the United States. While the community felt these benefits, the state institutions always found in it not an ungenerous rivalry, but a firm and constant support, sometimes checking the rash, often warning the indiscreet, but to all liberal, sincere and indulgent friend. Nor did these efforts require any sacrifice of its interests. On the contrary its prosperity grew with its usefulness. Its circulation rose from four and a half millions to twenty-five millions—its exchange operations from less than two millions to twenty-three millions—and its profits were actually doubled by the enlargement of its commercial sphere.

Having seen this, my ambition was satisfied. I thought I had done my duty to my country, and I was about to ask leave to retire from your service, when an unhappy controversy arose between the bank and one of its partners, the government, and I felt bound to stand by the institution while its interest seemed in jeopardy. It was an original misfortune in the structure of the bank that it was in any way connected with persons in office. The instincts of all political power make that association dangerous—useful to neither party, injurious to both. Accordingly I saw, or thought I saw, in our official associate, a design to subject to personal and political influences the movements of the bank. I knew that such a purpose, if defeated, might destroy the bank, but, if successful, would make it not worth preserving, and that it was better for the bank, and far better for the free institutions of the country, that the bank should perish in that struggle, rather than prolong its existence by surviving its independence. My effort then was, at all times, and at all hazards, to maintain the rights of the institution, respectfully, fearlessly, calmly, yielding nothing to the madness of popular delusion, compromising nothing with official power. How that strife was conducted, you all know; how it has ended, is proved by the events of this day, which render the bank safer, stronger and more prosperous than it ever was. Of that unfortunate associate I desire to speak with all gentleness and forbearance, nor will I mar the pleasures of this meeting by any recurrence to the past. He will soon leave us. He shall carry away not only a just, but a generous portion of our earnings; but then he will depart in peace—forgiven and forgotten.

And now once more, and for the last time, let me thank you. I have long served this institution. With what fidelity and devotedness, my own heart attests. That I have not been wholly unsuccessful, is manifested by your parting kindness, which, to the last hour of my life, I shall remember with a proud gratitude.

LEGISLATURE OF VIRGINIA.

House of Delegates—March 2.

LETTER FROM THE HON. JOHN TYLER.

Mr. Smith of G. presented a communication from the hon. John Tyler, which was read as follows.

Washington, Feb. 29, 1836.

To the speaker and members of the general assembly of Virginia.

GENTLEMEN: Certain resolutions of the general assembly, instructing their senators in the congress of the United States, to introduce and to vote for a resolution to expunge the journal of a previous senate in the particulars therein mentioned, and pointing out the precise manner in which the act shall be performed, have been made known to me. After the most deliberate examination which I am capable of bestowing upon them, and with a sincere desire to conform my conduct to the wishes of the general assembly, I find it impossible to reconcile the performance of the prescribed task, with the obligations of the solemn oath which I have taken to support the constitution of the United States. With what promptitude I should comply with the instructions of the legislature, if compliance was permitted me, may readily be inferred from my past course of conduct; and I beg your indulgence, gentlemen, whilst I advert to the most prominent incidents of my life, in connection with the great question of instruction. I was very young when I first took my seat in the house of delegates, to which I had been elected within a few days after I had attained the age of 21. The then senators from Virginia, (Messrs. Giles and Brent), stood obnoxious to the charge of having disregarded the instructions of the legislature, which had been adopted on the motion of a gentleman, then a distinguished member, (gov. Barbour), to vote against re-chartering the bank of the United States. The first, while he voted against the bank, denied the right of the legislature to instruct him—the last disregarded the instructions altogether, and voted for a bank. Impelled by no other motives than to uphold the legislature in its right to instruct its deputed organs, I introduced a resolution disapproving the course which had been pursued by the senators. My motive in doing so, was single and unmixed. I was too young to seek profit by their overthrow. The resolution thus introduced by me, passed into other hands, and was substituted by other resolves, which were finally adopted by the two houses of assembly by large and overwhelming majorities. At the age of twenty-five I took my seat in the house of representatives of the United States. The repeal of the compensation law soon came under discussion. I came in, to supply a vacancy, and brought with me the wishes of my constituents in regard to that measure. I made them known, and claimed the repeal of the law, as due to the well-ascertained wishes of the people. This brought into discussion the obligation of instructions; and I contended for the right, under the same restrictions and limitations as had been laid down in the resolutions before alluded to. I now reaffirm the opinion at all times heretofore expressed by me, that instructions are mandatory, provided they do not require a violation of the constitution or the commission of an act of moral turpitude. When acting under an oath, the public agent, whether a senator or a juror, is bound by obligations of a higher and more controlling character than can proceed from any earthly source. The constitution of the United States is the original and primary letter of instructions, supreme over all, and binding upon all. For, the agent who is sworn to support it, to violate it knowingly and intentionally, would be an act of the grossest immorality and most unmitigated debasement. Such is the condition in which, in my view of the subject, obedience to your instructions would place me. It is known to you, gentlemen, that on my entering the senate, the only oath which I took was an oath to support the constitution of the United States; to support it in all and each of its provisions; to yield it neither to force, persuasion, nor expediency. No matter what the object; should its attainment confer upon me the greatest personal advantage, still to remain unswayed—not to touch that forbidden fruit. I entered into a covenant with my Creator—to break which, would not fail to place in my bosom a promethean vulture, to tear and devour me. The obligation, then, to obey an instruction which calls upon me to break that covenant, cannot possibly exist. I should be unworthy the confidence of all honorable men, if I could be induced, under any circumstances, to commit an act of deliberate perjury. Instead of a seat in the senate, I should richly deserve to be put in the pillory and to lose both my ears as an indelible mark of my baseness—and such would be the sentence which the laws of Virginia would pronounce against me. You have admitted the truth of this position in the alternatives presented in your second resolution. Between those alternatives I cannot hesitate to choose. It is not for every difference of opinion between the representative and constituent, that the constituent would necessarily require the resignation of the representative. In the course of a somewhat long political life, it must have occurred that my opinions have been variant from the opinions of those I represent; but in presenting to me the alternative of resignation in this instance, you give me to be distinctly informed that the accomplishment of your object is regarded as of such primary importance, that my resignation is desired, if compliance cannot be yielded. I am bound to consider you, as in this, fairly representing the sentiments of our common constituents, the people of Virginia, to whom alone you are amenable if you have mistaken their wishes. My position in regard to this whole subject, is of a character to preclude me from going into abstractions. I do not hesitate, on the contrary, to declare that, if you had, as the accredited organs of the people, addressed me a request to vacate my seat in the senate, your request would have had with me the force of law—not a day or an hour could I desire to remain in the senate beyond that hour wherein I came to be informed that it was the settled wish of the people of Virginia that I should retire from their service. That people have honored me with the highest offices within their gift. If the talents which I have brought into their service be humble, I shall have at least brought fidelity to their interests. No where else have I looked for reward, but to their approbation. I have served under four administrations, and might doubtlessly, by a course of subservency and sycophancy, have obtained what is called by some preferment. But what could have compensated for the baseness of my prostitution, and the betrayal of the confidence reposed in me by a generous people? The executive files furnish no record of my name as an applicant for any of the crumbs which have fallen from the executive table. I repeat, that I have looked exclusively to the people of Virginia; and when they have extended to me their confidence for twenty-odd years—when I am indebted to them for whatsoever of credit and standing I possess in the world, I cannot and will not permit myself to remain in the senate for a moment beyond the time that their accredited organs shall instruct me that my services are no longer acceptable. If gratitude for the past did not, my own conscious weakness would control my course. What would it profit the country or myself, for me to remain in the senate against their wishes? By retaining my place in opposition to their fixed, declared and settled will, I should aid no cause—advance no great purpose—be powerless for good, and provoke only to harm—reposing on my feeble strength, I should vainly flatter myself that I could with my single arm sustain the constitution, and keep back what I might consider the tide of error, when in very truth I should but excite the popular prejudices more strongly, and immediately endanger the constitution by my very efforts to sustain it.

In resigning then, gentlemen, into your hands, my place in the senate of the United States, to which I was called by your predecessors, I trust I shall be indulged in a brief exposition of the reasons which have led me to the conclusion, that to obey your instructions would be to violate the constitution of the United States. I shall do so boldly and fearlessly, but with all becoming respect, and with all the brevity in my power. The senate is ordered by the congress to keep a journal of its proceedings, and to publish it from time to time. This injunction is thus solemnly imposed upon the aggregate body, and on each individual senator. Whatever shall be done, shall be faithfully recorded by the secretary, and shall be faithfully kept—not for an hour, and then to be defaced—not for a day, and then to be erased; nor for a year, and then to be expunged—but forever, as a perpetual witness, a faithful history, by which the conduct, the motives, the actions of men, shall be judged, not by those of the present day only, but through all time. It was a wise custom among the Chinese, which required the biography of each emperor to be written before the close of his life, and placed before him, so as to give him foreknowledge of what the world would think of him after his death. It was designed to restrain his evil passions—to curb the exercise of despotic sway. It addressed itself to his ambition, and excited within him a longing for an immortality in the gratitude and admiration of succeeding ages. But this provision in our constitution is still wiser. Each senator writes daily his own biography. He is required to record his own acts, and takes an oath to keep that record and to publish it from time to time. The applause or censure of his fellow-men is not postponed until he has descended to the tomb. It is daily uttered by the living generation. How powerful are the inducements thus addressed to each member to be faithful to the trust confided to him! How much to be admired the wisdom of our ancestors in framing the constitution! If this was its only feature, their title to immortality would be established.

This simple provision is one of the great securities of American liberty. It takes nothing upon trust. If the senate kept no journal, it would be a secret conclave, where deeds the most revolting might be performed in secrecy and darkness. The train might there be laid, the mine prepared, and the first knowledge of the treason might be the explosion, and consequent overthrow of free government. Liberty could not coexist with such a state of things. There is no liberty where there is no responsibility, and there can be no responsibility where nothing is known. To have a secretary seated at the table of the senate, to write down its proceedings, and to claim for itself the right to cancel, obliterate or expunge what he had written, is equivalent to having no journal at all—a mockery and a fraud. The journal of the morning may be cancelled in the evening—that of to-day may be expunged on to-morrow—cancel it in any way, whether by black or red marks, whether with circles or by straight lines, it ceases to be a journal, and that which was, is not. The journal is to be published, but there is no journal. There was one yesterday, but ere it can reach the press, it is cancelled, marked out or expunged. These are the necessary results of obedience to your instructions. If that journal contain a transaction discreditable to the senate, I should preserve it as a perpetual monument of its disgrace. If to a party leader, I will give him and his friends who may temporarily have the ascendancy, no warrant to erase or blur the page on which such an act of misconduct is recorded. I should be afraid, after performing such a deed, if Virginia is what she once was—and I do not doubt it—to return within her limits. The execrations of her people would be thundered in my ears. The soil which had been trod by her heroes and statesmen would furnish me no resting place. I should feel myself guilty, most guilty; and however I might succeed in concealing myself from the sight of men, I could not, in my view of the subject, save myself from the upbraidings of my own perjured conscience. How could I return to mix among her people, to share their hospitality and kindness, with the declaration on my lips, "I have violated my oath for office, and sooner than surrender my place in the senate, have struck down the constitution?"

If the senate has a right to touch the journal under instructions, it has a right to do so without—if to cancel a part, a right to expunge the whole; if to use ink from a pen, a right to pour it from a bottle—to destroy the journal in any other way—to burn it—to make a bonfire of all that is bright and glorious in our history. I know it has been said that the process directed to be adopted by your resolution is not designed to expunge. I cannot believe this, and reject it as equally injurious to yourselves and unjust to those you represent. You direct the words "expunged by order of the senate," to be written across the resolutions on which you propose to make war. I will not believe that you merely design to ensnare my conscience—much less will I indulge for a moment the idea, that you direct a falsehood to be recorded by me. Those do not understand you who make such ascriptions, and I am not misled by them. The general assembly of a proud and lofty state, is incapable of a mere quibble, and such an one as would disgrace a king's jester. No, gentlemen; the act which you direct to be performed, is designed to be, and is equivalent to, an actual obliteration in all its practical results. The manner of accomplishing this act of cancellation, is wholly immaterial. In publishing this journal, from time to time hereafter, the resolution thus cancelled, cannot be published as a part of it. It is declared to be expunged upon its face. But, if in this I could possibly be mistaken—if, after all, it is merely child's play—the making a few flourishes, and putting the secretary of the senate to the trouble to write a few unmeaning words, the question would not be changed. Such as is the journal, so shall it be kept, unaltered in a letter, unchanged in a comma—the same as it now is, "to the last syllable of recorded time." Such is the fiat of the constitution. There is not a clerk or deputy clerk in the commonwealth of Virginia who would execute such an order in regard to his records. The people would be alive to the question, and in vindication of their rights, would expunge the court sooner than permit the record containing the titles to their estates to be cancelled in any manner whatever. They surely cannot take less interest in the preservation of the constitution, the great charter of all their rights.

The effort has been made to hunt up precedents to justify this act. The pages of English parliamentary history have been ransacked, and an array has been made of examples drawn from the times of the Jameses and Georges of England. With equal force might examples be quoted to justify an American president in executing capitally a citizen of any one of the states without the form of a trial. He might equally be justified in the use of the bow-string, because such is the power of the grand signior. The power of the English parliament is unlimited. So is that of many of the states of this union, in regard to this particular subject. No precedent can have force to overthrow an express enactment of the constitution. Under its provision, the senate is directed to keep a journal of its proceedings. If I were permitted to look elsewhere than to that constitution, I would go to Virginia for bright and glorious examples to conduct me in safety. The first in point of prominence, although not in point of time, is the course attempted to be adopted by the king's party in the house of burgesses in 1765, as to the celebrated resolutions of Patrick Henry, of that period. These resolutions were declaratory of the rights of British America. After their adoption, many of those who voted for them left the city of Williamsburg, thereby giving to the opposite party the accidental ascendancy; and they immediately formed the resolution to expunge them from the journal. But by a stroke of policy as bold as it was successful, Mr. Henry saved those resolutions from being expunged, which form at this day one of the brightest pages of Virginia history, and recorded on any man's tomb, would eternize his fame. And yet, to expunge them from the journal, was regarded as much an act of duty by those who proposed it, as you, gentlemen, can esteem it to be in the case under consideration. They failed—and my prayer, as a citizen of a free country, is that you too may be unsuccessful—your posterity may have good cause to rejoice in your failure.

Another example, almost as illustrious, is to be found in the conduct of Robert Beverly, during the administration of lord Culpeper. The history of the incidents of that transaction are not only instructive, but highly interesting. Lord Culpeper, armed with all the authority of the king of England, his master, ordered that a resolution adopted by the house of burgesses during the administration of Herbert Jeffries, should be expunged from their records, "as highly derogatory to his majesty's prerogatives." Robert Beverly was clerk to the house of burgesses. Every effort was made to induce him to produce the journal in order to have it expunged. He was subjected to all manner of persecutions; but he gloried in his sufferings, and his noble spirit rose in proportion to his persecutions. He peremptorily refused to comply, alleging "that his master, the house of burgesses, had alone a right to make such a demand, and that their authority alone he durst or would obey." And I, too, reply to these orders which are now given me—that I will not expunge the records of the senate until the constitution, which, while it is permitted to remain, is master over all, shall be changed, altered or abolished. You will have full opportunity, gentlemen, to appoint another in my place. For my part, I will not consent to be made an instrument to accomplish such an object—nor shall I envy any successor whom you may send on such a mission.

Had your resolutions directed me to repeal or rescind the resolution of the senate, I would have obeyed your orders, although with great reluctance. I would, nevertheless, have felt myself constrained to do so by my recognition of your right to instruct me. That proceeding would have reversed and annulled the act complained of. If your object was to vindicate the president in the authority which he assumed and still exercises over the public money, and esteemed it necessary in order to do so, to have had your opinions expressed through me in the senate chamber, then should have been faithfully represented. His vindication, after all cannot consist in the form in which it may be urged. It is to be found alone in the legislative expression of opinion; and even if your declarations in his behalf were confined to your own journals, the historian would not fail to avail himself of them as efficiently as if they stood emblazoned on the heavens. From my knowledge of you, I am sure that you would not be willing to pull down the constitution unnecessarily and without object.

In your effort to vindicate the president, you have cast on me, in common with others, the very reproach which you are pleased to regard so offensive in reference to him. You have publicly, and before the world, declared a resolution for which I voted, to be "subversive of the rights of the house of representatives and the fundamental principles of free government." If you design to charge me with impurity of motive in the vote thus given, your accusation would imply the highest censure. But this I do not ascribe to you. You intend to say no more than that your judgment and opinion differs from that expressed by me upon the subject out of which grew the resolution of the senate, and that the senate committed an error, which, in its effects, is calculated to subvert "the rights of the house of representatives and the fundamental principles of free government." The censure which your resolution conveys, implies a want of correct judgment, on my part, in voting for that resolution, and nothing more. If this be your meaning—and I will not permit myself to think otherwise—I am yet to learn how I incur the hazard of subverting "the rights of the house of representatives and the fundamental principles of free government," by having declared in substance, what as a member of the senate I did by my vote declare, that the president had mistaken his course, and that his conduct was "in derogation of the constitution and laws." Have I done more in this, than you have done in your declaration? And if not, I submit it in all candor to your dispassionate judgment to say whether, if I was liable to trial on impeachment before you, you would consider yourselves as having already pronounced upon my guilt in advance. I should certainly not dream of excepting to you as my judges; because, resting on my integrity of motive, I should feel confident of acquittal. There can be no guilt without a criminal design—and I am sure you would be among the last to ascribe to the president any criminality of design. Am I to understand you as declaring, that because the house of representatives may originate an impeachment against the president or other officer of the government, the senate has no right to express an opinion as to any act of the president or such other officer? No matter what may be the act, even if it annihilates the powers of the senate—has it no power inherent in all other bodies, of self-protection and defence? A Brennus may invade the body and pluck it by the beard, and yet according to this, it has no authority to strike. Go to that venerable patriarch of Montpelier, (Mr. Madison), and ask him whether, in framing the constitution, he designed that the senate should be a mere motionless stock, or a vigilant sentinel to give notice of the approach of danger to that very constitution which it is sworn to support—whether the representatives of the sovereign states are such mere automata as to move only when they are bidden, and to sit in their places like statues, to record such edicts as may come to them? If the president recommends a measure which the senate believes impolitic, shall it not say so? So, if he adopt a course which he may believe to be correct, but which the senate thinks unconstitutional—may it not say so? And does its so declaring tend to subvert or to support "the fundamental principles of free government?" You surely can be at no loss to decide. The senate, in the instance of the late postmaster general, (Mr. Barry), who had contracted loans in his official character for the use of his department without authority, declared by an unanimous vote, that his proceedings in this respect were in violation of the constitution—and yet no complaint has ever been uttered against that resolution of the senate. How comes it about, that anathemas have not been thundered in the ears of the senate because of that vote? Why is not that ordered to be expunged? Why is not that also declared to be "subversive of the rights of the house of representatives, and of the fundamental principles of free government?" Is not the error as vital when it affects William T. Barry, as when it affects Andrew Jackson? If so, every motive of generosity prompted an interference in behalf of the first. He was powerless, and is now in his grave. I had a personal regard for Mr. Barry. He was talented, and his fault lay in being too confiding. Honest himself, he did not suspect others, and they deceived him. This was the rock on which he split. In voting for that resolution I did not design to impute to him moral guilt: I did not believe it—I designed nothing more than to vindicate the constitution. I thought that in doing so, I gave support to "the fundamental principles of free government," and never once dreamed that I had done an act in the remotest degree, subversive of the rights of the house of representatives.

But say that in all this I was wrong. In voting for the resolution of the senate, against which, you are now so indignant, I did no more than carry out the people's declared views of the legislature, as expressed in their resolutions of that day, and which were passed by overwhelming majorities of more than two to one in both houses. The terms employed by the legislature were strong and decided. The conduct of the president was represented as dangerous and alarming. I was told that it could not be too strongly condemned—that he had manifested a disposition greatly to extend his official influence—and because, with these declarations before me, I voted for a resolution which declares "that the president in the late executive proceedings, has assumed upon himself authority and power not conferred by the constitution and laws, but in derogation of both," I am now ostracised by your fiat, which requires obedience or resignation. Compare the resolutions of the general assembly of that day with the above resolution, and its mildness will be entirely obvious. I submit, with all due deference to yourselves, what is to be the condition of a senator in future, if, for yielding obedience to the wishes of one legislature, he is to be called upon to resign by another. If he disobeys the first, he is contemned—if he obeys the last, he violates his oath, and becomes an object of scorn and contempt. I respectfully ask, if this be the mode by which the great right of instructions is to be sustained, may it not degenerate into an engine of faction—an instrument to be employed by the outs to get in? Instead of being directed to noble purposes—to the advancement of the cause of civil liberty—may it not be converted into a political guillotine, devoted to the worst of purposes? Nor are these anticipations at all weakened by the fact, as it exists in the case now under consideration, that several of those who constitute the present majority in the general assembly, and who now call upon me to expunge the journal or to resign my seat, actually voted for the very resolutions of a previous session to which I have referred.*

I have thus, gentlemen, with frankness, but without designing offence, expressed to you my opinions. With the question, whether the resolution of the senate which you direct to be expunged, be true or false, I have nothing in this place to do. If false, to rescind or repeal it, was to annihilate its force as effectually as to cancel it. You have preferred to adopt a different course. I dare not touch the journal of the senate. The constitution forbids it. In the midst of all the agitations of party, I have heretofore stood by that sacred instrument. It is the only post of honor and of safety. Parties are continually changing. The men of to-day give place to the men of to-morrow; and the idols which one set worship, the next destroy. The only object of my political worship shall be the constitution of my country. I will not be the instrument to overthrow it. A seat in the senate is sufficiently elevated to fill the measure of any man's ambition; and as an evidence of the sincerity of my convictions that your resolutions cannot be executed without violating my oath, I surrender into your hands three unexpired years of my term. I shall carry with me into retirement, the principles which I brought with me into public life—and by the surrender of the high station to which I was called by the voice of the people of Virginia, I shall set an example to my children, which shall teach them to regard as nothing place and office, when either to be attained or held at the sacrifice of honor. I am, gentlemen, your fellow citizen,

JOHN TYLER.

On motion of Mr. Smith of G. the letter was laid upon the table, and Mr. S. moved that 10,000 copies be printed for distribution throughout the state.

Mr. Botts moved to amend the motion, and that 25,000 copies be printed. Mr. Smith accepted this modification of his motion.

On this question considerable discussion took place, in which Messrs. Brown, of P. Botts, Gilmer, Witcher, Dorman, Gregory, Summers, Stanard and Brooke supported, and Messrs. Miller, Harrison, Garland, of M. Watkins, Woolfolk, Madison and Holleman opposed the motion.

Mr. Miller moved that 1,000 copies be printed.

The ayes and noes having been ordered at the call of Mr. Benton, on the motion to print 25,000 copies, the vote was taken and decided in the negative as follows:

*We find here the following note in the "National Intelligencer" which is not printed in the "Richmond Enquirer's" copy of Mr. Tyler's letter—

The following is a list of the names of the members of the present general assembly who voted, except the first two named, for the first, and all for the second resolution, and who have now voted for the present expunging orders, to wit:

Thomas Sloan, of the same house.

Stafford H. Parker, speaker of the senate.

Archibald R. Harwood, Samuel L. Hays, John W. Nash, William Shands, Francis Billingsly, William Bayse.

This is the first time that a senator has been forced to resign for obeying instructions, and that by the very men who gave them.

LETTER FROM B. W. LEIGH, ESQ.

TO THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF VIRGINIA.

To the honorable Stafford H. Parker, speaker of the senate, and the honorable Linn Banks, speaker of the house of Delegates of Virginia.

Senate chamber, Washington, March 2, 1836.

GENTLEMEN: I am honored with your letter of the 24th ultimo, enclosing me a copy of the preamble and resolutions of the general assembly, upon the subject of expunging from the journal of the senate of the United States a resolution of that body, and requesting me to lay the same before the senate.

I adhere to the doctrine of the right of instruction, as laid down in the resolutions of the general assembly of February, 1812, taken in the plain and obvious sense, and in the full extent, in which it is there expressed; and I shall continue, not only to respect, but also to maintain it, to the utmost of my ability. I deem, indeed, an important part of the great right of state interposition, as explained and enforced in the memorable resolutions which have illustrated the session of the general assembly of 1799-1800; and, in my opinion, this right of instruction will be found of inestimable value, on all occasions that may arise, presenting questions concerning the just boundaries of power between the federal and state governments. If, then, the general assembly had instructed me to give a vote, according to its sense of propriety, on a constitutional question which I could consider as at all doubtful, especially on a question on which the public mind had been long and deliberately exercised, on which men's judgments had been formed under the influence of no party or temporary excitement, but of dispassionate reason, and yet remained divided and balanced; I should, in such a case, have followed the judgment of the general assembly, though it had been contrary to my own. For this would not be to violate my oath of office, but only to renounce all vainglorious pretensions to infallibility, and to pay a proper and conscientious deference to the wisdom of the general assembly. If the general assembly had instructed me not to vote for a particular measure, on the ground that it held the measure unconstitutional, then, as it could hardly be unconstitutional to comply with such negative instruction, I should have had no hesitation in yielding obedience to it, however clearly the measure, so disapproved, might appear to my mind constitutional and wise. And as to questions of mere policy, involving no point of constitutional right, I can hardly conceive a case in which I should find difficulty in conforming my vote with instructions given me by the general assembly. But I do not hold myself bound to obey, and I cannot obey, any instruction that commands me to do an act which, in my conscientious opinion, would be, in itself, a plain violation of the constitution, and, in its consequences, dangerous and mischievous in the extreme.

While I thus declare my adherence to the doctrine of the right of instruction asserted by the general assembly in 1812, which, sincerely believing it to be just and true, I then lent my humble aid to maintain, I beg it may be distinctly understood that if, upon more mature reflection, I thought the principle wrong, neither the pride of opinion, nor a sense of the advantages which public men usually derive from maintaining their consistency, nor a fear of the reproaches which inconsistency always incurs, (unless, indeed, it be backed with power), would withhold me from renouncing it.

The first of the resolutions you have transmitted to me instructs the senators from Virginia, in the congress of the United States, "to introduce and vote for a resolution, directing the resolution of the senate of the 28th of March, 1834, declaring 'that the president, in the late executive proceeding, in relation to the public revenue, has assumed upon himself authority and power not conferred by the constitution and laws, but in derogation of both,' to be expunged from the journal of the senate of the United States, by causing black lines to be drawn around the said resolution, as it stands on the original manuscript journal, and these words plainly written across the face of the said resolution and entry—'Expunged by order of the senate of the United States.'"

I have reconsidered the resolution of the senate disapproved of by the general assembly, in reference, as well to its intrinsic propriety, as to the constitutional competency of the senate to adopt it; I have reflected on the question, whether the resolution of the senate, supposing it wrong, can constitutionally be expunged from the journal; I have, in doing so, earnestly endeavored to discard from my memory the circumstances belonging to the history both of the resolution condemned, and of the resolution condemnatory; indeed, I was called upon to consider the proposition to expunge the resolution of the senate, before I thought it possible I could ever be personally concerned in the result; and, in every view I have been able to take of the subject, I find it absolutely impossible to obey the instruction now given to me. I cannot obey it, without committing an act which, to my judgment and conscience, would be a plain violation of the constitution of the United States. I cannot obey it, without descending to a degree of slavish baseness that would render me justly despicable, and expose me to the scorn even of those who have commanded the deed. I cannot obey it, without forfeiting my own self-respect forever.

The constitution of the United States contains a provision (such as is to be found in few, if any, of the state constitutions), that "each house" [of congress] "shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such parts as may in their judgment require secrecy; and the yeas and nays of the members of either house on any question, shall, at the desire of one-fifth of those present, be entered on the journal." The purpose of the provision is most obvious. It requires each house to record its transactions—to record them, all, truly exactly and fully—to record them for the information of present and future generations; to furnish evidence, to which the constituent may refer in the examination of the conduct of the representative, or the representative resort for his justification; and to hand down to our posterity, a certain knowledge of all the acts of their ancestors, which may often serve as a guide to direct them, and sometimes a beacon to warn. And unless the provision can be complied with by keeping a partial, false and garbled record of the proceedings of the two houses—unless this duty to record the truth, can be fulfilled without recording the whole truth—or unless the injunction to keep the journal, can be understood as not commanding us to preserve it; it is impossible, I should think, to maintain, that the record of any resolution or proceeding of the senate can be expunged from its journal, in the literal sense and true acceptation of that word; that is, wholly blotted out or erased. Indeed, it would be difficult so to expunge any part of the journal, without impairing the record of something else, which all would wish to preserve truly and fairly recorded.

The general assembly itself, sensible (as I humbly venture to suppose) that the resolution of the senate in question cannot be actually expunged from the journal without a violation of the constitution, proposes that it shall be expunged, "by causing black lines to be drawn around the said resolution, as it stands on the original manuscript journal, and these words plainly written across the face of the said resolution and entry—'Expunged by order of the senate.'"

In other words, if I mistake not the meaning and principle of the instruction, the general assembly, admitting that the resolution of the senate cannot, consistently with the constitution, be expunged from the journal literally, yet thinks that it may be expunged figuratively. I pray the general assembly to consider the danger and the mischief that must flow from a precedent of this kind—which would, in effect, elude a positive injunction of the constitution by a metaphorical use of words, and what is more, a typical doing of deeds. I doubt whether there is a single provision of the constitution, which may not be eluded, and set at naught, by a similar process, and I must add, that this typical method of expunction is more abhorrent from my feelings of constitutional duty and propriety, than the literal. Undoubtedly, the precedent admits of a broader and easier, and therefore more mischievous application. I pray the general assembly to consider, too, the hardship of imposing upon the consciences of men acting under the sanction of an official oath, the duty of conforming their official conduct with the rhetoric of their constituents. In the framing of laws, and in legislative proceedings of all kinds, it has always been found wise and necessary to discard all figures of speech, and to adopt the plainest language in its plainest literal acceptation. If I rightly understand the meaning and purpose of the instruction given me, the general assembly would have me propose and vote for an expunction of the obnoxious resolution of the senate from its journal, in such a manner, that it shall not be expunged after all, in whole or in part. Now, in the first place, I doubt very much whether this could be done, even in the method prescribed; and, in the next place, if, entertaining the opinions I do on the subject, I should vote for any such process of expunging, I should be guilty of mental equivocation in the discharge of my official duty. I humbly hope for the pardon of the general assembly and of all good men, if I cannot, at its command, extinguish the knowledge I have acquired of my mother tongue; much more, if I cannot disregard the dictates of reason and conscience, which God has planted in my breast, to be the ruler and monitor of all my actions.

I find myself constrained to say, that I cannot obey the instruction for expunging the resolution of the senate, in any manner, literally or figuratively.

This brings me to the consideration of the second resolution of the general assembly, which declares, that "the assembly regards the right of instruction 'as resting on the broad basis of the nature of representation,' and one of the vital principles of our free institutions; and that it is the duty of the representative to obey the instructions of his constituents, or resign the trust with which they have clothed him, in order that it may be transferred to the hands of those who will carry into effect the wishes and instructions of the constituent body."

And here, in considering the alternative proposed to me, I cannot but advert to the very peculiar nature of the act which the instruction requires of me, and to some remarkable circumstances in the history of the subject.

The resolution which the general assembly proposes to expunge is only the expression of an opinion held by the majority of the senate for the time being, and the entry of it on the journal, only the record of the fact that such was the opinion of the body. It must be obvious to the minds of all men that the expunction of the resolution from the journal of the senate can nowise affect the main question—whether the opinion therein declared was just or erroneous—and whether or no it was within the competency of the senate to determine on the subject of the resolution; nor can the defacement of the record of an historical fact, in whatever manner it may be effected, annul or alter the fact itself, or, in the present case, impair, in the slightest degree, the memory of the transaction. Some hundreds of copies of the journal containing this resolution, have been printed; some deposited in the public archives; and some, delivered to members of congress for the time being, which have thus become private property, and been dispersed throughout the union: the resolution was published, too, in all the public journals of the day: it stands recorded on the journals of all the state legislatures that have thought proper to take the subject into their consideration: the general assembly of Virginia has itself recorded it, in the very resolutions in which it directs the senators of the state in congress, to vote for expunging it from the manuscript journal of the senate. For any direct purpose, therefore, which the expunction of it can serve, viewing the act apart from the intention, nothing can be more absolutely nugatory. The resolution itself, the evidence of it, and the opinion it declares, will all be handed down to posterity by faithful history; nay, even by the very record of the proceeding to expunge it. It is vain to say, as the general assembly has said in the preamble to its resolutions, that the resolution of the senate is "an assumption of power not warranted by the constitution, and calculated to subvert the rights of the house of representatives, and the fundamental principles of our free institutions;" for, if this were really the case, the general assembly should have levelled some of its censures against the house of representatives, for neglecting its high trust—for neglecting to vindicate "the fundamental principles of our free institutions," and, especially, its own rights and privileges, against the encroachment of the senate. I am not aware that that house has made any complaint: perhaps, it understood the subject too well, to do so. It is the executive only that has protested against this proceeding of the senate; and the only conceivable purpose which the proposed expunction of it can answer, will be to signalize the triumph of executive power over a department of the legislature that has had the firmness to oppose its measures—to set a mark of disgrace and humiliation upon the senate, and to bind a wreath of inglorious victory around the brow of the president. And even for this purpose, no stroke of the pen was ever more vain, than that which shall mark those black lines around the resolution of the senate, and write that sentence of expunction on its face—if, indeed, it be not calculated to work the direct contrary effect to that intended. The victory of the president over the senate may be as complete without it. And if, unhappily, the fruits of that victory shall ripen into their full maturity of bitterness—in times to come, when the constitution of the senate shall be subverted—when the check it was ordained to hold upon the power of the executive, and of the popular national branch of the legislature, shall be removed—when the substance of the constitution shall be destroyed, and nothing but its empty forms remain; history will paint those black lines drawn around this resolution, and those fatal words of condemnation written across its face, and hold them up as a mournful memento to ourselves of departed liberty, and a warning to some happier race of mankind. If, on the other hand, the senate shall, by the blessing of Providence, continue to maintain its place in the system—still exercising the functions for which it was designed—enjoying freedom of deliberation and independence of action; then will the manuscript volume of the journal, and indeed the single page, containing those memorable circular black lines, be the only volume, and the only page, that will ever be sought after, or read. The process of expunging the resolution, is the surest way to render the memory of it immortal.

It cannot be forgotten, that very shortly before I was first elected to the senate, the general assembly of Virginia, upon long and solemn deliberation, Resolved, "1. That the recent act of the president of the United States, exerting a control over the public depositories, by causing them to be withheld and withdrawn, on his own responsibility, from the United States bank, in which they had been ordered to be placed by the act of congress chartering the said bank, is, in the judgment of the general assembly, a dangerous and alarming assumption of power by that officer, which cannot be too strongly condemned. 2. That, while the general assembly will ever be ready to sustain the president in the exercise of all such powers as the constitution has confided to him, they, nevertheless, cannot but regard with apprehension and distrust the disposition to extend his official authority beyond its just and proper limits, which he has so clearly manifested in his recent interference with the treasury department of the federal government, in the exercise of a sound discretion which congress had confided to the head of that department alone. 3. That our senators in congress be instructed, and our representatives requested, to use their best endeavors to procure the adoption, by congress, of proper measures for restoring the public moneys to the bank of the United States, or at least causing them to be deposited therein for the future, according to the direction and stipulation of the act of congress chartering the said bank, if, at the time of their action on the subject, the said bank be, in their opinion, a safe depository of the public treasure." Thus, the general assembly, at that session, expressly affirmed the very proposition (and in far stronger terms) contained in the resolution of the senate which the present general assembly condemns; and the resolutions of the former session manifestly presuppose, that it was within the competency of the senate, as well as the house of representatives, to act upon that proposition, then in fact pending in the senate. In consequence of those resolutions, one of the senators from Virginia resigned his seat; a resignation certainly most unexpected to me; equally unexpected, I believe, to the general assembly. Neither have I ever believed, that the resolutions it had adopted were designed to produce any such result. I was soon after elected to fill the vacancy. I shall not say that the resolutions which had recently been adopted by the general assembly, constituted my motive for voting for the resolution passed by the senate some few weeks after I took my seat: for, in truth, this resolution expressed the sentiment I myself had all along entertained and expressed. But, surely, I have a right to refer to the instructions of the general assembly of 1833-'4, requiring me to vote for the resolution which the present general assembly instructs me to expunge, and to vindicate and sustain myself by their authority: otherwise, no senator can ever safely obey any instruction: he must incur the danger of being driven to the alternative now presented to me, of dishonoring himself by voting against his conscience, or of resigning his place, whenever, in the vicissitudes of party warfare, a subsequent legislature shall think the instruction wrong. It is with the deepest conviction and heartfelt pain, that I say, as I must say, that the proceedings of the general assembly of Virginia on the present occasion, are calculated, above all things, to impair the right of instruction itself.

I should have a right, too, after having acted in conformity with instructions given by the general assembly at one session, and seeing the same opinions prevail at a succeeding session, to appeal from the mandate of the present assembly, to the people, at the next elections. And this would seem the more reasonable, if it should be considered, that some of the state legislatures have, at their sessions of 1834-'5, instructed their senators to vote for expunging the resolution of the senate in question; and, though their instructions have been disregarded, have, at their last sessions, declined to repeat and enforce them. But I choose to place myself, at once, upon different and higher ground, and to act up to the principles, reasons and motives which, in reality, dictate the conduct I am going to pursue.

It cannot escape observation, that, while the general assembly instructs me to expunge the resolution of the senate, which I voted for in conformity with the instructions of the assembly of 1833-'4, the present assembly has not expunged the resolutions of the former assembly. And though (if I am rightly informed) a proposition has been made to rescind the former resolutions, even that proposition has not yet been acted on. So that I am to understand, that the general assembly is instructing me to do, in respect to a former resolution of the senate, that which it will not do itself, in respect to resolutions passed at a former session of its own body. I must bespeak pardon for remarking, further, that, though proceedings have been had in congress, and some laws have been passed, violating, in the opinion of the general assembly, the dearest rights of the people—take, for example, the sedition law: and though, too, many laws have been passed by the federal legislature, which, in the opinion of the general assembly, transcended its constitutional powers, and encroached on the rights of the states; yet it has never, heretofore, occurred to the general assembly, in any case or at any time, to assert and vindicate the rights of the people, or the rights of the states, against such assumptions of power by congress, by an expunction (literal or typical) of the obnoxious proceedings from the journals of the two houses. And now, for the first time, when a simple resolution of the senate is supposed (by some unaccountable misconception of its import and intention) to encroach upon the rights of the national branch of the federal legislature, which, probably, has not perceived, and, certainly, has not complained of, the encroachment—(to speak plainly) when the senate has presumed to question the rights and powers claimed for the executive department by the president, who alone has complained and protested against its proceedings—I see the general assembly of Virginia coming forward to vindicate the rights and powers claimed by the president, by this process of expunction, which it has never thought of resorting to, for the vindication either of the rights of the people, or the rights of the states. I mention these strange contrasts, because they have raised the gloomiest apprehensions, in my mind, of approaching danger to our republican institutions, and because those apprehensions have had an important influence in determining my judgment and my conduct, under the extraordinary instructions, which the general assembly has thought proper to give me.

The general assembly can have no reason to doubt, and, I am quite sure, does not doubt, that I voted for the resolution of the senate which it condemns as unconstitutional and mischievous, under sincere conviction that it was constitutional, wise, and even necessary to assert and vindicate the authority of the laws; neither can it doubt that this is still my opinion; yet, without deigning to suggest any reasons to enlighten and convince my understanding, the general assembly gives me a peremptory instruction to propose and vote for the expunction of this resolution from the journal of the senate; and it insists, that I must obey its will and command—or resign my office. It instructs me to vote to expunge from the journal, that which it knows, as well as I do, is there truly recorded; it instructs me to deface, and in a manner to falsify, a public record, which it knows the constitution explicitly requires the senate to keep; and (to remove my scruples) it prescribes the expunction of the resolution from the journal, figuratively and typically, in such a manner as can only serve to elude the positive injunction of the constitution, and to signalize the humiliation and disgrace of the senate, without at all affecting the historical evidence of the fact: it instructs me to do this—or resign. It instructs me so to expunge, as not to expunge, the resolution: it requires of me, in a word, a jesuitical equivocation with my oath and conscience; and (considering the knowledge it must have of the opinions I entertain) it commands me to incur dishonor, shame and guilt—or resign. It requires me, in effect, to give my recorded sanction to the prerogatives claimed by the president, in his memorable protest against the proceedings of the senate, and to the limitations he thinks proper to set upon the rights, powers and privileges of this body: well knowing the opinions I have avowed on the questions of constitutional right, and I hope, not doubting their sincerity, the general assembly commands me to inflict this (in my sense of things) vital blow upon the constitution of my country—or resign. I cannot shut my eyes against the truth—plain and glaring upon the very face of the transaction—that such instructions were not given me, with any expectation, or view, or perhaps, even wish, that I should yield obedience to them. There is, in truth, no choice between the alternatives proposed to me; and I believe, most undoubtedly, that it was not designed to leave me any choice; that the real and the only purpose of the instructions, was to compel me to resign—"to instruct me out of my seat." Indeed, it seems to me, that this design is almost avowed in the preamble and resolutions you have transmitted to me. For the preamble recites, as a motive for the proceeding, that "the assembly deem it their solemn duty again to reassert the duty of the representative to obey or resign;" and then, after giving me an instruction which the assembly knew that I could not obey without crime and foul disgrace, it resolves—"that it is the duty of the representative to obey the instructions of his constituents, or to resign the trust with which they have clothed him, in order that it may be transferred into the hands of those who will carry into execution the wishes and instructions of the constituent body."

It was impossible that I should have remained ignorant of, and it is equally impossible for me to forget, the political operations in Virginia during the past year. I know that the design of "instructing me out of my seat"—or (in courtly phrase) "giving me a walking ticket," was early and openly avowed and recommended; that it was an advantage not a little vaunted, which the victors promised themselves from the success they achieved at the last annual elections; that the scheme of the instruction was proposed and discussed, and the very method of typical expunction which the general assembly has adopted strenuously recommended, as the proper and sure means of driving me to a resignation, in the public prints, which are sometimes the organs, and sometimes the dictators, of party plans. I know, moreover, that the proceeding was aimed at me—particularly at me; and that, to insure its success, no effort has been spared to exaggerate my faults, such as they are; to falsify the history of my life, simple and obscure as hitherto it had been, and barren of incidents; to misrepresent all my motives, sentiments and actions; and to raise such a storm of public indignation against me as should make me bend like the willow in the fable, and preserve a worthless existence by yielding, rather than be torn up by the roots like the sturdy oak, and laid forever prostrate on the earth. I shall fulfil my destiny with firmness and composure. Let me thank my enemies for having given me a consequence which my own merits would never have achieved, that enables me to act a conspicuous and useful part in the defence of the "free institutions" of my country. I ought to be grateful to the general assembly for placing me, as it were, at the head of a forlorn hope in the contest now waging for the preservation of the constitution and the laws; and though I am as sensible of the danger, as I am of the honor, of the post assigned me, I hope, with the blessing of God, to approve myself not altogether unworthy of it.

If the general assembly had any object at heart, pursued directly for its own value, and not as a means of accomplishing, by indirection, other objects, plainly unjust and unconstitutional—and should give me an instruction to use my endeavors, in my official station, to promote its views—an instruction framed with no design to force me to a resignation; and if, in such a case, I should think the end aimed at unconstitutional, and should be, therefore, unwilling to be an active agent in accomplishing it; the case would be a very strong one, indeed, and attended with very peculiar circumstances, in which I would retain my seat, and stand as an obstruction to the accomplishment of the measure desired. But regarding the present instruction as mainly directed to the purpose of forcing me "to resign the trust with which?" the general assembly "has clothed me, in order that it may be transferred into the hands of those who will carry into execution the wishes and instructions of the constituent body"—which wishes and instructions I think plainly contrary to the letter and spirit of the constitution; and deeply convinced, as I am, that my resignation would more vitally affect the integrity of the constitution, than even an implicit obedience to the instructions; I have, therefore, come to a resolution, that I cannot, ought not, and will not resign.

I pray the general assembly to accompany me for a brief space, and to accompany me with patience, in a consideration of the practical consequences of the precedent, and of the doctrine, (for precedent will soon grow into doctrine), which it proposes to establish—namely, that the state legislatures may give instructions to their senators in congress, which they believe they cannot obey without conscious dishonor and crime, and therefore will not obey, in order to force them to the alternative of resignation.

The unavoidable effect will be, to change the tenure of the senatorial office, from a term of six years, which the constitution has ordained, to a tenure during the pleasure of the respective state legislatures that elect them; to make the senate, which was plainly designed, and that for the most obvious purposes, to be the most permanent body in the government, in effect and in practice, the most fluctuating, transient, and unstable.

The senate, constructed on the federative principle, to represent the sovereignties of the states, which, from the nature of sovereignty, are coequal, is so essential to their existence and preservation, that if the senate were abolished from the system,—the other branches of the government, both of which are national in their character, remaining in full force—it is hard to imagine how the state governments, or any thing more than the forms of them, could long endure. And whatever tends to diminish the weight of the senate in the system, must tend to impair, in exactly the same proportion, the state sovereignties themselves, and to a general consolidation of them all into one empire. The federative senate, representing the states, was designed as the balance of the system—as a check on the popular branch of the legislature, and on the executive, both of which are almost entirely national in their constitution—and, in matters of important and permanent interest, it is a check that can very rarely operate for a longer time, than may suffice to mature the judgment of the people on sober dispassionate reflection. The senate cannot, if it would, counteract the permanent will, the deliberate settled judgment of the nation. The house of representatives, elected for two years, representing the people immediately, and therefore more exactly representing their opinions and wishes for the time being, and more apt also to represent their passions, is, in that way, endowed with a power and influence, which the shortness of its term of office hardly suffices to countervail. The president, elected for four years, clothed with all the powers necessary for the executive of a government charged with the foreign relations of the whole, with his veto on the acts of the legislature, and the whole patronage of government in his hands, is far more than the equal in power of either branch of the legislature, and, in the opinion of many, more powerful than both combined. His very unity is a principle of strength. The only means of making the senate co-ordinate with the other departments, was that which has been resorted to; namely, to make it more permanent; and hence it was, that the senatorial term of office was made three times as long as that of the representatives, and half as long again as that of the president. If the senatorial term of office be reduced, the power of its check on the national branches of the government will be proportionally impaired; if it be made to depend on the pleasure of the state legislatures, the check will be almost annihilated: and the state sovereignties must share its fate, and be impaired or annihilated with it. To me, therefore, it seems, that the state governments would commit an imprudent act, if they should consent to shorten the term of the senatorial office; and a suicidal one, if they should establish the principle, in theory or in practice, that the senators shall hold their offices only during pleasure.

But whether these views are wise or not, all will agree, that the tenure of the senatorial office, being for a term of six years fixed by the constitution, is not now, and was not designed to be, dependent on the pleasure of the state legislatures, and can be nowise authoritatively made so, but by an amendment of the constitution of the United States, perfected according to the provisions of the 5th article; and that such an amendment would work a vital change in the whole constitution of the federal government, and in the relations between that and the state governments. If the doctrine, which the general assembly now asserts, and which it calls upon me to give my aid to establish, by setting the example of conforming with it, shall become, generally prevalent in the other states of the union as well as in Virginia, then will that vital change be wrought in our institutions, as effectually as it could be by an amendment of the constitution, and this, by means the most irregular, and the most contrary that can well be conceived, to the cautious spirit of the provision for future amendments.

The doctrine is, that a senator in congress is bound to yield implicit obedience to any instruction, which the state legislature that elected him may give him, or to resign—no matter how plainly unconstitutional, no matter how base and criminal, the act which he is enjoined to perform may be, in his own judgment—that he has no right to exercise his own judgment at all, or consult his own conscience; he is not, in this case, a moral agent: he has no alternative but to obey or resign.

If this doctrine shall become generally adopted and established throughout the United States, by the assertion and exercise of it on the one part, and submission to it on the other, I pray the general assembly to consider, for a moment, the probable workings of the principle in practice. Whenever the president shall feel the check of senatorial opposition—if the senators in opposition shall have the firmness to continue refractory to his will, unmoved and unshaken by his power—especially, if there shall be nearly a balance of parties in the body, so that a few changes may reverse the majority—the president will be placed under the strongest temptations to have recourse to the state legislatures, in order to disembarass himself of the opposition. Suitable, nay even plausible, pretexts will never be wanting, to justify or excuse their interference. There will be no difficulty, at any time, much more in times of violent party excitement, to select some prominent measure, involving a question of constitutional right, and to frame an instruction upon it to the refractory senator, which it is known he cannot conscientiously obey, and therefore will not obey, and to require him, nevertheless, to obey or resign. And to obtain the instruction, we may surely expect to see all the mighty influence of presidential power and patronage brought to bear upon the state legislatures, and upon the elections to them—to delude and demoralize the people—to tamper with, corrupt and seduce, the state assemblies, whose senators in congress it may be deemed most important, or most feasible, to remove. Fit instruments and agents for the work will always abound, and volunteer in the service—the venal panders of power, the whole tribe of parasites and sycophants zealous to conciliate favor, the vain aspirants after political importance, honor and notoriety—all will crowd into the president's train, and vie with each other in doing his biddings. I am speaking of the probable, natural, inevitable effects of political causes put into action. I do not believe, and therefore I am not insinuating, that the general assembly intends to open the field for these abominations. I speak with freedom, but not without sincere respect. It is the firm conviction of my mind, that there never was, and cannot be, a process invented, better calculated than that which I am now called upon to take an active part in establishing, to place the federal executive under the strongest temptation to employ its influence, power and patronage, in the purchase of subservient senators; and to place the state assemblies under temptation to provide the commodity for market; to destroy the purity of the people, upon which all depends at last; to destroy the purity of the state assemblies, and to prostrate their dignity, authority and influence, in the dust. As to the senate, that will soon be, to all purposes of useful service which it was intended to answer in the system of the federal government, absolutely annihilated.

And if this doctrine shall, in practice, be confined to Virginia, as perhaps it may be, and, judging from present appearances, probably will be,—then these abominations will be confined to her alone: her people alone will be exposed to the process of demoralization, her assembly to the arts of corruption and seduction: and her ancient dignity and pristine glory will only be remembered to point the tauntings of scorn at her fallen condition.

Many there are, I know, many good and thinking men, especially in Virginia, who differ with me on this subject; who approve the doctrine I have been controverting, in principle, and hope the most beneficial results from it, in practice; who are as firm in the conviction, that it is necessary to the maintenance of the state sovereignties, as I am in the belief, that its probable, and indeed unavoidable effect will be, to impair, degrade and prostrate them; and whose minds are, therefore, predisposed to condemn my opinions, and my conduct, on this occasion. I do not presume to censure them; and I must patiently abide the censure they will pronounce on me. If with the sentiments I entertain concerning this doctrine, and the pernicious consequences that are likely to flow from it, I should consent to become an active instrument in establishing it, by setting an example of conforming with it, I could not ask the forgiveness of my country, and should hardly hope for mercy from heaven.

I see, with no little surprise, that it is declared, in the preamble to the resolutions of the general assembly, which you have transmitted to me, that "the assembly deem it their duty aggravated to reassert, in behalf of themselves and the people of Virginia, the right of the constituent to instruct and the duty of the representative to obey or resign;" from which I infer, that the general assembly supposes, that this same doctrine has been asserted more than once before. I can only say, that if this peculiar doctrine ever was asserted before, I do not know when, where or on what occasion, it was asserted. It certainly is not asserted, nor was it intended to be asserted, in the preamble and resolutions, adopted by the general assembly in February, 1812, on the subject of the right of instruction. That paper was the work of my own hands, without assistance from any other person whatever, and drawn up, (as I but too well remember), with a haste, which, in my own apprehension at the time, materially impaired its value; yet, upon a recent and careful review of it, I do not find myself inclined to retract, or to modify in any essential point, the propositions there asserted and maintained; and, therefore, I am willing, and even desirous, that my present opinions and conduct shall be tested by them. I was, then, a young statesman, but not a very young man; and it had been fixed in my mind, by reflection and by the lessons of history, as a rudiment in ethics and in politics, that no proposition can be stated in either, however just and true, when properly understood and applied, that may not, if abused, misapplied, or pushed to extremes, result in vice or folly. Sensible that the right of instruction, and the correlative duty of obedience, might be abused to the purpose of commanding violations of the constitution, and even acts of moral turpitude—so abused, under the influence of excitement and passion, to which the constituent body, as well as the representative, like all other men, might sometimes be subject—I took the utmost pains to guard the doctrine against such abuses. Let us see how I accomplished the object. The very claim which I understand the general assembly now to assert, to power in itself, and to obedience from me—absolute power on the one hand, and blind obedience on the other—is stated as an objection to the reasoning of the preamble, and answered as follows:

"But it has been said that a state government may instruct its senators to violate the constitution of the United States—that a state in actual insurrection against the general government, may instruct its senators to promote the cause of rebellion: and it is asked, whether the senator would be bound by such instruction, to violate the constitution he had sworn to preserve, and to overthrow the government he had sworn to defend? It may be answered in the first place, that the particular instruction, which forms the subject of present consideration, could by no possibility involve a breach of the constitution of the United States. It might, and in the opinion of this assembly, would have been unconstitutional to charter the bank of the United States anew; but, surely, it could not possibly be deemed unconstitutional not to charter it. As to the rest, without determining the point which has been taken for granted, that a state in open rebellion against the general government, would still be entitled to its representation in the senate, which, to say the least, is extremely doubtful—it is admitted without difficulty, that if a state instruct its senator to give a vote plainly unconstitutional, or to raise the standard of rebellion, the senator is not bound to obey such instruction. Every case, such as that supposed, must stand upon its own peculiar circumstances: it supposes all bounds of right transcended, all legitimate rule prostrated: and the propriety of opposition, must be determined by the nature of the injustice, the extent of the mischief, and the prudence of resistance. But it is no argument against the exercise of a lawful power, that it may be made pretext for the assumption of an unlawful power. The right of instruction rightfully exercised, with no evil intention, to no pernicious object, cannot be effaced by the admission, that if a state government, or the general government, become corrupt and ambitious, and usurp tyrannical power, it may of right and ought to be resisted. The admission is cheerfully made. The general assembly of Virginia is incapable of affirming the exploded doctrine of non-resistance." And upon this reasoning in the preamble, the two resolutions of a general nature, with which the paper concludes, assert—"That it is the indubitable right of the state legislatures to instruct their senators in congress, on all points, either constitutional or politic, whenever the magnitude of the occasion shall require such interference, and that, by consequence, it is the bounden duty of the senators to obey such instructions; provided the instructions to be given and obeyed, require not the senator to commit a violation of the constitution, or an act of moral turpitude. That, after this solemn expression of the opinion of the general assembly, on the right of instruction, and the duty of obedience thereto, no man ought henceforth to accept the appointment of a senator of the United States from Virginia, who doth not hold himself bound to obey such instructions"—meaning, obviously, such legitimate instructions as those mentioned in the previous resolution.

The resolutions, then, which are the conclusions resulting from the reasoning of the preamble, expressly declare, that the instructions which the state legislatures have a right to give their senators in congress, and which it is the bounden duty of the senators to obey, are such only as "require not the senator to commit a violation of the constitution, or an act of moral turpitude." And it is expressly stated, in the preamble,

"that if a state instruct its senator to give a vote plainly unconstitutional," "the senator is not bound to obey such instruction"—that every case of the kind "must stand on its own peculiar circumstances"—and that "the propriety of opposition must be determined by the nature of the injustice, the extent of the mischief, and the prudence of resistance." The alternative here proposed to the senator, is not obedience or resignation, but obedience or resistance; to be determined by the considerations by which all resistance to the authority of government must ever be determined.

If an instruction were given me to vote for a measure of no very material consequence—a measure which, if adopted, would not lead to any serious permanent evil—and yet I could not, for reasons of any kind, conscientiously vote for the proposed measure—in such a case, I might very properly, and should without hesitation, resort to a resignation, in order to evade the painful alternative of obedience or resistance. Or, if an instruction were given me, which I could not obey without violence to my conscience, and the "peculiar circumstances" of the case should nevertheless be such, that my resignation would be attended with far less of evil than the accomplishment of the object of the instruction, and would not be itself a source of equal or greater evil, in such a case as this too, I might, consistently with my sense of duty, and very gladly should, disenthrall myself of the alternative of obedience or resistance, by a resignation. In truth, resignation is a privilege, not a duty—a privilege allowed the senator by which he may wholly avoid the alternative of obedience or resistance, as expounded in the preamble and resolutions of February, 1812.

Here, the general assembly has instructed me to do that which, in my judgment and conscience, would be a crime, and of course, in me, an act of moral turpitude: I cannot obey without crime; and, in my opinion, formed upon long and anxious deliberation, resignation would inflict a more vital blow on the constitution, because it would be followed by far more serious and mischievous consequences to both the federal and the state government, than a literal obedience to the instruction. The alternative is, then, forced upon me, of obedience or resistance; an alternative, which would be painful enough in itself, and is rendered doubly so to me, by considerations which I shall mention in the sequel.

He that would judge my conduct fairly, should suppose himself in my situation, and bring home to his own bosom the opinions I entertain, and the motives by which I am actuated. If the views I have unfolded, as to the nature of the instruction that has been given to me, the real object at which it was aimed, the turpitude and criminality which, entertaining the sentiments I do, I should incur by yielding obedience to it, and the impossibility of resigning without giving my aid to a dangerous innovation on the constitution, be not wholly groundless, then, I apprehend, there is no man who can think that "the nature of the injustice, and the extent of the mischief," do not justify, and call for, resistance. I have understood it has been supposed, that all the moral responsibility rests on the constituent body, and the senator is relieved from any portion of it; that it is the province of the constituent to judge and command, and his to believe and obey. Can it be really thought that the official oath of a senator to support the constitution of the United States, is subject to an exception which exempts him from the duty of supporting it against infringements attempted by the state legislature that has elected him? that the senator may and ought to take the oath with a mental reservation, that he will support the constitution, unless he shall be commanded by the constituent body to violate it? Surely, the general assembly is not going to give its high sanction to doctrines of this kind, which would sap the foundations of all public virtue. The truth is, that, in all contests between those who exercise authority and those over whom it is exercised, as to the rightful exercise of such authority—as to the duty of obedience, or the right of resistance—both parties must, in the nature of things, judge for themselves; and the only difference between them is, that the party resisting power, resists at his peril; which alone suffices, in general, to determine him against resistance, except in extreme cases. To say that those who hold power have the sole right to exercise judgment, and that those over whom power is exercised have no right to judge for themselves whether they are oppressed or not, were to affirm the very doctrine of passive obedience and non-resistance maintained by the university of Oxford in the reign of James II. The commands of the constituent legislature cannot justify, or even excuse, the senator, in a palpable violation of the constitution, or in an act of moral turpitude. The servant, nay even the slave, is not bound to obey, and more, is not excusable for obeying, the unlawful commands of his master.

Then, as to "the prudence of resistance" in this case. All questions of resistance to authority present a compound consideration of right and expediency. However just and right resistance may be in itself, yet it ought never to be resorted to unless there be a reasonable hope of correcting the mischief, and securing some good end; nor ought any man, however strong his sense of wrong and injustice, to involve others with himself in a hopeless, useless, dangerous effort of resistance. This last objection to the course I have resolved to pursue I have taken the most effectual care to obviate. I have asked the advice of no man, much as I desired the advice of my friends, and willingly as I should have sought it, if I could have done so without danger of committing them, as men of honor, to share my fate: I have, indeed, communicated my purpose to very few, and to them in the strictest confidence. I have held no correspondence with any member of the general assembly on this subject, since the commencement of its present session; and, in fact, have written only one short note on a different topic to one of them, lest correspondence commenced on other subjects might lead to correspondence on this. This line of conduct had its inconveniences, to which I was not insensible; but I could not depart from it without abandoning the system of action I had prescribed for myself, and involving others in my difficulties. No man, for aught that I have done, stands committed to share my fate; for aught that I have done to draw others to my support, I stand alone, sustained only by the conscious virtue of my motives and purposes, and a confidence in my own firmness to meet and abide the result. I trust I am actuated by no false pride, and no vainglorious opinion of my own importance. (For, if I am, the fault is not owing to the want of a most careful self-examination and scrutiny), in thinking and declaring my belief and humble hope that the sacrifice I am making of myself, of all prospects of political honors and distinction in future, and even of the affectionate regards of many whose esteem and confidence I have hitherto enjoyed, may have some slight effect in saving the constitution of my country from violation; saving the senate from subversion, and with it saving the state sovereignties from utter prostration; and even placing the right of instruction itself upon the only stable grounds on which it can be rested, by so guarding it from abuse and misapplication that it may appear to all men's minds an agent of good, worthy to be respected and preserved; not an evil principle, to be eschewed and rooted out.

I see, from the vote of the two houses of the general assembly on the second of the resolutions transmitted to me, that most of my own friends approved the principle therein declared, that it is the duty of the senator to obey, implicitly obey, the instruction of the state legislature, or to resign. All these will, of course, disapprove the resolution I have taken: this is ominous, probably decisive, of the destiny that awaits me. In all likelihood, before the heats that now inflame the public mind shall be extinguished, I shall attain to an age which will render me unfit for any active public service. I have the clearest perception of all these consequences. But I hope I shall be pardoned for saying, that I cannot, and will not, do what I think wrong in principle, and mischievous, fatal in its effects, to comply with the wishes of my friends, and to retain their approbation and support, any more than to avert or escape from the rage of my enemies. I do not pretend to be insensible to popularity, especially to the favor of my native state; but, if I know myself, my love of popularity has its source rather in my own attachment to the people than in the hope or desire of any rewards they can bestow; and I would not betray what I think the interests of Virginia to gain her favor, dear as it is to me. I care for no fame but that which I have little prospect of obtaining—the renown of good and useful deeds, which survives the author of them.

It is proper that I should tell the general assembly and the public that, when I returned home, after the termination of the session of congress of 1834-5, I had come to a resolution to leave the senate; that I would keep it in my power to take my seat, under my last election to this body, in case an extra session of congress should be called by the president; but that I would resign the office, or (which was the same thing) decline the acceptance of it, at the commencement of the then next session of the general assembly. This resolution, dictated by a sense of the duty I owed my family, was so openly announced, that I suppose it must have been generally known, at least, in the city of Richmond. It was not until the scheme of "instructing me out of my seat" was agitated, after the result of the spring elections was ascertained, that I saw that, if I should decline to take my seat under my new appointment, it would have precisely the same pernicious consequences which would result from a forced resignation, under instructions which I could not, in conscience, obey; that I changed the resolution I had previously formed, and determined to accept the appointment, and abide the consequences. I shall hold my seat only long enough to signalize my resistance to what I honestly believe to be unconstitutional instructions. I say now, that I shall, in all events, resign it at the commencement of the next session of the general assembly.

I beg leave, also, to explain the reason that induced me not to divulge the course I intended to pursue, until the final action of the general assembly on the expunging resolutions was announced. I did not think it proper or respectful to the general assembly to invite a contest with it, which it might possibly be not unwilling to avoid, by declaring, in anticipation, that I would not obey such instructions, as I understood were in contemplation, if they should be given me.

I have only to add that, as to the merits of the resolution of the senate of the 28th of March, 1834, which the general assembly condemns—both in respect to the truth of the proposition it contains, and the right of the senate to act upon the subject—these are points which ought properly to be discussed in the senate; and that I shall endeavor to vindicate the resolution, in both aspects, if, and whenever, it shall be brought under consideration.

Praying you, gentlemen, to lay this letter before the two houses of the general assembly in which you respectively preside, I have the honor to be, with all respect, your and their humble servant,
B. W. LEIGH.

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY H. NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

We present our readers, with the index to the last volume. It requires a great deal of extra labor. We shall next week, present them with a supplement. Many arrearages are to be brought up—especially a report from the war department, on the present state of the Indian tribes; the showing of the state of the deposit banks from the treasury department; the report of the committee of ways and means of the house of delegates of Maryland, on internal improvements, &c. and of the committee of the city council of Baltimore, concerning the Baltimore and Ohio rail road.

We give a pretty full report of occurrences in Florida.

Business has been very lively in Baltimore, during the whole of the present year—and, notwithstanding the severity of the late winter, supplies of foreign goods and groceries were constantly receiving, through the noble aid of the ice-boat Relief. There has been a great crowd of persons from the west. We must finish the rail road. Places in the stages, from Wheeling, are taken every day in advance, and at forty-eight dollars for a passage; and from Baltimore to Philadelphia, such was the state of the roads, that fifteen dollars were paid.

The house of assembly of New Jersey have rejected, by a vote of 14 ayes, to 34 noes, the proposition of the Camden and Amboy rail road company, to sell to the state, upon equitable terms, all their improvements.

Trial at Norristown, Penn.

Joseph Oathey, jr. John West Nevins, John Naglee, jr. Ormes B. Keith and Herman Hought, indicted for the murder of George Wilhauer, at Summeytown, in December last, have been fully acquitted. The trial before judge Fox and his associates, lasted ten days and terminated on Friday last. A paper unanimously signed by the jury exonerated the accused from any censure or blame in the transaction which led to the death of the deceased. They were young men of about twenty years of age, and the sons of respectable citizens. Counsel for the accused, Messrs. Dallas, Miles and Hazlehurst, of Philadelphia, Montgomery, of Lancaster, Freedly, Jelly and Sterigere, of Norristown.

Thirty or forty dray loads of specie, gold and silver, have lately arrived at the United States bank, in Philadelphia, and much more is expected, to wind up the affairs of the old institution, and establish the new one, on a firm footing.

The Louisville, Cincinnati and Charleston rail road. The charter of the above rail road company, has passed the senate of Kentucky on Friday last week by a vote of twenty-six to eight! It has been approved by the governor, and become a law.

It seems that the attempt to negotiate the New York city water loan in Europe, has not been successful.

The New Orleans Union, of the 18th ult. says:—"While our Northern friends are complaining of great cold, snow banks, fine sleighing, &c. we are sitting very comfortably writing with our coat off, and the window raised."

Cayuga lake was frozen across at Kidder's ferry, an event unknown to the earliest settlers. The lower Lachine Rapids, on the St. Lawrence, were also frozen across to the head of the nearest island.

Some of the anti-masons in Massachusetts have made a public nomination of Mr. Van Buren, for president—but of one hundred anti-masonic newspapers in Pennsylvania, only two are said to be in favor of him.

An anti-masonic convention was lately held in Vermont, at which S. H. Jenison was nominated for governor, receiving 144 votes out of 163—and Messrs. Harrison and Granger for president and vice president of the United States—the vote for president was as follows—Harrison 87, Webster 28, Van Buren 27, Granger 20, Edward Everett 1; so Harrison had a clear majority of the whole number of 11 votes. On the ballot for vice president, the majority was overwhelming for Granger. A whig convention was in session at the same time, and unanimously ratified these nominations.

It is said the clerks in the public departments at Washington, are about to strike for higher salaries.

Warren bridge is free, and great have been the rejoicings on account of it. As our paper is going to press, one hundred guns are in the act of being fired at Charlestown, Medford, and on the Boston side of the bridge. The only people who seem to regret it are some of the unfortunate individuals who got up the free bridge ticket at the last election, and who find that their "occupation's gone!" [Boston paper.

The "Globe" says—

In reply to inquiries, we have to say that we have reason to believe that should Mr. Buchanan be instructed to vote against the expunging resolutions, he will obey or resign.

The people of Texas are divided among themselves, and, it is said, that gen. Samuel Houston and col. James Bowie have been displaced from their commands in the army.

At the beginning of the present month, Gideon Blackburn, D. D. visited Wheeling. He crossed the Alleghenies fifty-three years ago, when the whole population west of them, was only about 6,000, exclusive of the Indians and French. He is hale and vigorous, and enjoys a green old age.

The Poughkeepsie wool market. One house in this thriving capital of Dutchess county, New York, has, according to the Journal published there, sold 70,000 lbs. at 65 cts. cash, to a Boston concern; another 10,000 lbs. at 67 cents, and another 15,000 at 65 cents, both to dealers in New York. Still remaining on hand, in town, 100,000 lbs.

The joint stock speculations of 1835, in England, have been quite as mad, comparatively speaking, as those of 1825, which eventuated in the panic. The new companies brought forward, last year, in England, represent a capital of £48,000,000 sterling, or 240,000,000 of dollars! Very many of these will not be paid up. The joint stock companies, in mines, are forty-one, representing a capital of $15,000,000. The lowest capital was that of Carn Gray, a tin mine, $12,500—the highest was Terra Putina (gold) being $2,500,000. There were thirty-five railway companies—about a third of whom will live. These represented a capital of $170,000,000. The highest was the grand northern railway $20,000,000. There were four between Brighton and London—one between Calcutta and Sangor—two through the north of England—one between Windsor and London—one "National Pneumatic"—one through the eastern counties, another through the western, and one "grand Atlantic railway." The miscellaneous joint stock companies were 43, the capitals forming a total of $100,000,000. One was "the British and American steam navigation company"—another, "Pennsylvania coal, land and timber company."

During the late cold weather, the island of Nantucket had no mail communication with the main land from the 1st to the 27th ult.

Died, on the 7th February, on the Seneca reservation, in Pennsylvania, the celebration chief GAR-YAN-WAN-GAH, or CORNPLANTER, aged about 100 years.

This noble Indian, at an early period of the revolutionary war, took an active part on the side of the Americans during that glorious struggle, and has ever since manifested the utmost friendship for the whites. When solicited by Washington to send some of his young men to Philadelphia, for the purpose of being educated, he sent at the head of the band his son, Henry O'Bail—an evidence of a strong mind overcoming deep rooted and long-existing prejudices.

He, with his associate, Red Jacket, was, for many years, the counsellor and protector of the interest of his nation; and we regret that our sources of information are too limited to furnish the particulars more fully of the eventful life of this "NATURE'S NOBLEMAN."

The Baltimore Chronicle, (of which the senior editor is a member of the first branch), of Tuesday last, says:

As we anticipated, the joint committee on internal improvements made a report yesterday to the city council. The report and accompanying resolution will be found in to-day's paper—from which it will be seen, that the committee recommend a subscription of three millions of dollars to this important work, without other restriction than that it shall be applied to the extension of the road from the present point of termination. This can occasion no difficulty, inasmuch as the interests of the company as well as those of the public, would seem to require that there should be no chasm in the extension of the road.

The bill on the subject will be reported in a day or two, and we have no doubt of the prompt action of the council. Baltimore will thus have set a bright example of liberality and enterprise, which must secure the completion of this great national work within the shortest practicable period—and we congratulate our citizens on the prospect presented of an extended and lucrative internal commerce by means of this rail road. We yet want a line of packets to Liverpool, to secure a monopoly of the western trade—and we hope that this deficiency will be speedily supplied by the capitalists of our city.

The line of the road, by way of Pittsburgh or Wheeling to Lake Erie, from Baltimore, is much shorter than from any other Atlantic city—so much so, that, at New York they are about to establish a line of steamboats to carry goods, from that place for the west, and to make the voyage to Baltimore by sea—our harbor being generally open, or kept so, by the ice-boat, in the severest weather. If Maryland and the city of Baltimore, do their duty on the present occasion, it is certain that a large portion of the trade, and a great majority of all the travellers, from and to the west, will, naturally centre in and pass through this city.

The American of Tuesday, has also the following gratifying intelligence—

Accounts from Harrisburgh announce the passage, through the Pennsylvania house of representatives of the bill from the senate authorising the Susquehanna canal company to cross the river at Columbia, and construct their work on the western side. Various amendments and alterations have been made in it, which will carry the bill back to the senate for confirmation.

In the first branch of the Baltimore council, on Tuesday last, the report of the joint committee on internal improvements, together with the following resolution accompanying it, was taken up for consideration.

Resolved by the mayor and city council of Baltimore, That the mayor be and he is hereby authorised and directed to subscribe to the capital stock of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company, the sum of three millions of dollars, in the name of the mayor and city council of Baltimore: Provided, that the whole sum shall be exclusively applied to the prosecution of the work in an unbroken line from Harper's Ferry, or at such a point near that place as shall be selected from which the extension shall be made.

The report and resolution were concurred in by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Myers, Monmonier, Fenby, Stansbury, Thomas, Yeates, Legrand, Harker, Seidenstricker, Barnes, Mathiot, Tensfield, Scott, Gardner, Fosbender, Dryden, Russell, Coskerrey, King, Wm. J. Cole, Ball, McKinnell—22.

NAY—Mr. W. H. Cole—1. [Mr. Ridgely was absent.]

The report and resolution were subsequently sent to the second branch, where they were concurred in by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Lucas, Fields, Klinefelter, Reany, Schaeffer, Ready, Sheppard, Smith, McClellan—9.

NAYS—Messrs. Stuart, Carroll—2.

[Mr. Frazier absent.]

[This vote, with the action of the state, to the amount of three millions more, and the aid from Pittsburgh and Wheeling, (a million); being in all seven millions, it is believed will insure the making of the road, and at an early day. We congratulate the public on these important events. It will fix the destinies of Baltimore.]

We have the following from the Gazette of Wednesday last.

In addition to the above gratifying result, we have the assurance of a number of gentlemen who have been recently at Annapolis and conversed freely with the members of our state legislature, that there is every appearance of an almost unanimous determination to pass the internal improvement bill, substantially, as reported by the committee of ways and means—which, among its valuable provisions, contains one authorising the treasurer to subscribe on behalf of the state to the capital stock of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company the sum of three millions of dollars, and another provision as one of the conditions for subscribing a like amount to the capital stock of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal company—"that the rail road company shall be released from the stipulation not to proceed with the construction of its rail road in the valley of the Potomac river above Harper's Ferry, until after the canal company has finished its canal to Cumberland." Other useful and necessary provisions are also contained in this important bill, to release the rail road company from stipulations which prevented the use of steam engines along the Potomac between the Point of Rocks and Harper's Ferry, without incurring a heavy expense—for which is substituted a provision that will be equally beneficial to the canal company, and cause no inconvenience and only a small expense to the rail road company.

The Pittsburgh Times, advertising to the improvement bill, well and truly observes—"Pennsylvania will still go on—and before seven years will be the first, and continue forever the first state in the union if we be faithful to ourselves. Nature has made us the key and head of the arch; and nothing but folly can make us second to any state."

The bill for improving the navigation of the Wabash river, heretofore vetoed by the president, again passed the senate on Thursday—Mr. Robinson, of Illinois, expressing a hope that "the president's eyes might be opened, and that he might see that he had been in the wrong."

[Alex. Gazette.

Incendiary attempts of the boldest character are still made in Boston. The common council have, by vote, placed $10,000 at the disposal of the mayor to be expended for the discovery, arrest and conviction of the miscreants.

A master tailor of New York, in one year, paid one journeyman $1,498 for work—another master avers that, in forty-five weeks he paid one journeyman $1,945.

Eighteen new steamboats have been built at Pittsburgh during the past winter. We learn, also, that the same spirit in boat building has prevailed at Wheeling during the same period.

On the subject of distributing the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, among the states, the New York American says—

Is it not best for the general good—for the prosperity of the states—the harmony and purity of congress, disturbed and tempted by multitudes of projects to absorb the excess in the treasury—and for the safety of the vast treasure itself—which once paid into the vaults of the western and south western deposit banks may be as difficult to evoke, as "spirits from the vasy deep," though our glendower should call never so loudly—would it not on all these accounts be best, that Mr. Clay's land bill should pass? We speak not now to mere politicians, but to men of common sense, and right and honest intentions. To New Yorkers in particular, is it not most desirable, when their treasury is bankrupt, and taxation inevitable if good faith is to be preserved, that a bill which would give them in hand, of arrears, one million and a half of dollars, and furnish them during its term as a law with half a million per annum should pass?

Nor is it needful in order to accomplish this result, that any proper and specific appropriations for defence, should be neglected. We certainly hope and desire that an increase may be provided for in the rank and file of the army—and that the engineer corps be augmented; that large appropriations be made for the navy, so as to add to our squadrons on all foreign stations, and to keep one of considerable force always afloat and in activity on the home station, and also for the construction of steam vessels of war; and finally, that as much money be voted for the fortifications built and building, as can be spent with advantage and without extravagance. Thus much we owe to our own respectability, to the past, and to the future. But when all this is provided for—such is the impulse of all business, that the accumulations in the treasury will far outrun our wants, and it is therefore most desirable that one prolific source of supply, that from the public lands, should be diverted to the states.

And the "Berks and Schuylkill Journal" observes—
The report of the committee of the United States senate on public lands, on the bill to appropriate the proceeds of the public lands among the states, is one of the greatest importance before the nation; now that the question of war or peace may be considered as settled and the chartering of the U. States bank, has relieved the public mind from the apprehensions of pecuniary embarrassment likely to be produced by the withdrawal of its extensive capital from circulation. The report presents a plain, dispassionate and statesmanlike view of the subject in which the various projects for the disposition of the surplus revenue, arising from the sale of the public lands, are very judiciously examined and decided upon. It will be seen that the amount of such surplus revenue, at this time, exceeds twenty millions of dollars, and that of this sum if divided among the states to whom it belongs, the share of Pennsylvania would amount to more than two millions. The anticipated revenue from the same source is computed at $10,000,000 per annum, of which the proportion of our state would exceed one million annually. What a fund of public prosperity is implied in the possession of such a revenue. What bounds could be assigned to our internal improvements? Applied to the creation of a sinking fund, how soon would it pay off the state debt? Employed as a means of disseminating education, what corner of the commonwealth is so remote, what valley so dark as to be inaccessible to the lights of instruction which it would be capable of diffusing? Is there partisanship enough in Pennsylvania to reject this benefit, because the measure originates with Henry Clay? Will our members in congress dare to vote against a measure which will enrich their constituents, and infringe in no degree upon any right, and will they be applauded for their course, and be sent back again to guard the people's pockets against the reception of their own treasures? We shall see.

APPOINTMENTS BY THE PRESIDENT,

By and with the advice and consent of the senate.
Roger B. Taney, to be chief justice of the United States.
Phillip P. Barbour, to be an associate judge of the U. States.
Amos Kendall, to be postmaster general of the United States.*

*The preceding appointments were made on Tuesday and Wednesday. The injunction of secrecy being taken off, the following particulars published have some interest.

Mr. Taney was nominated on the 28th December last, and ratified on the 15th March, as follows—

The question being put, "Will the senate advise and consent to the appointment of R. B. Taney as chief justice of the supreme court of the United States," it was decided as follows:

NAYS—Messrs. Black, Calhoun, Clay, Crittenden, Ewing, of Ohio, Leigh, Mangum, Naudain, Porter, Preston, Robbins, Southard, Tomlinson, Webster, White—15.

The senate then proceeded to consider the nomination of Philip P. Barbour.

Mr. Webster offered the following amendment:

Resolved, That it is inexpedient to act upon the nomination of P. P. Barbour as a justice of the supreme court, until it shall be ascertained whether the number of judges of the said court shall be altered by any law of the present session of congress.

The question being put, was decided as follows—yeas 16, nays 26.

The question then being, "Will the senate advise and consent to the appointment of P. P. Barbour as a justice of the supreme court of the United States?" it was decided as follows:

Samuel L. Breese and Benjamin Bage, jr. to be masters commandant in the navy from the 22d Dec. 1835.

ILLINOIS AND MICHIGAN CANAL.—The construction of this canal, which is to commence at Chicago and strike the Illinois river near the mouth of the little Vermilion river, is to be undertaken immediately.

The natural obstacles to this work are so slight, that even now, when the streams are full, the head waters of the La Plata river, which runs into the Illinois, almost touch on a level those of the Chicago river, running into Lake Michigan.

The state of Illinois has by law authorised the issue of a six per cent. stock, redeemable after 1860, to the amount of half a million of dollars, in order to aid this work. It will, when completed, make an unbroken inland water communication from New York to New Orleans.

A WHOLE FAMILY FOUND FROZEN TO DEATH. The Haverstraw Times, gives the appalling details of a most melancholy event in the vicinity of that town. On Saturday, as a person had made his way into the mountains, which have been inaccessible until the late moderate weather, he found, after passing the Orange county line, a man in a sitting posture near the cabin. On approaching him, it was discovered that he was frozen to death, with a wooden shovel in his hands with which he had evidently been laboring to open a passage from his snow bound habitation. The traveller then entered the cabin and found on the floor the frozen body of a middle aged woman and two children. The neighbors were then raised—the nearest living at the distance of a mile and a half—and upon examining the house; it was found that every particle of food and fuel had been exhausted, and the whole family, without doubt, had fallen victims to the combined horrors of cold and hunger. The father probably endeavoring to make his way to a pile of wood at a little distance, and had perished in the very midst of the attempt.

The "Times" describes the sufferings of the poor people in the mountains, now first revealed by the giving way of the snow, as being of the most intense description. [N. Y. Courier.]

THE TAMPIO EXPEDITION.—We learn from the New Orleans Bee of the 27th ultimo, that the United States district attorney for that district, has been ordered (it is not stated by whom) to institute a criminal process against Mr. William Christy, as having been engaged in transporting volunteers to Texas. The motive of this prosecution is supposed to be the serious charge brought against Mr. Christy, in the several letters that have been published, written by the unfortunate men who were shot at Tampico, to their relatives in various parts of the U;

NAYS—Messrs. Black, Davis, Ewing, of Ohio, Mangum, Naudain, Porter, Prentiss, Robbins, Southard, Swift, Webster—11.

The nomination of Amos Kendall was then taken up for consideration; when

Mr. Crittenden moved that the senate now adjourn, and the question being taken, the yeas were 15, nays 25.

The question being, "Will the senate advise and consent to the appointment of Amos Kendall to be postmaster general?" it was decided (the yeas and nays being demanded by Mr. White), as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Cuthbert, Ewing, of Illinois, Grundy, Hendricks, Hill, Hubbard, King, of Alabama, King, of Georgia, Linn, McKean, Morris, Nicholas, Niles, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Shepley, Tallmadge, Tipton, Walker, Wall, Wright—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Black, Ewing, of Ohio, Leigh, Naudain, Preston, Southard, White—7.

On the last ballot only 32 senators were present.

States. As an act of justice to Mr. Christy, we subjoin the conclusion of the article in the Bee:

"We are assured the more minute the investigation, the less reason will there be to suspect him of any unworthy part; and the more will his honorable conduct be properly appreciated by his fellow citizens. It can be demonstrated—nay, it has been—that he had no connection whatever with the expedition under gen. Mejia to Tampico.

But it is hoped that this suspicion and unfounded accusation will teach a lesson of policy and forbearance to him and all other generous and spirited citizens, as regards the present struggle of the Texians. These are now so divided among themselves, that the provisional government has displaced general Samuel Houston and col. James Bowie from their commands in the Texian army. Dangers will wait on such dissensions, and it is much preferable that our citizens should be just toward Mexico while being generous toward Texas, rather than really or ostensibly violate the national faith, and endanger the commerce of New Orleans."

NEW HAMPSHIRE.—The general election in the state of New Hampshire took place on Friday last. Isaac Hill (now a senator of the United States) is elected governor of the state, without any regular opposition.

RHODE ISLAND. The whig convention, which sat in Providence in January last, appointed a committee to select candidates for state officers, and that committee have just reported the following ticket, viz: For governor, Tristram Burges; lieutenant governor, John H. Cross; with nine highly respectable gentlemen for the senate.

NEW YORK, March 12. We have long been apprehensive that some accident would happen from the neglect of the corporation to order the burnt walls to be taken down. Yesterday afternoon three persons were killed, and two severely wounded, by the falling of the wall of the store belonging to Mr. Peter Lorillard, in Water, near Wall street.

Mr. Fox, his Britannic majesty's minister plenipotentiary and envoy extraordinary to the United States, arrived at the seat of government on Sunday evening last, in the rail road line from Baltimore,

MEXICO. Among the passengers in the Montezuma at New York from Vera Cruz, is commodore Lopez, the head of the Mexican navy. A letter from the American consul at Vera Cruz, says—"The object of his visit, it is said, is one of public duty, appertaining to his station; and may we hope that he will meet at the hands of our countrymen those civilities and attentions which his virtues and merits as a gentleman entitle him to receive."

The measures adopted by the government of Mexico, indicate a determination on its part to put down the revolutionary movements in Texas. From the statements put forth in the Luz, an opposition paper, published in the city of Mexico, of the strength of Santa Anna's expedition, it appears, that he left San Luis with 3,500 infantry, 400 cavalry, and 12 light pieces of artillery, which, added to the 1,600 men of which Sesma's division is composed, make in all 5,500 men. An army of reserve has begun to assemble at San Luis Potosi and Matamoros, to be composed it is stated of a similar force.

LITTLE ROCK, (ARK.) FEB. 19. We are informed that the inhabitants of that portion of this territory south of Red River have, in fact, separated from the government of Arkansas and of the United States, and are taking measures to incorporate themselves with Texas. Judge Ellis, James Clark, esq. and Mr. Carson, late of North Carolina, are among the delegates to the Texian convention. We are sorry for it—for we look upon it as a most rash and unadvised step. Texas is at present in a state of anarchy. She cannot be aided by the United States, unless in violation of solemn treaties. If she become independent, she must either be attached to the United States, or become one of those little petty independencies, without either means, national standing, dignity or power; never any thing more than nests of pirates. If her citizens have any hopes of ultimate prosperity and happiness, those hopes are founded solely on the prospect of hereafter becoming a part of these U. States. The republic of Texas, by itself, would be nothing among nations. Why then leave our great republic, and become a part of that which is no government, and where their only hopes will rest on again obtaining what they are now throwing away? [Advocate.]

THE PUBLIC LANDS. The resolutions instructing the senators from Pennsylvania to vote for Mr. Clay's land bill have passed a third reading in the senate of that state by a vote of 25 to 7. If the legislature of Pennsylvania had any right to instruct, they could not be better employed.

A GOOD BANK. Westchester, Penn. March 8, 1836. Five hundred shares of stock in the bank of Chester county, sold yesterday, in this borough, at public auction, at an average price of $80 12½ per share. The price of this stock to original holders, is thirty dollars. Let those merchants and others who are complaining of money being scarce in Philadelphia and N. York, come to West Chester. AFFAIRS IN FLORIDA, VARIOUS &c.

Charleston, March 8—4½ P. M.

FROM FLORIDA.

Battle with the Indians.

The schooner S. S. Mills, capt. Southwick, arrived here yesterday morning from St. Augustine, furnishing us with the Herald of the 2d inst.

It will be seen that gen. Gaines had encountered the Indians in considerable force near the Wythlacoochee.

The particulars of the engagement, is given in the following letters from our correspondent, dated

St. Augustine, March 5.

DEAR SIR: I have purposely refrained from transmitting you any account of the Seminole campaign, as the various contradictory statements in regard to the movements of the enemy until within a few days since, did not deserve notice, and were too brainless to be credited. The simple fact, however, that St. Augustine, Jacksonville, Picolata, Camp King, Tampa and Key West, have been for such a length of time kept in a constant state of alarm, and each moment dreading an attack, is evidence of talent never before displayed by Indians—conduct they always did exhibit—but that a body of fifteen hundred or two thousand men, should make such demonstrations, and such dispositions of their forces, is like the massacre of major Dade—unparalleled. We knew that they must be concentrating on some point, and so the result has proved. You are aware that gen. Gaines approached within four or five miles of Fort Drake—looked eight days provisions, and returned to the Wythlacoochee, for the purpose of discovering whether any Indians were on the prowl. On arriving at the stream his passage was disputed by a body of savages, amounting it is surmised to fifteen hundred—a fight commenced across the river, which, although narrow, is deep and rapid—and continued two days, neither party gaining any material advantage. The third day gen. Gaines retired, and threw up a breast work—after which he advanced to the river with two hundred men, recommenced the skirmish, and then retreated with a hope of deceiving his enemy, and deceiving them into an ambush. After dark on the same day, the entire body of Indians, now largely reinforced by the arrival of scattering squads, crossed the river and had the bravery to attack him in his trenches. The stratagem was thus successful—the cannon opened upon them, and played with such effect, that it is presumed three hundred Indians and negroes were killed. I say presumed, as it is not known whether that number was destroyed in the single engagement, or in the entire rencontre. When the cannon opened, the savages began a "terrible howling," and no wonder, for I am told that all the trace chains belonging to the wagons were used instead of balls, and literally mowed them down like grass beneath the scythe. Two of our officers were wounded in that engagement—one of whom, it is understood, has since died. Gaines has since sent in to Clutch for provisions; but afterwards countermanded the order, as the Indians would capture the wagons. He is understood to be surrounded. His provisions must be gone—and unless a reinforcement has been sent by Scott, his fate, and that of his gallant army, are sealed.

I was in camp—between this and Hanson's—when Prince, the express, came in; the Indians having attacked him in true military style, within eleven miles of this, and ordered him to the "right about," with a shower of fifteen or twenty bullets. The top of his cap was literally shot away, and several balls passed through his coat. A detachment from lieut. colonel Hewitt's battalion was on this morning ordered out to skin the country, and cut up the varlets "like a gourd."

St. Augustine, March 5, 10 o'clock—night.

DEAR SIR: The express, Minroe, came in to-day from Picolata, with despatches; but nothing further is heard from general

Gaines. One hundred and forty men from the country adjacent to the Wythlacoochee had gone to join him—and cattle, to what amount I do not know, had been driven down at the same time.

The officer supposed to be dead, or mortally wounded, is lieut. Izard.

I was wrong in saying that Gaines had approached Fort Drane—it was Camp King.

Forty horsemen left here about dark to scour a place called Turnbull's swamp; and also to assist the detachment from Hewitt's battalion.

The troops from Darien have returned home.

From the National Intelligencer.

The news from Florida, received yesterday, is, we are sorry to say, any thing but agreeable.

There is said to be a want of good understanding, which was but too justly apprehended, between the two general officers, major gen. Scott, who was ordered to take command of that military ground, and maj. gen. Gaines, who repaired thither, by way of Tampa Bay, from New Orleans, on learning the state of things in Florida. The old question concerning the relative rank of these distinguished officers seems to have unfortunately led to practical results, already unfortunate, and which may in the end be disastrous. We know nothing of the merits of this question, nor do we mean to censure any one for what has taken place. The collision of the authority of these officers has been accidental. We trust that there may be in the end no reason to deplore it. Our business at present is only with facts, as we understand them.

Letters have been received in this city from authentic sources in Florida, which states that general Gaines had not, on his reaching the military stations at which he aimed on marching from Tampa Bay, joined general Scott, but, with the troops under his command, had marched in a different direction, in pursuit of the Indian force. On the 28th of February, in reconnoitering on the Wythlacoochee, about two miles west of gen. Clinch's battle-ground, he was fired upon by the Indians, who met him in considerable force; and the conflict which then took place resulted in the death of two of the Louisiana volunteers, and ten regulars and volunteers wounded. On the next day, (the 29th), while preparing a small work to command the ford across the river, he was attacked at 10 o'clock A. M. on three sides of his camp. The attack lasted two hours. The Indians were repulsed eventually with considerable loss, there being of the United States troops one sergeant killed, and one officer and ten regulars wounded, and of the volunteers one officer and twenty privates wounded. The Indian force was supposed by general Gaines to amount to 1,500, his own command numbering more than a thousand.

It was understood that gen. Gaines would not move from the position in which he had intrenched himself, until he heard from gen. Clinch, to whom he had written, requesting supplies and mounted force.

In connexion with the above information, it is proper to state that major general Macomb, commander-in-chief of the army, left this city on Sunday for the seat of war in Florida with authority, as is understood, to take command himself, should he think it necessary, but not to supersede gen. Scott in the special command assigned to him by his orders, unless he (general Macomb) be of opinion that circumstances require him to do so.

The following is the only letter of confirmation received since our publication of Tuesday. The Washington Globe of yesterday says:

By the official reports received at the adjutant general's office yesterday, from major gen. Scott, we learn that the force which marched from Tampa Bay, under major general Gaines, while reconnoitering on the Wythlacoochee, near general Clinch's battle ground, was met by a considerable number of hostile Indians, on the 28th of February, and a slight skirmish took place, which resulted in the loss of two Louisiana volunteers killed, and ten regulars and volunteers wounded. Lieut. Izard of the United States dragoons, was among the wounded.

Whilst making preparations to cross the Wythlacoochee, on the 29th February, a spirited attack was made on general Gaines' camp by the Indians, who were repulsed with very considerable loss. The general states that the officers concur with him in opinion that the enemy's force amounted to not less than 1,500. Of gen. Gaines' command (supposed to consist of ten or eleven hundred men) there was, on the 29th, one sergeant of the regular army killed, and one officer (lieutenant Duncan 2d artillery), and ten privates wounded. Of the volunteers, there were one officer, and twenty privates wounded.

Extract of a letter received in Charleston, from an officer in the U. S. army, dated

Fort Drane March 1.

"Circumstances which I could not control prevented my arriving here until the evening of the 25th ult. when I learned that gen. Clinch had the morning before left Fort King to see gen. Gaines. The next day gen. Clinch returned here, informing us that gen. Gaines with 1,000 men, about one half regulars, the rest volunteers from Louisiana, had moved from Fort King, about 8 that morning (26th) with the design of returning to Tampa Bay, via Wythlacoochee. Upon reaching that river, near an old crossing, while gen. Gaines and gen. Smith were reconnoitering the river in person, they were fired upon by the Indians, who were strung along the banks for two miles; a fight ensued across the waters. Gen. G. had two killed and several wounded, lieut. Izard badly, capt. Sanders, late sutler, and capt. Armstrong of U. S. schooner Mott; we heard the cannon here for two days. Yesterday morning, an express arrived from gen. G. to gen. C. requesting more men, provisions, ammunition, &c. we still continue to hear firing, and this morning another express arrived, stating that gen. G. had entrenched himself while he was preparing boats, bridges, &c. gen. Gaines writes himself, that yesterday morning, (29th) at 10 o'clock, the Indians force, believed to be 1,500 strong attacked two sides of his encampment and approached so near by his lines, as to wound men upon the opposite line, a distance of 200 yards. The attack lasted two hours, when the enemy were repulsed. Lieut. Duncan is among the wounded, 10 in number and 1 or 2 killed in the last attack.

Gen. Clinch has only about 450 men around him, 200 of these volunteers. Col. Bankhead we learn is on the march here from Picolata with some 400 volunteers. Gen. Eustis is east of the St. Johns, and gen. Scott at the last accounts was at Picolata, I think however he will be here before many hours. No supplies of any kind have reached this post yet, but we are in hopes they will soon, as there is much anxiety, as well as much necessity, to move down to the aid of gen. Gaines. The wagons were all sent down to Picolata on the 28th for provisions, some one or two small carts. They were despatched before day this morning with ammunition and a few stores and 25 head of beef cattle to gen. Gaines, but upon receiving the express this day at 12, a message was sent after to order them back, as the Indians would assuredly get them. Gen. Gaines when he left Fort King had but 10 days rations, and those gen. Clinch took up from this place, leaving but little here. The weather is becoming very warm.

From the Savannah Georgian, 9th inst.

We are indebted to a friend for the following copy of a letter from an officer of the army at Fort Drane, to a brother officer at Picolata, received here by the Santee on Monday.

Fort Drane, Florida, March 1, 1836.

"Gen. Gaines left Fort King on the morning of the 26th ult. On the 27th, he reached the Wythlacoochee near gen. Clinch's battle ground. Whilst reconnoitering the river he was fired on from the opposite bank. One man was killed and some five wounded. On the 28th the battle continued across the river—one killed and several (say 7 or 8) wounded—among them lieutenant Izard, of the dragoons. On yesterday the Indians attacked them in their encampment about 10 o'clock, A. M. The battle lasted two hours. One sergeant killed—wounded, one officer, (lieut. Duncan), and 10 men, regulars. Of the volunteers, 1 officer and 10 men wounded. He wants reinforcements, provisions and ammunition.

"It is indeed harrowing to the feelings to think that we are within 35 miles (by the road) and cannot join for want of supplies and means of transporting them."

In addition to the above, we learn that eight guns were discharged at the Santee, while coming down the St. Johns, and about 25 miles above Picolata, by a party of Indians, four of whom were distinctly seen. One of the balls perforated one side of the cabin and lodged in the opposite side, without injury to any one.

General Gaines' command.

The following extract of a letter from an officer of the U. S. army, written on the 12th ult. from Tampa Bay, exhibits the force under gen. Gaines.

Our command amounts to, say about 1,100, and 120 friendly Indians, consisting of 4 companies of U. S. artillery, 7 companies of the 4th regiment U. S. infantry, a detachment of U. S. marines, and the regiment of Louisiana volunteers, major gen. Gaines, commanding, col. Twigg commanding brigade, col. Foster, 4th regiment infantry, col. S. F. Smith, Louisiana volunteers, major Belton, the artillery, lieutenant Waldron, the marines, and Isolate Emaritia, chief of the friendly Indians.

Fort King, Florida, Feb. 29, 1836.

GENERAL: Agreeably to your directions, I observed the battle ground six or seven miles north of the Wythlacoochee river, where major Dade and his command were destroyed by the Seminole Indians on the 28th of December last, and have the honor to submit the following report:

The force under your command which arrived at this post to-day from Tampa Bay, encamped on the night of the 19th inst. on the ground occupied by major Dade on the night of the 17th of December. He and his party were destroyed on the 28th of December, about four miles in advance of that position. He was advancing towards this post, and was attacked from the north, so that on the 20th inst. we came upon the rear of his battle ground about 9 o'clock in the morning. Our advanced guard had passed the ground without halting, when the general and his staff came upon one of the most appalling scenes that can be imagined. We first saw some broken and scattered boxes; then a cart, the two oxen of which were lying dead; as if they had fallen asleep, their yokes still on them: a little to the right, one or two horses were seen. We then came to a small enclosure, made by felling trees in such a manner as to form a triangular breastwork for defence. Within the triangle, along the north and west faces of it were about thirty bodies mere skeletons, although much of the clothing was left upon them. These were lying, almost every one of them, in precisely the position they must have occupied during the fight—their heads next to the logs over which they had delivered their fire, and their bodies stretched with striking regularity parallel to each other. They had evidently been shot dead at their posts, and the Indians had not disturbed them, except by taking the scalps of most of them. Passing this little breastwork we found other bodies along the road, and by the side of the road, generally behind trees which had been resorted to for covers from the enemy's fire. Advancing about two hundred yards further, we found a cluster of bodies in the middle of the road. These were evidently the advanced guard, in the rear of which was the body of major Dade, and to the right, that of captain Fraser.

These were all doubtless shot down on the first fire of the Indians, except, perhaps, captain Fraser, who must, however, have fallen very early in the fight. Those in the road and by the trees, fell during the first attack. It was during a cessation of the fire that the little band still remaining, about thirty in number, threw up the triangular breastwork, which, from the haste with which it was constructed, was necessarily defective, and could not protect the men in the second attack.

We had with us many of the personal friends of the officers of major Dade's command, and it is gratifying to be able to state that every officer was identified by undoubted evidence. They were buried, and the cannon, a six-pounder, that the Indians had thrown into a swamp, was recovered and placed vertically at the head of the grave, where it is to be hoped it will long remain. The bodies of the non-commissioned officers and privates were buried in two graves, and it was found that every man was accounted for. The command was composed of eight officers and one hundred and two non-commissioned officers and privates. The bodies of eight officers and ninety-eight men were interred, four men having escaped; three of whom reached Tampa Bay; the fourth was killed the day after the battle.

It may be proper to observe, that the attack was not made from a hammock, but in a thinly wooded country; the Indians being concealed by palmetto and grass, which has since been burned.

The two companies were captain Fraser's of the 3d artillery, and captain Gardiner's, of the 2d artillery. The officers were major Dade, of the 4th infantry, captains Fraser and Gardiner, second lieutenant Basinger, brevet second lieutenant R. Henderson, Mudge and Kenis, of the artillery, and doctor J. S. Gatlin. I have the honor to be, with the highest respect, your obedient servant, captain 1st infantry, act. insp'r general.

(Signed)

Maj. gen. Edmund P. Gaines, com. western department,
Fort King, Florida.

Extract of a letter from a young officer of the army to his correspondent in Washington, dated Fort Drane, Lang Syne, Florida, February 24, 1836.

"My last letter to you was dated from Tampa Bay, and I am now at gen. Clinch's plantation. We left Tampa on the 13th inst. and have marched across the country to this post without having the pleasure to meet a single hostile Indian. When we left the bay, general Gaines did not contemplate proceeding as far as Fort King; but, on our arrival at the battle-ground where poor Dade's command was butchered, our provisions were scarce, and we were forced to continue on, for the purpose of procuring supplies. Upon arriving at Fort King, however, we found the garrison there unable to furnish us with more than one day's rations, and were therefore forced to come here, a distance of twenty-four miles, to get something to eat. The artillery and volunteers were left at Fort King, and the 4th infantry was sent to procure provisions. We return this morning, and shall probably start the day after to-morrow for some of the Indian villages, with the view of hunting the boys up. On our arriving at the battle-ground, we found the bodies of the dead lying generally as they were shot. We had the melancholy pleasure of burying them. I counted the skulls as they were thrown in, and there were 98 soldiers and 8 officers. The officers were recognised by different signs and marks about them. They were fully identified. Three graves were dug, and the bodies interred therein. We of the regulars marched around the graves to the dead march, and then they were covered over. Poor fellows! There was not one among us who did not resolve to revenge them; and only give us a chance, and we will fulfil our determination. We saw signs of Indians on our route, but they themselves kept out of the way. We shot some cattle and hogs, and caught some horses as we came along. We also burnt some small deserted villages. In one of these we found corn, rice, and beans enough for one day, which was of material assistance to us."

[OFFICIAL.]

Head quarters, 2d reg't mounted volunteers,
Near Fort Drane, Jan. 13th, 1836.

Sir: In obedience to your order of the 10th inst. I proceeded to scour the country in the neighborhood of Stafford's. Finding but few tracks going in the direction of the nation, I concluded that the Indians seen at Stafford's, a few days before, were in our rear. On our return march yesterday about 4 o'clock, and when near the house of Mr. Curry, a large smoke was seen rising in the direction of Wetumkee. We were on the march at half speed to ascertain the cause, when the advance guard, under lieutenant Bannerman, and captain Bellamy's company, which was also ordered in advance, were fired upon by a party of Indians. The battalion, at increased speed, was hurrying to their support, and was within a half mile of them, when the Indians opened a severe fire on our rear and each flank at the same time. The battalion was immediately dismounted, and charged the enemy, which fled, firing as they did so, to a hammock. Not knowing the strength of the party against which captain Bellamy and lieutenant Bannerman were contending, who were still firing at the distance of a mile or less from us, I deemed it prudent not to enter the hammock until I could ascertain that fact; and with that view, despatched my adjutant; but before he reached the point where the attack was made, capt. B. and lieut. B. (who behaved very gallantly) had routed the enemy, and the firing had ceased. In a short time they united with us; but it was then too late to enter the hammock, the sun being only fifteen minutes high. We therefore took our position in rifle shot of the hammock, and returned a brisk fire, which was kept up by the Indians until dark, when we retired to the top of the hill, and rested upon our arms until daylight.

During the night they left the hammock, and, I suppose, from the direction of the trail which we followed some distance this morning, they had returned to the nation.

Captain Alston, commanding the left company when the attack was made, supported himself and sustained the attack in a gallant manner, until he was joined by captain Caswell's company, when the charge was made. Capt. Caswell was firm and brave; major Sam'l Reid conducted himself throughout the action in the most gallant manner, always at his post. Adjutant Schuebe is entitled to the highest commendation for the cool and gallant manner in which he discharged his duties; and Dr. Mitchell was cool and attentive to his duty.

I feel it due to the greatest portion of my command to say, they acquitted themselves to my entire satisfaction.

The following is the return of the wounded:

Lieut. Smith, of captain B's company, slightly wounded;
—Davis, a private, severely wounded; —McRany, of captain C's company, slightly wounded.

The loss of the enemy was (as reported to me) as far as ascertained, six; their wounded must have been considerable.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obt. serv't.

H. C. PARISH,

col. com. 2d reg't mounted volunteers,
Gen. D. L. Clinch, commanding.

Pensacola, Feb. 20,

We learn that a court of inquiry ordered by gen. Clinch, at the instance of col. Parish at Fort King, have unanimously acquitted col. P. of all improper conduct in the unhappy occurrence which caused the death of lieut. Ward. We have examined the proceedings and testimony of the court, and are satisfied that the shooting of lieutenant Ward was a melancholy, painful necessity, imposed on col. P. not only by the rules of military discipline, but by a still higher principle—the principle of self-preservation. He ordered lieutenant Ward to be arrested. Lieut. W. resisted the order—used offensive language to col. Parish, and armed with three pistols, one of them cocked and presented, stood out in open defiance, and declared that he would shoot down the first man who attempted to execute the order. Much of the testimony goes to show that lieut. W. was in the act of presenting his pistol at col. Parish when the latter shot him. We are informed that much excitement against col. Parish exists about Tallahassee, but there can be no doubt that, so soon as the facts are made known, the excitement will give way to unqualified approbation of his conduct. In the bereavement which the family of Mr. Ward has suffered, all must sympathize, and none, we feel assured, from a knowledge of col. Parish, will sympathize with them more deeply than he. The deceased was a brother of Geo. Ward, esq. of Tallahassee. The following is the finding of the court of inquiry:

"The court having patiently and carefully examined all the witnesses who were named to them, and investigated fully the causes which led to the death of lieut. William Ward, of the volunteers, proceed, in obedience to the order instituting the court, to give its opinion thereon.

"The court is of the unanimous opinion that lieut. William Ward was killed by R. C. Parish; the said col. Parish being in the legal execution of his office; and that he is fully justified, from the circumstances of the case, in doing so.

"It would be impossible to conceive a case which would more entirely justify an officer in command in taking the law into his own hands. His legal and necessary authority as commanding officer was defied and resisted; he took the usual and legal military means to repress resistance by ordering the arrest and confinement of lieut. Ward, his seizure and disarming repeatedly; no one would obey his order. He was obliged, therefore, to execute the order himself, and in doing so his conduct is fully justified in the opinion of the court.

"C. M. THURSTON, capt. 3d artillery, president.

"Horace Brooks, brevet 2d lieut. and recorder."

ORDERS—NO. 1.

Head quarters, army of Florida, Picolata, Feb. 22, 1836.

Major general Scott, having arrived in Florida, assumes the general direction of the war against the hostile Seminole Indians.

The staff officers attached to general head quarters, at present are capt. Canfield, (topographical engineer); lieut. Chambers, (chief of the commissariat); and lieut's Van Buren, Temple, and Johnston, aids-de-camp. All orders and instructions, conveyed by either of them in the name of the major general, and whether orally or in writing, will be duly obeyed.

The right and left wings of the army, or the troops on the west and east side of the St. Johns river, will be continued under the respective orders of brigadier generals Clinch and Eustis, and the forces which are to operate from Tampa bay under col. Lindsay, will, when they come into line, constitute the centre. The wings will soon be greatly reinforced by the arrival of both regulars and volunteers.

The three immediate commanders of the right, left and centre of the army, respectively, will generally receive orders direct from general head-quarters; but, of course, every junior will obey every senior according to the rules and articles of war, and the usages of the service, whether the parties belong to the militia, or to the militia and regular army.

As, for the first time, patriotic volunteers from South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana and Florida, are to come into the same line, with a portion of the regular army, it is confidently hoped that a beneficial emulation, without unkindness or prejudice, may animate the different forces. All are equally Americans, actuated by the like determination, to subdue a treacherous and a common foe.

But valor and patriotism alone are not sufficient for that end. Some tactical instruction and an exact obedience to commands are also necessary. Instruction can only be required by opportunity and labor. A firm resolution to obey, accomplishes the other great requisite at once. Let the resolution, then, be promptly taken by all who have nobly turned out to avenge their butchered countrymen.

But again—to parade, to march, to mount guard and to fight, are not the only duties of war. To handle and preserve the supplies of the army, and to construct camp and other field defences, are equally required of every good soldier. A corps of servants for these purposes, would be too large and cumbersome. It would double the army and render one half too mean, and the other half too delicate, for the glory of a well contested field. Fatigue parties, must, therefore, when wanted, be furnished by all the corps in their turn, and proportionally.

St. Augustine, March 6.

Captain Elmore's company of S. C. volunteers and lieu. Irving's company of U. S. artillery, accompanied by captain Canfield, U. S. T. E. lieu. Brumby, sailed on the 27th February, in the steamboat Santee, to establish a depot at Volusia. On the return of the steamboat she was fired upon by a party of six Indians about five miles above Pylata. One of the balls lodging in the captain's birth. The fire was returned by those on board, but without effect. This no doubt is the same party who took the two negroes prisoners, on Saturday last, as it was but a few miles from their encampment, and only two days afterwards.

General Bull, of the S. C. militia, arrived in town on Sunday last, and immediately assumed the command of his brigade.

We regret to learn that the measles had broken out in capt. Parker's company of S. C. volunteers, stationed at St. Joseph's. Twenty-six cases had occurred; but we are happy to state that they are all convalescent.

The steamboat Dolphin, capt. Pennoyer, with two companies of U. S. troops under the command of major Kirby, sailed on Tuesday last to take post at Williams' plantation, on the Halifax river, for the purpose of establishing a depot there.

We are informed that seventy wagons are waiting at Picolata, to convey provisions to gen. Clinch, whose supply had been much diminished by the quantity taken by gen. Gaines, from Fort Drake.

A mounted regiment of S. C. militia, may be expected to arrive here in all this week.

The Herald states that some wrong impressions had obtained currency respecting the discharge of the Florida militia. General Eustis has authorised the editor to say that his order did not contemplate the delivery of a single musket. He also desires the public to be assured that it was in a spirit of kindness and respect that his communication was made to general Hernandez.

An express had arrived at St. Augustine, from McRae's, who states that he saw a large number of Indian tracks near Golconda mill. Gen. Eustis immediately ordered a detachment of troops to scour the country in that direction, a part of whom went by water, and a part by land.

Charleston Courier office, March 7, 4 P. M.

The following is an extract of a letter, written by one of the officers of col. Brisbane's regiment, forwarded to St. Augustine by express. It is dated 29th February.

"We have just arrived at a point about 50 miles south of St. Augustine. We are among the Indians, at least some portions of them. Our scouts yesterday discovered a small hunting party, but the great distance prevented us from effectually intercepting their retreat. The severity of the campaign has already been experienced. Last night was unpleasant enough, and during the whole time, we had been compelled to move without our tents; and throughout the whole night, our force, consisting of four companies, were obliged to remain upon their arms, with the elements exercising their whole force upon them, and for any thing we know, the foe watching us. Our men have all behaved in the most commendable manner since we have been in sight of the enemy, and the calmness and precision they have evinced, and the correctness of their manœuvring, has won for them the most flattering esteem from col. Brisbane their commanding officer.

"We are now bivouacked at McRae's plantation. Up to this point we have seen the most numerous evidences of the savage warfare waged by our foes. Plantations totally devastated, and not a single face but that of the foe meeting the troops as they advance.

"I think myself, that it is a matter of some doubt whether we will have any thing like a general engagement with the Indians. I rather think that it will be but a detached kind of warfare, in which there will be more of fatigue than danger. My health has never been better—the fatigue and exposure agrees with me remarkably well.

Picolata, February 22, 1836.

The enemy, consisting of Indians and negroes, may be estimated certainly at 2,000—and, probably, a greater number, as it is believed that some of the lower Creeks have joined them. The country is very favorable for the enemy, and extremely unfavorable for us. A part of it is almost a terra incognita—other parts not to be penetrated—scarcely a road for wheel carriages, and none leading to their fastnesses. Then the difficulties of finding the enemy, and the almost insurmountable difficulties of transporting provisions and ammunition, will cause us incalculable labor and trouble. The war would soon be brought to a close, if we could encounter the enemy, but they can so easily elude us, and force us to harrassing marches and counter marches, that I apprehend we shall have a protracted campaign. And again, not one of the least difficulties we have to encounter, is the insubordination and want of military knowledge, (which only can be acquired by experience), of the militia. The loss of public property, by their negligence, and propensity to waste and destroy, is enormous. It is clearly evident that the expense of maintaining an equal force of militia, with that of regulars, would be more than quadruple. This war will, in all probability, cost the government at least $3,000,000; whereas, if we had had a larger army, the expense of conducting it to a close, would not have exceeded one-fourth of that sum, and the war would be terminated in half the time it will now take to accomplish that object by the mixed forces. Our little army is literally used up—at one period you hear of it, or part of it, on the confines of the Rocky Mountains, at another in the marshes of Florida—and a communication perhaps, directed to an officer at Portsmouth, N. H. may, if there be no obstruction to the mail, or the letter not returned to the general post office, as a dead letter, follow and reach him on the Gulf of Mexico; and the reverse, in every three or four months in the year—and this is known to the country and to congress, and still the army is not increased, and the officers thus harrassed allowed to subsist on a poor miserable pittance. It is impolitic and ungenerous. There is a charm, a fascination, in a military life, particularly in the stirring time of war, that attracts to the service; and which notwithstanding the admonitions of policy, to seek some more lucrative employment—and the unfeeling parsimony of congress—we cannot resist.

We have a rumor here that gen. Gaines is at Tampa Bay, which I believe to be true. If this be so, he has not received the order from army head quarters to move upon the Arkansas river with a designated force, or he is acting in violation of orders. The command of the army of Florida has been assigned to gen. Scott, by the president of the United States, and it might be attended with unpleasant and unfortunate consequences; if he and gen. Gaines should meet, since their relative rank has not been definitely settled by government—at least the two generals are at issue on the subject.

Letter to the editor of the Lancaster Union, dated

St. Augustine, February 20, 1836.

The war will soon commence in earnest. General Scott has arrived at Picolata, and general Eustis at this port. The preparation of the troops proceeds with the utmost rapidity. The regiment of colonel Brisbane is now ready for the field, and several companies have already left here for their stations. By an express received last night, from captain Henry of the Irish volunteers, we learn that a fresh Indian trail, indicating a force of about three hundred, was come upon, twenty miles from this city. It is not at all improbable that, before this, the first blow has been struck in the campaign, and that that company has reaped the honor of a victory. The principle of the campaign is to bring such an overwhelming force into the field as to render a contest hopeless on the part of the Indians. It is expected that their retreat will be cut off at the St. John's. If it is not, their reduction will cost much blood and infinite fatigue.

Should they reach their fastnesses, the everglades, it would leave the contest doubtful. It is certain that, if they can maintain themselves for two months, nothing can be done with them till next winter; for it would be madness to attempt any thing in the summer; indeed, it would be impossible to keep any troops in the field, for the climate is fatal, and mosquitoes are almost as mortal. Our company went out on a scout around the city, about twenty miles, two days since. We had to be content with the sand and palmettos, as we did not meet a trace of the Indians, though they could not have been far off, as the trail recently discovered is not more than twenty miles from the city. It was very hard marching, deep sands, frequent ponds, with long grass, with the accompaniment of the palmetto, constituting the luxuries of the excursion. I expect to be in the woods on the campaign in about a week. I am now waiting for the company, which it will be my fortune in part to command either as first or second officer. It will be a miserably long week, and I expect to suffer more than I have yet undergone, though I shall be able to sleep and eat, which I have not been able to do for a month past.

I heard of an act of cruelty committed by the savages recently, which has lessened my pity for them greatly. In one of their late burnings and captures of negroes, they took an old man and his wife. They wished to leave the old man to starve, and take his wife, who was much younger, with them. She refused to go without her husband; they threatened to shoot her, if she did not; true to her affection, she persisted in her determination. They then deliberately shot the old man through the head, as he was standing basking against the house. I was told this by a negro who made his escape from them, and who witnessed himself the horrid deed. He stole off in the night while they were all in a dead sleep, after a drunken debauch, the sentinel himself prostrated by the peculiar enemy of their race. If any thing of consequence occurs to the army generally, or to your friend, individually, you shall hear it.

The Tallahassee Floridian contains a letter dated Tallahassee, Feb. 1, from Mr. Wyatt to a friend in East Florida, expressing some important opinions relative to the probable course of the belligerent Indians. He thinks "that the Indians never intended to make a general resistance on this side of the Peninsula; that their object was, (which in all probability they have by this time accomplished), to retire to their old hiding places in the everglades, as they did in 1818, when gen. Jackson routed them from this part of Florida;" and that in order to effect this, they commenced by murdering and pillaging the frontier citizens, on the whole Alachua settlement, and gathering and driving off large stocks of horses, cattle and hogs, to the other side of the Wythla-cochee, before a competent force could be put in the field against them; intending to retreat with their families, stock, &c. to the cape and everglades, by crossing the head waters of the St. John's, near its union with Lake Macao, and thence passing along the belt of land between that lake and Indian river, until they finally get round to Cape Florida, and to their old celebrated hunting grounds, between that place and Cape Sable. The massacre of major Dale and his troops, in order to break up the communication between Tampa Bay, and the agency, and the numerous skirmishes had and offered along the whole line from Wythla-cochee to the Atlantic, diminishing to the west but increasing to the south east, as they retreated, were all auxiliary to the main plan. Mr. W. thinks that the east may be safe when the Indians all retire to the cape—though even then only for a short time; that the forces now rendezvousing at the present seat of war, will not finally settle the difficulty; for it will be impossible to follow the savages by land during the rainy season; and that a new expedition to the cape and everglades is not to be looked for sooner than August or September. The government should not withdraw its troops from the present seat of war without erecting a strong line of defence from the Gulf to the Atlantic, as a security against the renewal of Indian ravages, during the harvest next fall. To erect and garrison block houses 20 miles apart, with 5 foot and 25 mounted men each, from the Wythla-cochee, by the way of Wetumkee, and Picolata to some point south of St. Augustine, would not require more than 400 men, which could be readily raised in West and East Florida, by volunteer engagements, say 3 months at a time.

Mr. W. estimates the Indian force at 4,000 effective warriors, including negroes—the country they occupy being about 300 miles long, by 125 broad, the centre (two-thirds) of which is covered by a chain of lakes studded with islands and almost endless glades, cliquered with lagoons and deep narrow streams, making in all directions into the sea, and arched over with mats of evergreens and high grass; the other part being fertile land, abounding in comely or arroyo root, an excellent substitute for bread, and producing a variety of fruit; the adjacent forest filled with wild game, and the adjacent waters with fish and wild fowl. Mr. W. further expresses the opinion that the Indians, who have had much intercourse and some intermarriages with Spanish fishermen, entertain a vain hope of finally escaping to the West Indies, with their negroes, and that it will be necessary to encompass them by block houses on land, and armed vessels or boats by water, so as to break up all communication between them and the Spanish fishermen, and our runaway negroes, or they may keep up a petty war with us for the next 5 years.

General Clinch, in an official report made to gen. Scott on the 20th ult. estimates the number of the hostile force in Florida at fifteen hundred Indian warriors and two or three hundred negroes.

Mobile (Ala.) March 2. The Alabama regiment of volunteers for the Seminole campaign sailed this morning for Tampa Bay. They are as fine a set of men as were ever gathered together for such an occasion—all vigorous, healthy, and in the prime of life, generally between twenty and thirty-five years of age.

The regiment consists of ten companies of volunteers from the following counties: three from Tuscaloosa, two from Montgomery, one from Autauga, (Wetumpka), one from Dallas, one from Wilcox, one from Pickens, and one from Fayette.

The field officers are col. Christolm, lieutenant col. Crabbe and major Taliaferro.

One of the New Orleans companies which came over here to obtain an opportunity of joining the troops in service, was accepted by col. Libbsey, and accompanied the regiment. The other was disbanded. [Register.]

From the Louisiana Advertiser, 24th ultimo.

By the arrival of the schooner Mary Dow, captain TITLEY, we learn that numbers of the Indians were flocking into Tampa Bay, for the purpose of submitting themselves to the plan of emigration originally agreed on by them. There were upwards of five hundred of them awaiting passage in vessels bound for this place and Mississippi. Capt. T. further states that the Indians are becoming extremely useful by acting in the capacity of guides to the volunteers arriving at that place.

THE CREEK INDIANS.

The Tuscaloosa (Ala.) Intelligencer of the 29th inst. says:—"We understand that recent information received by the executive of this state, induces the belief that these Indians are making preparations to commence hostilities against our citizens in consequence of which we are informed the governor has ordered out one thousand mounted men, to be stationed at different points, and act as a corps of observation for the protection of the inhabitants near the Indian locations, in the eastern part of this state.

We learn further, that these men will be ordered mostly from Madison, Jackson, Limestone, and some of the other north eastern counties."

The Salt River Journal, published in Missouri, says:—

The Sioux nation on our north are beginning to manifest some restiveness, and some difficulty is apprehended. The troops at Rock Island, Fort Crawford and Prairie Du Chien have been ordered to Fort Snelling at the St. Peters agency. The Sioux nation is one of the largest tribes in the north.

TWENTY-FOURTH CONGRESS—FIRST SESSION.

SENATE.

March 11. A message was received from the president of the United States accompanying a report from the treasury department in relation to the expenditures on the Cumberland road, which, on motion of Mr. Clay, was ordered to be printed.

Mr. Knight, from the committee on manufactures, reported the bill, without amendment, for the allowance of drawback on imported hemp when manufactured into cordage, which was ordered to be printed.

On motion of Mr. Wright, the amendments made to this bill by the house of representatives were concurred in by the senate.

Several other bills were passed among them that to settle the northern boundary of Ohio.

The senate proceeded to consider the bill for the continuation of the Cumberland road.

The amendment of Mr. Clay to reduce the aggregate amount of appropriations in this bill to $600,000, were agreed to, and the bill being reported, they were all concurred in by the senate by a vote of 29 to 11.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Buchanan, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Cuthbert, Davis, Ewing, of Illinois, Ewing, of Ohio, Goldsborough, Grundy, Hendricks, King, of Ala. Knight, Linn, McKean, Moore, Nicholas, Niles, Robbins, Robinson, Tallmadge, Tipton, Tomlinson, Wall, Webster, Wright—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Black, Brown, Calhoun, Hill, Hubbard, King, of Georgia, Leigh, Naudain, Porter, Prentiss, Ruggles, Shepley, Swift, Walker, White—16.

The bill as it was ordered to be engrossed, is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c. That the sum of two hundred thousand dollars be, and the same is hereby appropriated, for the purpose of continuing the Cumberland road in the state of Ohio, that the sum of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars be, and the same is hereby appropriated, for continuing the Cumberland road in the state of Indiana, including materials for erecting a bridge across the Wabash river; and that the sum of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars be, and the same is hereby appropriated, for continuing the Cumberland road in the state of Illinois; which sums shall be paid out of any money not otherwise appropriated, and replaced out of the fund reserved for laying out and making roads under the direction of congress, by the several acts passed for the admission of the states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Missouri into the union, on an equal footing with the original states: Provided, That the expenditure herein made for the state of Illinois shall be limited to the graduating and bridging of the road therein; and shall not be construed as pledging congress to future appropriations for the purpose of Macadamizing the road.

Sec. 2. That the moneys hereby appropriated for the construction of the said road in the states of Ohio and Indiana be expended in completing the greatest possible continuous portion of said road in the said states, so that such finished parts thereof may be surrendered to the said states, respectively.

The question of the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia, was called up by Mr. Leigh, and he withdrew his amendment.

Mr. McKean moved to amend Mr. Buchanan's motion by inserting as a reason for rejection, "that it is inexpedient to legislate on the subject of slavery in the District of Columbia," but he did not succeed.

The whole subject was then agreed to as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Brown, Buchanan, Clay, Crittenden, Cuthbert, Ewing, of Ill. Ewing, of Ohio, Goldsborough, Grundy, Hill, Hubbard, King, of Alab. King, of Georgia, Leigh, Linn, McKean, Morris, Nicholas, Niles, Porter, Preston, Robbins, Robinson, Ruggles, Shepley, Tallmadge, Tipton, Tomlinson, Walker, Wall, Wright—34.

NAYS—Messrs. Davis, Hendricks, Knight, Prentiss, Southard, Webster—6.

The senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

Adjourned to Monday.

March 14. Mr. Leigh presented the credentials of W. C. Rives, elected a senator from Virginia, in the room of John Tyler, resigned.

Mr. Rives was then qualified, and took his seat.

Mr. King, of Alabama, offered the following joint resolution; which was read a first time:

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled, That the president of the senate and speaker of the house of representatives close the present session of congress by an adjournment of their respective houses on the — day of May next.

Mr. Ewing, of Ohio, proposed to take up the land bill, which was rejected by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing, of Ohio, Hendricks, Knight, Leigh, McKean, Mangum, Naudain, Porter, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson, Webster—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Brown, Buchanan, Cuthbert, Ewing, of Ill. Grundy, Hill, Hubbard, King, of Ala. King, of Geo. Linn, Moore, Morris, Nicholas, Niles, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Shepley, Tallmadge, Tipton, Walker, Wall, White, Wright—26.

The bill for the continuation of the Cumberland road in Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, was read a third time and passed.

Some time was spent in executive business—after which the senate adjourned.

March 15. After the minor business had been disposed of—Mr. Ewing, of Ohio, moved the senate to take up the bill to authorise the distribution of the proceeds of the public lands, &c.

Mr. Buchanan expressed a hope that the senate would proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. Ewing called for the yeas and nays on the question, which were ordered; and, after a few words from Messrs. Benton, Ewing and Black, the question was taken, and decided as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Black, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing, of Ohio, Goldsborough, Hendricks, Kent, Knight, Leigh, McKean, Mangum, Naudain, Porter, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson, Webster, White—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Cuthbert, Ewing, of Ill. Grundy, Hill, Hubbard, King, of Alabama, King, of Georgia, Linn, Morris, Nicholas, Niles, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Shepley, Tallmadge, Tipton, Walker, Wall, Wright—23. So the senate determined to take up the bill.

Mr. Ewing, of Ohio, then addressed the senate at length on the character and merits of the bill, going at large into a variety of interesting statements and views of the finances of the country, confirmatory of those which he made a few days ago on the same subject. Among other things, Mr. Ewing stated, that, as estimated, with the balance in the treasury on the first of January last, the amount in the treasury on the first of January next would be

Appropriations to be paid out,

$23,134,000

Balance in the treasury 1st January, 1837,

$51,273,000

About half past 2, Mr. Ewing being exhausted, gave way, and

Mr. Southard moved that the senate adjourn.

Mr. Buchanan moved to postpone the further consideration of the bill until to-morrow, but

Mr. Ewing refused to yield the floor for such motion. He said he was willing to yield to an informal motion, which would leave the question in the situation in which he left it, to be resumed as a matter of course. This might be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. Buchanan expressed his willingness.

Mr. Benton. I wish to be excluded from any such consent. Mr. Ewing then resumed his remarks.

At 3 o'clock, Mr. Naudain moved that the senate now adjourn.

The motion was rejected—yeas 19, nays 22. The subject was, at last, postponed until to-morrow; and

On motion of Mr. Buchanan, the senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business; after which,

The senate adjourned.

March 16. Mr. Webster presented several abolition petitions—and a desultory debate followed, in which Messrs. Webster, Mangum, Rives, King, of Ala. and Preston, took part.

The following resolution, prefaced by a long preamble, was submitted by Mr. Benton:

Resolved, That the said resolution be expunged from the journal, and for that purpose, that the secretary of the senate, at such time as the senate shall appoint, shall bring the manuscript journal of the session of 1833-'4 into the senate, and, in the presence of the senate, draw black lines round the said resolve, and write across the face thereof, in strong letters, the following words: "Expunged by order of the senate, this — day of —, in the year of our Lord 1836."

The senate having resumed the consideration of the bill to distribute the proceeds of the sales of the public lands among the several states.

Mr. Ewing, of Ohio, resumed and concluded his speech in favor of it. When

The senate went into the consideration of executive business; after completing which,

The senate adjourned.

March 17. After the presentations of petitions and reports from committees, which will be noticed in their progress.

Mr. Webster moved the printing of 3,000 extra copies of the statement of the affairs of the deposit banks, transmitted by the secretary of the treasury. Mr. W. made some remarks, shewing the dangerous situation of the public money in those banks.

A debate ensued on this motion, in which Messrs. Benton, Clay, Calhoun, Wright, Ewing, Walker and Black participated; after which the motion was agreed to.

Mr. Grundy offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the committee on the post office and post roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorising permanent contracts to be made for the transportation of the mail with the different rail road companies, or such of them as may be willing to make contracts for that purpose, upon such terms and under such restrictions as may be prescribed by law.

Mr. Clayton expressed his acquiescence in the resolution, and hoped that the views of the department would be extended to rail roads about to be constructed, as well as those which are already in operation.

Mr. Grundy replied that he concurred in the extension of the contracts, and the advance of the money to such rail roads as might be so far completed as to enable them to render service to the country.

Mr. Webster referred to certain resolutions on the same subject, submitted by him at the commencement of the present session, and, after some observations, he stated that he should, when this resolution was adopted, move the reference of his resolutions to the same committee.

Mr. Porter made a few remarks, and Mr. Calhoun had obtained the floor; when

Mr. Grundy (to check the discussion) withdrew his motion for consideration, and the resolution lies for consideration until to-morrow.

The senate proceeded to consider the bill to appropriate, for a limited time, the proceeds of the public lands, and

Mr. Hill addressed the senate at length in opposition to the principles of the bill.

After he concluded his remarks, the senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Friday, March 11. The motion of Mr. Jennifer, to suspend the application for the purpose of offering a resolution referring an application for a change of post routes in his district, to the committee on post offices and post roads, was taken up as the unfinished business of yesterday.

[Mr. Jennifer made this report yesterday, stating as a reason for it, that repeated applications on the subject had been made by him to the post office department and neglected. Further, he stated, that upon remonstrating with the assistant post master general against this neglect, he was replied to by an insolent letter which he read.]

Mr. Turrill asked the yeas and nays on the question which were ordered.

The question being taken, the motion was rejected—yeas 68, nays 115.

Subsequently Mr. Jarvis moved to reconsider the above vote, which motion lies over one day.

On motion of Mr. J. Q. Adams, the rules were suspended for the purpose of offering a resolution for printing 25,000 extra copies of the report of the secretary of the treasury on the subject of the cultivation and manufacture of cotton; and the resolution was considered, amended, so as to reduce the number to 15,000 copies, and agreed to.

The motion to reconsider the vote rejecting the motion of Mr. Bynum to permit the petitioner in the case of the North Carolina contested election to appear before the house, by counsel, in his own behalf was again taken up and supported by Messrs. Bouldin and Bynum, and opposed by Mr. Hard, till the expiration of the hour assigned for morning business.

Mr. A. H. Shepperd moved to suspend the rule for the purpose of continuing the consideration of the subject; rejected by a vote of 104 to 52—not two-thirds. The house then proceeded to consider private bills, as the order for Friday. Several private bills were read a third time and passed.

The joint resolution for placing Benedict Alford and Robert Brush on the pension list, was taken up; and, after debate, in which Messrs. Wardwell, Brown, Lay, Underwood, J. Y. Mason and Whittlesy took part.

Mr. Whittlesy moved to recommit the joint resolution to the committee on pensions.

[It appeared that this bill passed congress at its last session, and was approved by the president; but subsequently the secretary of war discovered that the bill had not received the action of the senate. The president, upon being informed of this fact, returned the bill to the senate, by a special message, which, with the bill, was referred to the committee on the judiciary, who made no report upon the subject. It appeared that the bill had duly passed the senate, and that the signature and authentication of the presiding officer were duly affixed; but the journal contained no record showing that the action of the senate had passed the bill. It was contended, on one side, that the law was complete and fully attested, by all the forms required by the constitution; that it was a law which the president and all others were bound to obey and execute, and that it was wrong to go behind the proper evidence to examine the record.

On the other hand, it was urged that the record of the senate was the only evidence that the constitutional forms of passing the bill had been observed by that body; and that when the president ascertained that such evidence was wanting, he acted rightly in refusing to execute the law. In short, it was said by some that the bill had become a law at the last session, and it ought not to be passed again, but ought to be executed; and by others, that there was no true, constitutional evidence that the action of the senate had made it a law, and, therefore, it could not properly be executed as such.]

No decision was had on this case, before the house adjourned.

Saturday, March 13. The house was occupied this day, with the North Carolina contested election. Nothing decided.

Monday, March 14. The house took up the resolutions of the legislature of the state of New York on the subject of a reorganization of the militia system by congress, presented last Monday by Mr. Gillett, together with the motion of Mr. G. to commit the same to the committee on the militia, with the following instructions:

To inquire into the expediency of so altering the laws relating to the militia, as to provide—

First. That all free white male citizens of the United States, between twenty-one and forty-five years of age, shall be enrolled in the militia.

Second. That, of the persons so enrolled, all who are under twenty-seven years of age, shall once in each year be called out for a period not less than six days, and remain under arms during that period, with the view of improvement in military discipline and martial exercise, and such persons to be minute-men, and to be first called upon in case of insurrection or invasion.

Third. That the persons who shall thus be called out and remain under arms shall receive a reasonable compensation for their time.

Fourth. That the government of the United States shall furnish all proper depots for the use of the persons thus called out, all useful tents, arms and accoutrements.

Fifth. That there shall be deposited at proper points on the frontiers and seaboard, all necessary and proper arms, including brass cannon, accoutrements and ammunition, to supply the enrolled militia when called into actual service in defence of the country.

After several gentlemen had given their views of the subject—on motion of Mr. Glascock, it was laid on the table for the present.

The bill making further appropriations for the suppression of Indian hostilities in Florida was, by consent, taken up, and, having been read a third time, passed.

Many petitions were presented this day. Mr. Williams, of Kentucky, presented resolutions of the legislature of Kentucky in favor of the distribution of the proceeds arising from the sale of the public lands among the several states, and also of the distribution of the surplus revenue among the states, the reference of which he moved to the committee of ways and means.

Mr. Boon, remarking that the subject was before the committee on public lands, moved its reference to that committee.

Mr. Garland, of Virginia, moved that the subject be laid on the table.

The chair stated that, under the rules, the subject would lie over.

Mr. Howard presented a memorial from the National Trades' Union association, praying the passage of a law regulating the number of hours for the employment of day laborers in the service of the United States.

Several motions of reference being made, and a debate being likely to arise,

The chair stated that the subject would lie over, under the rules of the house.

A large number of resolutions were submitted, which were referred, &c.

The house took up the memorial heretofore presented by Mr. Clark, of certain citizens of Dauphin county, Pa. asking an appropriation of money, for the purpose of removing to the coast of Africa free persons of color and manumitted slaves.

Mr. Clark having moved to refer the memorial to a select committee, and that it be printed, the question pending was the motion of Mr. Patton to lay the memorial and the motion to refer and print on the table.

Mr. Clark asked for the yeas and nays on Mr. Patton's motion; which were ordered, and were as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Beale, Bean, Beaumont, Bockee, Boon, Bovee, Boyd, Brown, Bunch, Bynum, Cambreleng, Campbell, Carter, Chaney, Chapman, Chapin, Nathaniel H. Claiborne, Cleveland, Coffee, Coles, Connor, Craig, Cushman, Davis, Doherty, Dickerson, Donbleday, Drougoule, Dunlap, Effner, Fairfield, Farlin, Forester, French, Fry, Wm. K. So the memorial was laid on the table.

Tuesday, March 15. On the motion of Mr. Bell, the house agreed to meet at 11 o'clock, hereafter.

The naval service bill was taken up, in committee of the whole, and Mr. Evans, of Maine, occupied the remainder of the day. The committee rose on the motion of Mr. Chambers, of Penn.

Wednesday, March 16. The house was called to order at 11 o'clock. Mr. Evans objected to the reading of the journal, on the ground that a quorum was not present. The chair, after counting, stated that there appeared to be but 73 members in attendance. A whole hour was spent in calling, re-calling, taking yeas and nays, &c.

At length, at 12 o'clock, the doors, which had been closed against absentees, were opened, and the journal read.

After some other business—

On motion of Mr. Cambreleng, the house went into committee of the whole on the state of the union, Mr. Miller in the chair, upon the bill making appropriations for the naval service of the United States for the year 1836—the question still being on the motion of Mr. Bell to reduce the appropriation for the navy yard at Portsmouth from $67,000 to $35,500.

And a general debate followed—in which Messrs. Evans, Chambers, of Pa. Bell, and others took part. The committee rose and the house adjourned, without a decision.

Thursday, March 17. Mr. Hawes made an unsuccessful attempt to suspend the rules for the purpose of taking up the resolution heretofore offered by him for the appointment of a select committee to investigate the concerns of the West Point academy.

The house resumed the consideration of the report of the committee on elections relative to the North Carolina contested election, the question being on a motion to recommit the report to the committee on elections, with instructions to allow further time for taking depositions in relation to the election.

The petitioner (Mr. Newland) having been permitted, by order of the house, to appear at the bar, addressed the house, at length, in support of his claim, and in opposition to further delay of the decision on the subject.

A debate ensued in which Messrs. Howard, Graham, Boyd, Manry, Claiborne and Hard, took part; before Mr. Hard concluded his remarks,

The chair announced the arrival of the hour assigned for taking up the special order.

Mr. Boyd moved to suspend the special order for this day, for the purpose of proceeding in the consideration of the report of the committee on elections.

On this motion, the yeas and nays were asked by Mr. Galbraith, and they were ordered.

The question being taken, it was decided in the negative—yeas 175, nays 72.

On motion of Mr. Cambreleng, the house, pursuant to the special order of the 26th January, then resolved itself into a committee of the whole on the state of the union, (Mr. Hawes in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill making appropriations for the naval service of the United States for the year 1836.

The question being on the motion of Mr. Bell to strike out the following clause:

"For improvement and necessary repairs of the navy yard at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, sixty-seven thousand dollars." Mr. Hawes moved to postpone all the rules of the house, for the purpose of introducing a motion to rescind the order of the house making the appropriation bills the special order for each day, except Friday and Saturday, after one o'clock; and on that motion he asked the yeas and nays, which were refused. The motion was then rejected.

Mr. Bell, then resumed his arguments, but without concluding, gave way for a motion that the committee rise; which was carried, and the house adjourned.

MICHIGAN.

For the Journal and Advertiser.

Mr. Corseilus: I observed in the published documents from Washington, a letter of instructions by the acting secretary of state, to John S. Horner, esq. acting governor of Michigan, which I think merits the perusal of our citizens as illustrative of the light which our proceedings are held in by president Jackson and his cabinet.

I would humbly request the views of some conspicuous member of the honorable legislature of the state of Michigan on this letter, a copy of which I herewith transmit to you for publication.

Department of state, October 8, 1835.

SIR: I have laid before the president your communication of the 28th ultimo, with the papers which accompanied it.

The president, though aware that the inhabitants of Michigan had been for some time taking measures with a view to the admission of that territory into the union as a state, relied so fully upon their respect for the constitution and laws, as not to suppose that, in their zeal for that object, they could be led to adopt any other measures than those within their legal competency.

It is only now, for the first time, that he has seen the constitution agreed to by the convention, and submitted to the people of Michigan for their ratification. He perceives, as is represented in your letter, that a new government created by that constitution is intended to go into operation on the first Monday in November next, and to exercise after that time legislative, executive, and judicial powers within that part of the territory which was formed by the act of January, 1805; and, consequently, that the territorial government established by congress is then to be superceded and abrogated within that portion of the territory.

The president views as natural and proper the desire of the people of Michigan to be admitted to all the rights of a state. It will afford him great pleasure to aid, as far as depends on him, in the early accomplishment of that important object; and, in the mean while, he will not sanction any interruption of the proceedings which they may adopt with that view, so long as such proceedings do not interfere with the due administration of the laws of the United States for the establishment and government of that territory, and with the rightful exercise of the functions of the officers appointed under their authority. But as he cannot admit that any government which the people of Michigan may desire to set up can, without the consent of congress, supercede or abrogate that which congress has established, he trusts that no attempt will be made by any person, under authority supposed to be derived from the proposed constitution, to exercise powers incompatible with those which congress has entrusted to officers appointed under its own authority.

The president is of opinion that the territorial government now existing in Michigan having been established by congress in virtue of the power exclusively vested in that body by the constitution, must continue until it is terminated by congress. The laws by which it is established have the same force in his mind, as any other laws of the United States, and he deems it not less his duty to see them faithfully executed.

If, as the people of the territory believe, the time has arrived when their present political condition ought to cease, he cannot doubt that congress, in its wisdom and justice, will readily fulfil the pledge contained in the ordinance of 1787 for their admission into the union. But until that event shall take place, he cannot recognise any other government in Michigan than that established by congress.

I am instructed by the president to make known to you his views on the subject, and, in answer to your desire to be informed of the course which you should pursue, to state that it will be proper for you, as well as all other officers appointed under the authority of the laws of the United States in the territory, to continue in the exercise of your official duties until those laws be altered or revoked by congress.

The opinion of the attorney general having been recently taken on questions growing out of certain proceedings in Arkansas with the view to the formation of a state government in that territory, I am directed to transmit a copy, in the belief that, from the analogy between the two cases, it may prove useful to you. I have the honor to be, sir, your most obedient servant,
ASBURY DICKINS, acting secretary.
John S. Horner, esq. acting gov. of Michigan territory, Detroit.

OHIO AND MICHIGAN.

Boundary difficulties. After the difficulties of the last summer upon our border had been encountered, we hoped that congress would promptly settle the matter on meeting, and that we should hear no further account of collision of authorities in that quarter; but the following letter from a gentleman at Toledo, dated January 30th, 1836, to the editors of the Columbus Hemisphere, shows that difficulties will occur until this question shall have been definitely and finally settled. This we hope congress will not fail to do at an early day, though, at present, the prospect of a speedy determination is not flattering, as may be seen from the statements of a member of the committee to which the subject was referred. [Bull. Gaz.

Renewal of hostilities.

GENTLEMEN: On my arrival at this place last evening, from Columbus, I found the town thrown into considerable excitement from a recent attempt on the part of the Michigan authorities to collect taxes from the citizens of the disputed district. From a statement of the facts by judge Wilson, who was one of the sufferers by this recent act of violence, I gather the following particulars:

The town of Whiteford, as organized under the laws of Michigan, passes over the northern boundary of the state, to the Fulton line, and comprehends the town of Sylvania, in Ohio. The assessors of Whiteford having made out their assessment roll, an attempt was made a few days since, by a Michigan officer living north of the constitutional line of Ohio, to collect taxes from citizens of Sylvania. Against these proceedings the citizens of Sylvania remonstrated, alleging that they were in Ohio, and that they would pay taxes to that state only.

The officer thereupon levied upon the property of the citizens, among whom were judge Wilson and Jerome, Cyrus Holloway, James Egnew and Benj Joy, esqrs. A number of cattle and horses belonging to these gentlemen were seized by the officer, who proceeded on the 28th inst. to sell them at public auction. Among other outrages, the dwelling-house of col. Hoadly, living some fifteen miles beyond the Sylvania settlement, was broken open in his absence, and a large amount of personal property taken and sold. The people at length becoming enraged at these several acts of violence, collected in a body, and, after having taken out a warrant for the offender under the laws of Ohio, seized him, and conveyed him to the jail of Wood county.

This has created a high degree of excitement as well in the neighboring towns within Michigan, as among the inhabitants within the disputed district. The officer, who has been since bailed out of prison, swears vengeance upon the citizens, and declares his determination of raising a posse to carry out his threat.

PROPERTY AND TAXATION OF STATE OF N. YORK.

It appears from the late report of the comptroller of the treasury of New York, that the general fund, from which the ordinary expenses of the government for many years past have been in a great measure defrayed, is exhausted. The balance of the fund of $206,000 in bonds and mortgages was last year transferred to the school fund, and the amount applied to the expenses of the government. It is now proposed to meet the expenses of the state by taxation. The comptroller makes the following estimate of the assessed value of the property to the state, and the amount of taxation for county and municipal purposes, for the year 1835.

Real estate in 48 counties.....	$387,315,275
“ “ in 7 counties, not returned.....	14,769,933
Personal estate in 48 counties.....	122,840,043
Non-resident debts.....	3,763,924
Personal estate in seven counties, not returned....	1,553,650
	$530,242,925

The total sum levied upon 45 counties, for county expenses, is	608,574 61
The sum levied upon 44 counties, for town expenses, is	457,265 20
The amount of tax upon the city and county of N. York, say	905,000 00
Add average county expenses for 9 delinquent counties	121,714 92
Add average town charges for 10 delinquent counties	103,953 92

And it makes the aggregate amount of the annual tax upon the whole state, for county and town charges $2,196,507 65
Which, will average, probably, about $1 to each inhabitant in the state.

The average rate of taxation, is 5 mills and 12 hundredths upon each dollar of the assessed valuation of the property of the state.

The aggregate number of acres of land assessed in the whole state, is 27,680,839.

IMPORTANT INSURANCE CASE.

George Barclay, Schuyler Livingston, } vs.

Jackson Marine insurance company, }

In the case of the British ship sir James Anderson, abandoned at sea on a voyage from Quebec to Liverpool in December, 1834, for loss of rudder and being in a leaky condition, and defended, on the ground, that (all the ship's water having been on deck on sailing from Quebec) she was unseaworthy; although part of the water was put into the ship's poop before the disaster. The jury after a trial of nine days, and fifteen minutes consideration after the case was given them last evening by his honor chief justice Jones, decided all the points in the case, against the insurance company, as follows:

I. Was the vessel properly and necessarily abandoned at sea? Yes.

II. Was the vessel seaworthy when she sailed from Liverpool for Quebec? Yes.

III. Was the vessel under all the circumstances of the case seaworthy when she sailed from Quebec on the voyage insured? Yes.

IV. Was the vessel seaworthy after the removal of the casks of water from the deck into the poop cabin? Yes.

V. Did such removal occur before the happening of any such disasters which caused the abandonment of the vessel at sea? Yes?

VI. Were any of the disasters which led to the abandonment of the vessel at sea, caused, in any degree, by the stowage of water on deck? No.

The amount of damages in this case was about $6,300 with interest and costs.

The names of the jury were: Edmund Morris, James Burdy, William H. Falls, Thomas Shepard, Luke Gage, W. Rushton, J. M. Jacquelin, John Palmer, G. W. Sumner, J. P. Ames, Joshua Walker, Abraham N. Topping.

Counsel for the plaintiffs, Griffin and Gerard; for defendants, Ketchum and Slosson. [New York Gazette.]

THE LOOP OF WAR PEACOCK.

FROM THE NORFOLK BEACON.—A LETTER.

United States ship Peacock, Bombay, October 24.

"On the morning of the 20th September, at 2 o'clock, we were aroused by the ship's getting ashore; we immediately furled sails; she was going 7½ miles per hour when she struck. The boats were gotten out and sounded round the ship; after which, the stream anchor was carried out in the direction of deep water. At day-light, saw a low sandy island to the northward, bearing from east to west with shoal water all around us. We made every exertion to heave the ship off, but could not move her; we then started water, threw overboard spare spars, guns, shot, provisions, &c.; and after many reverses, on Tuesday we had the pleasure of seeing the ship in water deep enough to float her. During this time many small vessels called dows were near us, and, like vultures, watching their prey; and while we were busy in getting into deep water, they commenced robbing a raft we made of our spars to hold provisions, &c. and to land upon if we had lost the ship. At another time they attempted to cut off one of our boats that was carrying out a kedge, but a few shot from our guns (for we did not throw all overboard) made them relinquish their attempt. These lawless people are Bedouin, Arabs, who live by plunder; and if it had been our misfortune to have lost the ship, the least of our sufferings would have been to be made slaves of. At sun-rise on Tuesday morning, while there was but little hope of getting the ship afloat, Mr. Roberts left the ship, in one of our boats, for Muscat, to carry the treaty, and have relief sent us from that place. On the same morning we hove off, and anchored in 3½ fathoms water, as we could do no better, where she struck very heavily part of the time, and we feared that she would be much injured. The tide rises here six feet; at four o'clock the tide began to rise. We got under-way on Wednesday night, and anchored in 6 fathoms water; next day we got out to sea, and found that we had been on shore in the Gulf of Mayzeers, on a small sand key. We arrived safely at Muscat, and found that the Sultan had done every thing in his power to afford us relief. He fitted out a sloop of war in twenty-four hours, and despatched her to us with all kinds of refreshments, and ordered the governor of Zoar to sail for Mazia with all the dows, and 300 men, to render us every assistance that we might require. We met the sloop the day before we arrived; and after our arrival at Muscat, he evinced, in every way, the kindest feeling towards us. This is a very brief account of our misfortunes, and it is owing, under Providence, to the great exertions of the officers and men, that we extricated the ship from her perilous situation. We arrived here the day before yesterday, and expect to get into dock on Monday, and hope soon to be at sea again. The Enterprise, lieutenant com. Campbell, arrived here ten days before us. We parted company soon after leaving Rio de Janeiro. Officers and crew all in fine health."

Navy Department.—The U. S. ship Vincennes, commanded by master commandant John H. Aulick was at Otaheite, Sept. 19, 1835, where she arrived on 5th of that month, from Noaheavah, one of the Washington group of islands in the Pacific ocean. Nothing worthy of note had occurred since they parted from the Brandywine, com. Wadsworth, in July last, at Callao. Had taken twelve American seamen on board at Otaheite, principally left there by whalers, and expected some more before sailing. Intended to sail the next day for the Friendly and Feejee groups, touching at some of the intermediate islands, next to the Pelew islands, and from thence to China, where they expected to arrive by the 1st of January, 1836. All on board were in good health.

The United States ship Concord, captain Mix, sailed from Portsmouth, N. H. on the 27th ult. for the West India station.

PROCEEDINGS IN MISSISSIPPI.

The following preamble and resolutions have passed both houses of the legislature of the state of Mississippi, with but one dissenting voice:

Whereas, the U. States did, by a certain treaty held and made with the tribe of Choctaw Indians, residing, for the time being, within the limits of the state of Mississippi, to wit: the treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek, made and concluded on the twenty-eighth day of September, eighteen hundred and thirty, A. D. and whereas, by the 14th article of said treaty, certain reservations of land were granted to such Indians as should remain on said land for five years next succeeding such treaty; and whereas, such claimants were, by the 14th article in the treaty referred to, compelled to signify their intention of claiming, under the provisions of said treaty, within six months after the ratification thereof, or forever forfeit the right thus acquired; and, whereas, it appears, from recent developments, that large claims to land have been preferred, covering the richest and most valuable portion of the unsold Choctaw lands, and purporting to be founded on, and growing out of, the treaty above referred to, and on a part of which land thus claimed no Choctaw Indian either does now or ever has resided; and whereas, it is evident, from the face of the case, that these claims are manifestly unjust in their character, oppressive in the result of their operation on the freemen of Mississippi, and calculated to secure no ultimate benefit to the Indian originally claiming, but in their consummation will have a direct tendency to impair the confidence which the good people of this state have in the correctness of the law and in the honesty of the administrators of our public institutions; and, whereas, this most iniquitous transaction will, if consummated, not only rob Mississippi of her just and unalienable rights to have her five per cent. on the amount which ought to accrue from the sale of the large portion of valuable land thus reserved; and, whereas, this body has satisfactory evidence of the fact that a large proportion of the claims to said land, under the provision of the treaty already referred to, are set up, and attempted to be sustained on the testimony of Indians who are unacquainted with the nature of an oath, and utterly regardless of the obligation thus incurred, and on the testimony of other individuals wholly unworthy of the confidence of a moral and intelligent community; and, whereas, the permission of such abandoned and licentious profligacy would injure our community, disgrace our social and political compact, and license corruption and perjury to stalk at large through our land:

Now, therefore, be it resolved by the legislature of the state of Mississippi, That our senators in congress be instructed, and our representatives requested, to use the most speedy and efficient means to prevent the consummation of such of said titles to said land as may have originated in fraud, to the end that the aforesaid land may be disposed of in the regular way, and in accordance with the laws in such cases made and provided.

Resolved, That his excellency, Charles Lynch, be requested as early a date as may be possible to furnish our senators and representatives in congress with a copy of the foregoing preamble and resolutions, and with the testimony taken thereon, with a request that they lay the same before both branches of congress.

IMPORTANT TO MERCHANTS.

We have been favored, says the Philadelphia Gazette, by a correspondent at Washington, with the following letter, giving an account of two late decisions of the supreme court.

Washington, Feb. 4, 1836.

SIR: It may be interesting to your mercantile readers to know, that the supreme court has decided two very important cases at its present term, particularly so, as it makes officers liable to all damages they may cause to importers, by preventing them from entering their goods at the legal duty. The first was No. 34, Tracy versus Swartwout. The plaintiff imported a quantity of syrup of sugar cane, and offered to bond it at 15 per cent. lawful duty. The collector refused to take the bonds, and insisted it should be bonded at 3 cents per pound. This was declined on the part of the importer, and after the duties were adjudicated to be 15 per cent. the plaintiff brought his action for damages against the collector. The circuit court charged the jury to give nominal damages, as the collector acted in good faith, and by the orders of the secretary of the treasury. The supreme court has set aside the verdict, and ordered the cause to be remanded for further proceedings; deciding, first, that the plaintiff was entitled to the full amount, of all the damages caused to him by the illegal act of the collector; secondly, that the collector was excusable for acting by the orders of the treasury department, only so long as the orders of that department were agreeable to law; thirdly, that the collector was liable for every illegal act he committed. The plea that a known agent was not responsible, but his principal for all damages caused by the acts of his agents, would be to send the injured party to congress, to pray he might be restored to that of which he had been deprived.

The second case was "Nelson G. Elliot versus Swartwout." The first question in this case was, whether shawls made of worsted bordered with cotton, were manufactures of which wool was a component part. The court had established the principle in the case of 200 chests of tea, (9 Wheaton, 438), that the revenue laws were regulations of commerce, and that the terms used by them were to be construed in the language used by merchants in the common transactions of life, as done between buyers and sellers; and as merchants did not call worsted stuff goods, manufactures of wool, shawls made of worsted and cotton, were not manufactures of which wool was a component part. Merchants called manufactures of wool, such as were made of carded wool; those made of combed wool were called by merchants worsted stuffs; therefore they were not wool or of which wool was a component part. The second question was, whether the collector was personally liable for surplus duty, when he had been told he had charged more than the legal duty; or, when he was told not to pay it over. The court held that he was personally liable for such surplus.

IMPORTANT MOVEMENT IN NEW JERSEY.

From the N. Y. Journal of Commerce.

The committee of the New Jersey legislature to whom was referred the proposition of the Camden and Amboy rail road, and Delaware and Raritan canal companies, to sell their works to the state on certain conditions, have reported in favor of accepting the proposition, and brought in a bill to that effect, entitled, "An act to extinguish the exclusive privileges of the Delaware and Raritan canal, and the Camden and Amboy rail road." The companies, in the proposition, the acceptance of which is recommended by the committee, offered to sell their rail road and canal, with all property and rights appertaining thereto, for the sum of $7,650,000, to be paid to the stockholders in certificates of state stock bearing the interest of 5 per cent. per annum, payable half yearly and redeemable in not less than a given number of years. The committee also recommended the acceptance of the offer of the Philadelphia and Trenton rail road company, and the Trenton and New Brunswick turnpike company, to take a lease of the first mentioned works for 36 years, at $459,000 per annum, in half yearly payments, being the interest of the aforesaid $7,650,000 at 6 per cent. and also to authorise and require the Trenton and New Brunswick turnpike company to construct a rail road on their turnpike, with such deviations as the nature of the case may require, from the city of New Brunswick to the Delaware bridge at Trenton—said road to be completed in two years. The bill authorised a charge of $4 for every passenger, transported by day from Philadelphia to New York or from New York to Philadelphia through the state of New Jersey, and $5 for every passenger so transported by night; the lessees, whenever they shall think proper to charge these prices, being required to pay into the state treasury 25 cents for each passenger. The 7th section of the bill is as follows:

Sec. 7. And be it enacted, that out of the rent to be secured, as aforesaid, from the said lessees, the sum of $40,000 be, and the same is hereby directed to be appropriated yearly and every year, to defraying the expenses of the government of the state; and that hereafter, during the period of the aforesaid lease, no taxes shall be levied upon the people of this state for that purpose.

So it appears that the legislature calculate to make a good operation out of the arrangement; and it is very plain they will. As the state will pay but 5 per cent. interest on the purchase money, $7,650,000, and will receive 6 per cent. it will realize an annual profit of $76,500, which with the interest thereon, will in less than 36 years amount to the whole sum paid, viz: $7,650,000.

The bill, however, was rejected, and the "monopoly" still will continue.

TRADES' UNIONS—LEGAL OPINION.

The following is the opinion of chief justice Savage, of New York, on certain combinations that have lately happened in that state. Labor, like every thing else, has a value—and may be determined at the will and pleasure of those who possess it. So as to all other articles of trade—such as bread and beef, and every thing else that has value. If a baker pleases to ask one dollar per lb. for his bread—he is at perfect liberty to do so; but he will not be justified in knocking down, or otherwise maltreating another, who is willing to sell his bread for six cents a pound. The law will punish him for his misdeeds, and so it ought. Unless it did, every thing would be yielded to brute force, and the first principle of safety to society be overthrown. The associations too, in any case, perhaps, have a right to expel from their societies any persons who does not exact the prices demanded by such societies—but here their right ends, and the law of nature takes place: violence must not be resorted to—or violence must be met with violence; and such we regard all combinations to reduce prices for labor. There must be no force, in either case—that must be resisted, and will be; until society is wrecked, and "chaos comes again."

The people, vs. George W. Fisher, Stephen Fowler and Anthony C. Hoyt. By the court, Savage, chief justice. The defendants were indicted at the court of general sessions of Ontario, in May, 1834, for a conspiracy.

1st Count. The first count charges that on the 1st August, 1833, at Geneva, the defendants, with other persons formed themselves into a club or combination, and conspired to prevent journeymen shoemakers from working below certain rates or prices, and made certain rules or by-laws by which any journeyman shoemaker who should make men's coarse boots for a less price than one dollar, should forfeit ten dollars. And did also conspire and agree that they would not work for any boss shoemaker who should employ any journeyman at a less price. Further, that one Pennock, a journeyman, did make ten pair of coarse boots for one Daniel L. Lum, a boss shoemaker, for seventy-five cents per pair. That Lum employed Pennock to work for 75 cents per pair, and the defendants refused to work for him, as they had done before, for the only reason that Lum had employed Pennock who had broken their by-laws.

2d Count. After stating the combination and conspiracy as above, also charges that the defendants conspired and agreed that they would not work for any boss shoemaker who should employ the said Pennock. That Lum did employ the said Pennock, and the defendants left his employ, and refused any longer to work for him, solely for the reason that he employed the said Pennock. Whereby the said Lum was compelled to dismiss the said Pennock. The indictment contains two other counts, charging the same offence, with some variations.

The defendants pleaded a former indictment for the same offence, found at the November sessions, 1833, and another indictment found at the February sessions, 1834. Upon both of which they had been arraigned and pleaded not guilty, and the said indictment had never been tried. To this the public prosecutor demurred. The court gave judgment for the defendants, on the ground that the indictment did not describe an offence known to and recognized by the laws of the state of N. York. We have the authority of Hawkins for saying that a plea of a former indictment pending for the same offence is bad. Hawkins, P. book 2, ch. 33, s. 1, and by our revised statutes 2 R. St. 726, s. 42, the first indictment is superseded by the second, and liable to be quashed. It is not, therefore, a bar to such second indictment.

The only question, therefore, is the one decided by the court below; whether the offence charged is indictable? The legislature have given us their definition of conspiracies, and abrogated the common law on the subject. We must, therefore, see whether this case comes within the statute. The legislature have said, § 2 R. St. 691, 2. s. 8. "If two or more persons shall conspire, either 1st, to commit any offence; or 2d, falsely and maliciously to indict another for any offence, or to procure another to be charged or arrested for any such offence; or 3d, falsely to move or maintain any suit; or 4th, to cheat and defraud any person of any property by any means which are in themselves criminal; or 5th, to cheat and defraud any person of any property, by any means, which if executed would amount to a cheat, or to obtaining money or property by false pretences; or 6th, to commit any act injurious to the public health, public morals, or to trade or commerce, or for the perversion or obstruction of justice, or the due administration of the laws, they shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor." § 9th, "no conspiracies, other than such as are enumerated in the last section, are punishable criminally." If the conspiracy charged in the indictment, is an offence under this statute, it must be embraced under the sixth subdivision, and is an act injurious to trade or commerce. The conspiracy in this case was not to commit an offence within the meaning of the statute—the raising of wages is no offence, the conspiracy is the offence, if any has been committed—nor was the object to indict any one; to move or maintain a suit; to cheat any one by criminal means, or by any means which if executed would amount to a cheat—nor to obstruct the course of justice or the administration of the laws. The question therefore is, is the raising of the wages of journeymen shoemakers an act injurious to trade or commerce? The words trade and commerce, are said by Jacobs in his law dictionary, not to be synonymous; that commerce relates to dealings with foreign nations; trade, on the contrary, means mutual traffic among ourselves, or the buying, selling or exchange of articles between members of the same community. That the raising of wages, and a conspiracy, confederacy or mutual agreement among journeymen, is a matter of public concern, and in which the public have a deep interest, there can be no doubt. That it is an indictable offence at common law, is proved by legal adjudications.

The king vs. journeymen tailors of Cambridge 8 mod. * The defendants were indicted for a conspiracy among themselves to raise their wages—they were found guilty—and moved in arrest, among other things, that no crime appeared upon the face of the indictment. To this the court answered: That it is true that the indictment sets forth that the defendants denied to work under such wages as they demanded, but it was not for the denial, but the conspiracy they were indicted—and the court add, that a conspiracy of this kind is illegal, though the matter about which they conspired might have been lawful, for them or any of them to do without a conspiracy, and they refer to the case of the sub * omen against the brewers of London. This case has been recited as sound law by all subsequent writers on criminal law.

The people vs. Trequirer and others, 1. Wheeler's Crimin. * as 142, was an indictment against the defendants for a conspiracy to cause one Acher to be discharged from employment as a hatter, and refusing to work for their employers unless they would discharge Acher, because as they alleged he, Acher, worked for "knocked down wages." The facts of the case were much like the present except that the defendants were hatters, and here they are shoemakers. The counsel for the defendants contended that the doctrine of conspiracy was applicable in this country. The defendants were convicted. Journeymen may each singly refuse to work unless they receive an advance of wages, but if they do so by pre-concert or association they may be punished for a conspiracy, 6, T. R. 636. Such was the construction of the common law, but in England the subject has been thought sufficiently important to require the special attention of the legislature, and statutes have been enacted in the reign of Edward 6th, and George 3d, which subject workmen conspiring either to reduce the time of labor or to raise their wages, to the punishment of fine and imprisonment.

I have found but few adjudications upon this subject, but the precedents, in the absence of adjudications, are some evidence of what the law is. Among these we find precedents, at common law against journeymen for conspiring to raise their wages and lessen the time of labor, and to compel masters to pay for a whole day's work—against journeymen lamp-lighters for conspiring to raise wages, and against journeymen carriers for the like offence, 3 ch. cr. L. 1, 163 and note 9; against salt makers for conspiring to enhance the price of salt; against journeymen serge weavers, for refusing to work for a master who had employed a man contrary to certain rules entered into by conspiracy; against journeymen leather dressers for conspiring to induce a man to turn a person out of his employment—against master rope-makers, for conspiring not to employ journeymen who had left their last master without his consent. Some of these offences seem to have had for their object the oppression and injury of an individual—others were calculated to injure the public. The immediate object in those cases as in this, probably was to benefit the conspirators themselves; but if their individual benefit is to work a public injury a conspiracy for such an object is against the spirit of the common law. The offence of conspiracy seems to have been left in greater uncertainty by the common law than most other offences. Mr. Chitty states that all confederacies wrongfully to injure another in any manner are misdemeanors. So the law was understood by this court until the decision of the case of Lambert vs. the people, 9 Cowen 578. The judgment of this court was reversed in that case by the casting vote of the president; but whether on the ground that a conspiracy to defraud an individual was not indictable, or on the ground that the indictment was defective in omitting to state the means by which the fraud was effected, it is impossible from the report to ascertain; and the question was left in doubt whether an indictment lies for conspiracy to produce a mere private injury by means which are not in themselves criminal, and which would not affect the public, nor obstruct public justice. That question was intended to be put at rest by the revised statutes—and we have the authority of the revisers for saying that this is the only particular in which a departure from the common law doctrine was intended, if indeed the common law was as it was understood by this court. See note of revisors to pt. 4 ch. 1, Tit. 6.

Whatever disputes may exist among political economists upon the point, I think there can be no doubt in a legal sense, but that the wages of labor compose a material portion of the value of manufactured articles. The products of mechanical labor compose a large proportion of the materials with which trade is carried on. By trade I now understand traffic or mutual dealings between members of the same community, or internal trade. Coarse boots and shoes are made in many parts of our country, not for particular persons who are to wear them, but as an article of trade and commerce. Probably such is the case in Geneva, where this offence was committed. If journeymen bootmakers, by extravagant demands for wages, so enhance the price of boots made in Geneva, for instance, that boots made elsewhere, in Anhorn for example, can be sold cheaper, is not such an act injurious to trade? It is surely so to the trade of Geneva in that particular article, and, thus, I apprehend, is all that is necessary to bring the offence within the statute. It is important to the best interests of society that the price of labor be left to regulate itself, or rather be limited by the demand there is for it—combinations and confederacies to enhance or reduce the prices of labor or any article of trade or commerce are injurious. They may be oppressive by compelling the public to give more for an article of necessity or of luxury than it is worth, or on the other hand by compelling the labor of the mechanic for less than its value. Without any officious and improper interference on the subject, the price of labor or the wages of mechanics will be regulated by the demand for the manufactured articles and the value of that which is paid for it. But the right does not exist either to enhance the price of the article, or the wages of the mechanic, by any forced and artificial means. The man who owns an article of trade or commerce, is not obliged to sell it for any particular price—nor is the mechanic by law obliged to labor for any particular price. He may say that he will not make coarse boots for less than one dollar per pair, but he has no right to say that no other mechanic shall make them for less. The cloth merchant may say that he will not sell his goods for less than so much per yard, but he has no right to say that any other merchant shall not sell for a less price. If one individual does not possess such a right over the conduct of another, no number of individuals can possess such a right. All combinations, therefore, to effect such an object, are injurious not only to the individual particularly oppressed, but to the public at large. In the present case an industrious man was driven out of employment by the unlawful measures pursued by the defendants, and an injury done to the community by diminishing the quantity of productive labor and of internal trade. In so far as the individual sustains an injury the remedy by indictment is taken away by our revised statutes, and the sufferer is left to his action on the case. But in so far as the public are concerned in the embarrassment to trade by the discouragement of industry, the defendants are liable to punishment by indictment. If combinations of this description are lawful in Geneva, they are in every other place. If the bootmakers may say that boots shall not be made for less than one dollar, it is optional with them to say that ten dollars shall be paid or even fifty—and no man can wear a pair of boots without giving such price as the journeymen bootmakers may choose to require. This I apprehend would be a monopoly of the most odious kind. The journeymen mechanics might, by fixing their own wages, regulate the prices of all manufactured articles, and the community be enormously taxed. Should the journeymen bakers refuse to work unless for enormous wages, which the master bakers could not give, and should compel all the journeymen in a city to stop work, the whole population must be without bread. So of journeymen tailors, or mechanics of any description. Such combinations would be productive of derangement and confusion which certainly must be considered "injurious to trade." Such consequences would follow were such combinations universal. It is true that no great danger is to be apprehended on account of the impracticability of such universal combinations. But if universally or even generally entered into, they would be prejudicial to trade and to the public; they are wrong in each particular case. The truth is, that industry requires no such means to support it. Competition is the life of trade. If the defendants cannot make coarse boots for less than one dollar per pair, let them refuse to do so; but let them not directly or indirectly undertake to say, that others shall not do the work for a less price. It may be that Pennock from greater industry or greater skill made more profit by making boots at seventy-five cents per pair, than the defendants at a dollar. He had a right to work for what he pleased. His employer had a right to employ P. for such price as they had agreed upon. The interference of the defendants was unlawful. Its tendency is not only to individual oppression, but to public inconvenience and embarrassment.

I am of opinion that the offence is indictable, and that the judgment of the general sessions of Ontario county be reversed—Venire de novo to issue.

LEGISLATURE OF PENNSYLVANIA.

In senate, February 26, 1836.

Mr. Baker, from the committee appointed to inquire and report the facts connected with an alleged attempt to corrupt the integrity and influence the vote of Jacob Krebs, one of the senators from the senatorial district composed of the counties of Berks and Schuylkill, agreeably to a resolution of the senate of Pennsylvania, made the following report:

Your committee entered on the inquiry intrusted to them with the deepest impression of its importance. For the first time, as far as your committee are informed, it was alleged upon the floor of the senate, by a senator, that an attempt had been made to corrupt his integrity and influence his vote. This assumed additional importance, from the circumstance that, previously to this disclosure, it had been proclaimed to the world in a newspaper conducted by gentlemen to whom had been committed the printing of the journals of the senate, and who might therefore, in some respects, be considered as officers of this body. The article alluded to was headed, "The people are betrayed," "The arts of the bank have prevailed," and contained the following expressions: "We cannot express the feelings of deep humiliation and dread with which we proclaim the startling fact. And when we state that one firm democratic senator has informed us that offers of large sums of money were made to him if he would vote for the bill, it is to be feared that this monster has resorted to the exercise of a most unprincipled and corrupting influence." That this article contained no names, tended rather to excite than allay intense feeling; every senator felt that his character was involved, until a full inquiry had been instituted, and disclosure obtained. To effect this, the printers referred to, Messrs. Samuel D. Patterson and O. Barrett, were, pursuant to a resolution of the senate, brought to their bar, and there disclosed that their information was received from Jacob Krebs, esq. a senator from Schuylkill county.

Your committee does not esteem it their duty to proceed further with the examination of Messrs. Patterson and Barrett, nor do they deem it proper for them to point out any course of action for the senate in relation to these individuals; they, however, think themselves justified in expressing the most unqualified disapprobation of their conduct, standing in the relation which they hold to this body. The testimony, in their possession, is no justification of the course pursued by them, and does not sustain the charge against the United States bank, to which they gave such extensive publication, and which was calculated, if not intended, improperly to excite the feelings of the community.

Mr. Krebs, in his statement made to the senate on the 10th instant, having disclosed (and, according to the testimony, for the first time) the names of James L. Dunn, of Reading, and Henry W. Conrad, esq. of the house of representatives, as the persons who had endeavored to influence his vote, the committee ordered Mr. Dunn to appear before them, and, by a resolution of the senate and consent of the house of representatives, obtained the appearance of Mr. Conrad. These gentlemen being implicated by the testimony of Mr. Krebs, who was examined by the committee as a witness under oath, the committee called on them separately for such statement or defence as they might think proper to make. The committee also examined Mr. Burd Patterson, Jediah Irish, John Ulrich, William Hottenstein, Frederick Ruechert, Jacob Gehr, William Ermentrout and Benneville Klein, as witnesses. The statements of the parties implicated, and the testimony of the witnesses, together with the minutes of the committee, being herewith submitted, the committee deem it unnecessary to do more than give the conviction of their own minds, upon a full examination of all the facts and testimony adduced.

First. The committee believe that the United States bank did not, either directly or indirectly, attempt in any manner to corrupt the integrity or influence the vote of Mr. Krebs, and that the article contained in the Pennsylvania Reporter and State Journal, of the 9th instant, before alluded to, and all the other allegations to the same effect, are wholly unfounded and unsupported by any shadow of testimony.

Second. The committee deem it inexpedient to express their opinion upon the conduct of Mr. Conrad, as he is a member of the house of representatives, and directly amenable to that body, and as they have no doubt but that house will adopt such measures as may be necessary to protect their own dignity, and that of the senate.

Third. As the character of Mr. Burd Patterson may be considered in some degree involved in the charges made, the committee think it right to say that all the testimony has satisfied them that he has in no manner attempted to corrupt the integrity or influence the vote of Mr. Krebs, and that his conduct, so far as it has been developed by the inquiry, is free from all suspicion of any dishonorable or improper act.

Fourth. The committee have examined with great care and much anxiety so much of the testimony as implicates Mr. James L. Dunn. It will be observed that there is some discrepancy between the testimony of Mr. Krebs and the voluntary statement or defence of Mr. Dunn. The committee rely implicitly in the veracity of Mr. Krebs, but, at the same time, they believe that the varying circumstances may be more nearly assimilated by supposing that Mr. Krebs (who, from his statement of the conduct of Mr. Conrad, appears to have been easily alarmed at any supposed approach to influence his vote) may have placed on the expressions of Mr. Dunn a more serious construction than they would properly have conveyed. Be this as it may, Mr. Dunn denies altogether that he had any intention or expectation improperly to influence the legislative action of Mr. Krebs; and the proof of the respectability of his character would lead the committee to confide in his statement. With every disposition to look at all that may exculpate the conduct of Mr. Dunn, and under the belief that he could not have deliberately intended or expected improperly to influence Mr. Krebs, the committee, notwithstanding, cannot withhold the expression of opinion that his language was highly improper, and deserving of their severe reprehension; they do not, however, recommend any further proceedings in relation thereto.

Fifth. It would be improper to close this report without some remark on the conduct of Mr. Krebs, a member of our own body, and of whom it is the disposition of the committee to speak with as much delicacy as their sense of duty will permit. They however deem it due to themselves to say that they esteem the conduct of this senator very reprehensible in not immediately communicating to the senate what he believed to be serious attempts to corrupt his integrity, and influence his vote. Had this been instantly done, much of the excitement and unpleasant consequences which have ensued would have been avoided. They deem his course the more reprehensible, as Mr. Krebs communicated the circumstances in whole or in part, with the suppression of the names, to different individuals, and made them the subject of a letter herewith submitted, which was read at a public political meeting in Schuylkill county. To support the dignity of this senate is the imperative duty of all its members; and your committee regret to say that a review of the circumstances constrains them to believe that the senator from Schuylkill county, in the excess of perhaps well-intentioned, but certainly misguided zeal, to effect the defeat of a measure to which he was no doubt honestly opposed, has most untidily failed in the discharge of this duty.

The committee, having terminated the inquiry with which they were charged, offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

The Harrisburgh Intelligencer, says: "The committee appointed by the house of representatives, to investigate the conduct of Henry W. Conrad, a Van Buren anti-bank member of the house of representatives, for an alleged attempt to bribe Jacob Krebs, a Van Buren anti-bank member of the senate, to vote for the bill to repeal the state tax, made a report on Wednesday last, accompanied with the evidence. The report recommends, that Henry W. Conrad be reprimanded."

LEGISLATURE OF NEW YORK.

In assembly—Monday, March 7, 1836.

THE NEW BANK OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. Parker said he was about to present a petition on a subject which was as novel here, as were the circumstances which had called it out; and in doing so, he took occasion to tender his acknowledgments to the petitioners for having selected him as the medium through which to communicate to the house sentiments and views to which he could so heartily subscribe. The petition was from Ontario county. It was signed by about one hundred individuals, with some of whom he was acquainted, and he could say that they were among the most respectable in point of moral worth, capacity, commercial and agricultural enterprise. They asked the passage of a law, and that speedily, prohibiting the circulation in this state, of the bills of the bank of the United States, recently chartered by the legislature of Pennsylvania. Mr. P. went at some length into the policy of the measure, and the reasons which governed the petitioners, when with his consent; and on motion of Mr. Wilkinson, the petition was laid on the table with a view to an appropriate reference.

IN THE LEGISLATURE OF VIRGINIA.*

The following is a copy of the "expurgating resolutions."

Whereas, the senate of the United States did, on the 28th day of March, 1834, adopt the following resolution: "Resolved, That the president in the late executive proceedings in relation to the public revenue, has assumed upon himself authority and power not conferred by the constitution and laws, but in derogation of both;" which resolution now stands upon the journal of the senate:

And whereas, the general assembly of Virginia regard this act of the senate as an assumption of power not warranted by the constitution, and calculated to subvert the rights of the house of representatives, and the fundamental principles of our free institutions:

And whereas, this assembly deem it their solemn duty again to reassert, in behalf of themselves and the people of Virginia, the right of the constituent to instruct, and the duty of the representative to obey or resign—therefore,

1. Resolved, by the general assembly of Virginia, That the senators from this state, in the congress of the United States, be and they are hereby instructed to introduce, and vote for a resolution, directing the aforesaid resolution of the senate of the 28th day of March, 1834, declaring, "that the president, in the late executive proceedings in relation to the public revenue, has assumed upon himself authority and power not conferred by the constitution and laws, but in derogation of both," to be expunged from the journal of the senate of the United States, by causing black lines to be drawn around the said resolution, as it stands on the original manuscript journal, and these words plainly written across the face of the said resolution and entry—expunged by order of the senate of the United States.

2. Resolved, also, That this assembly regard the right of instruction "as resting on the broad basis of the nature of representation;" and one of the vital principles of our free institutions; and that it is the duty of the representative to obey the instructions of his constituents, or resign the trust with which they have clothed him, in order that it may be transferred into the hands of those who will carry into execution the wishes and instructions of the constituent body.

3. Resolved, That the government of the commonwealth be requested to transmit the foregoing resolutions to each of the senators from Virginia, in the congress of the United States, with a request that they lay the same before the senate.

*The matter that follows, though in type, was of necessity cut-off, in our last number. It is due to the record, however, that it should be inserted.

Agreed to by both houses of the general assembly. Feb. 20th, 1836. GEO. W. MUMFORD, C. H. D.

The following resolution, (says the Boston Daily Advertiser), "was adopted by both branches of the legislature of Virginia, and in the house of delegates, by a vote of 89 to 35, many of the same individuals voting for it, who now vote for the resolutions to instruct the senators in congress, to expunge the vote of the senate. Why do they not, before giving this instruction to their senators, first vote to expunge from their own journal, their own offensive act? It can be only because it has not been demanded, by the individual who wields the power, and bestows the patronage of the government of the union. Such a reversal of their own solemn judgment, pronounced upon full deliberation and discussion, exhibits an instance of inconsistency," &c. * * * * "It is a vain attempt to efface the memory of a truth which cannot be reversed or forgotten, and which will be the more conspicuous on the page of history, in proportion as attempts are made to obliterate it."

"Resolved by the general assembly, That the recent act of the president of the United States exerting a control over the public deposits, by causing them to be withheld and withdrawn, on his own responsibility, from the United States bank, in which they had been ordered to be placed by the act of congress chartering the said bank, is, in the judgment of the general assembly, a dangerous and alarming assumption of power by that officer, which cannot be too strongly condemned."

Such was the resolution of the house of delegates, last year! To have done what they ought, in consistency and fairness, this resolution of Virginia should have been first "expunged!" It is fully as strong as that of the senate of the United States. It charges "a dangerous and alarming assumption of power—which cannot be too strongly condemned."

On the 3d of March, William C. Rives was elected a senator from Virginia, in the place of gov. Tyler, as follows:

House of delegates. A message was received from the senate, by Mr. Rives, stating that they have agreed to the joint resolution for the election of a senator of the United States, to supply the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of John Tyler, esq.

On motion of Mr. Wilson, of B. the house agreed to proceed to the execution of the joint order of the day.

Mr. Garland, of M. nominated William C. Rives, esq. of Albemarle.

Mr. Harris seconded the nomination.

Mr. Price nominated Joseph S. Watkins, esq. (but withdrew his nomination.)

Mr. McMullen nominated Mr. Price, but also withdrew the nomination.

Mr. Mallory stated that in voting for Mr. Rives, he must not be considered as thereby sanctioning the expunging resolutions. Reflection had confirmed him as to the propriety of his opposition to those resolutions. He believed a majority of his constituents preferred Mr. R. and that gentleman, apart from his connection with those resolutions, would be his own choice. He should, therefore, vote for Mr. Rives, with this disclaimer, which he thought it his duty to make.

Mr. Harley said he should vote for Mr. Rives, under a belief that his constituents desired the re-election of an administration.

After a good deal of debate, in which Messrs. Price, Holleman, Wilson, of B. Gregory, Witcher, Garland, of M. Watkins, Powell and Dorman, took part, the nomination was announced to the senate, and the vote was taken as follows:

For Wm. C. Rives—Messrs. Banks, (speaker), Layne, Wiley, Miller, Wilson, of Bottetourt, Decamps, Turnbull, Mallory, Booker, Austin, Daniel, Samuel, Richardson, Hill, Vaughan, Smith, of Fauquier, Hickerson, Strange, Steger, Holland, Bowen, Davison, Watts, Watkins, Hall, of Grayson, Avent, Carrington, Coleman, Sloan, Nixon, Goodall, Harrison, Kinche-loe, Fontaine, Holleman, Robinson, Neill, Hays, Stratton, Harris, Taylor, of Matthews, Rogers, Garland, of Mecklenburg, Wiley, Morgan, Chapman, Ingles, Sherrard, Brown, of Nelson, Leland, Fitzgerald, Woolfolk, Almond, Adams, McCoy, Cackley, Hopkins, Carroll, Madison, Shands, Williams, Martency, Nicklin, Moffett, Conrad, Jesse, McMullen, Bare, Rinker, Harley, Critchfield, Moncure, Hargrave, Gillespie, Gibson and Saunders—76.

PROTEST IN THE LEGISLATURE OF VIRGINIA.

On the 11th of February, ult. the following protest was offered in the house of delegates of Virginia: We insert it by way of record.

Mr. Botts rose and said—Mr. Spenser: I must ask the indulgence of the house for a few minutes. The expunging resolutions have passed. We have had a long and arduous struggle, and the party with whom I have acted have sustained. I might almost say, an inglorious defeat, and we are compelled to submit. But one thing more is left for me to do; and that is, to carry out the design I intimated a few days ago on this floor—that of placing my protest on the journal of this house. It will be recollected, sir, that when I submitted my remarks on the expunging resolutions, I read in my place a protest, by way of argument, which I intended to offer, in the event that these resolutions should be adopted. That protest was thought by some to contain sentiments that might prove offensive and disrespectful to the house, which I did not design. I have, in conformity with the suggestions of some of my friends, reviewed that protest, and modified it, so far as to strike from it all that might be regarded as applicable to the members of this body, and retaining all that was justly applicable to the resolutions themselves. I am aware, Mr. Speaker, that there are one or two, or perhaps three, members of this house, who, from not being familiar with protests, regard it as a right belonging exclusively to the president of the United States. Such, I apprehend, is not the fact with a majority of this body, who, I trust, will recognize the right of any member to enter his dissent, and the reasons therefor, on the journal, to any measure of the body of which he may be a member, upon general parliamentary principles, recognized in every free government.

The protest is in the following words:

In the name, and on behalf of that portion of the people of this commonwealth, who have committed to my charge the preservation of their rights and their sacred honor, on the floor of this house, which it is my duty and preservation, as far as in my power lies, to defend and preserve unsold, and which, by my will, at the hazard of my life, restore as pure and undefiled as they came into my hands, finding all resistance vain, and all argument ineffectual in checking the fixed and unalterable determination of a majority which we have no means or power to control; and in the sincerity of my heart believing the instructions given to contain a requisition at war with the letter and spirit of the constitution, which will operate as a forfeiture of the dignity and character of this commonwealth; and regarding it as a measure altogether unworthy the ancient pride and dignity of Virginia, and it being manifest that it is calculated to carry out no question of executive expediency beyond that of offering an oblation to execute or power, and to force, by indirect, unprecedented and illegitimate means, the faithful representatives of this state from the seats which they occupy in the senate of the United States, by the voice of the people legally and constitutionally expressed, to be supplied from the ranks of a political aspirant, whose public history demonstrate the fact that he recognises no principle beyond that of promoting his own ambitious designs: I feel myself solemnly and imperiously called upon by every consideration of justice to my constituents and duty to my country, to enter my formal protest to the congress of the United States, to induce and vote for, a resolution directing the resolution of the senate, passed on the 28th March, 1834, declaring "that the president of the late executive proceedings in relation to the public revenue, has assumed upon himself authority and power not conferred by the constitution and laws, but in derogation of both," to be expunged from the journal of the senate of the United States; as carrying no authority with it, the act required being itself a violation of that constitution which we and they have alike sworn to support, and as being undignified, unstatesmanlike and humiliating.

I protest against it, as a measure originally emanating from an impure source, adopted now to answer an end not contemplated by the constitution, or sanctioned by the usage of the country, and alike disreputable to the intelligence and pride of this state, which the independent people of this commonwealth have not, and I trust in God, never will sanction by word, thought or deed.

I earnestly and solemnly protest against it as the act of a party, not constituting, as I think, a majority in this state; dominant here by accident, who cannot be justified in taking advantage of the brief authority with which they have been clothed, to carry into effect their party views, by an indirect which I confidently believe will be reprobated and condemned by the great mass of the people of Virginia, when the violence of party spirit shall have passed away; and which I believe, will be a source of deep and lasting regret to its warmest supporters in this house, when their minds shall be freed from the trammels and shackles of party prejudice, and party passion, to which alone, I am willing to ascribe this most odious and detestable stain upon the fair fame of Virginia, as I will do them the justice to believe, that in the absence of all political excitement, such a measure could not have found a single advocate on the floor of this house.

My object in submitting this protest is, to present my objections to the measure in a more lasting and conspicuous form than can be done by a simple negative vote.

NILES' WEEKLY REGISTER.

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY H. NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

A supplement is given with the present number—which contains 24 pages of closely packed matter; yet without seemingly diminishing the large amount that remains staring us in the face! The desire is vain to keep-up with events and matters of record; but we shall do all that we can, to present, and as soon as we may, a sequence of articles that will faithfully preserve and hand down to posterity, a history of the occurrences of these momentous times. The present number is, as we think, a valuable one.

John Lang, esq. the senior editor of the New York Gazette, is dead! He was in his 67th year, and had been connected with the Gazette for near half a century. He was one of the kindest and best of men—a father in his profession, and a friend to every one worthy of his liberality—in thought, word and deed. The last time we saw the cheerful and benevolent and veteran editor, was at Washington, some few years ago—when Mr. Seaton, junior editor of the "National Intelligencer," wishing to gather together the "veterans of the press," as he called us, gave a dinner party, to Joseph Gales, then of Raleigh, N. C. major B. Russell, of Boston, John Lang, of New York, and the writer of this brief tribute to the worth of Mr. Lang. The five of us, only, were present, and had a pleasant time of it, to which Mr. Lang, with his great good humor, largely contributed.

The steamboat line, on Monday last, commenced its regular trips between Baltimore and Philadelphia—on which day the Carroll brought from the latter to the former city, three hundred and eight passengers.

The trip between Baltimore and Norfolk, called 200 miles, has been twice made by the steamboat Kentucky, in a little over thirteen hours.

There are before the Massachusetts legislature sixty petitions for new banks, with a capital of more than twenty-five millions of dollars.

There is a large batch before the legislature of Maryland.

The Mississippi legislature adjourned on the 26th ult. The Union bank bill was laid on the table, and the New Orleans and Nashville rail road bill failed. The house insisted on locating it east of the Pearl river. The senate insisted on the west, and neither would recede, so the bill was lost.

The following statement of the condition of the bank of the United States, at the beginning of last month, and also on the 4th inst. when the charter expired, is derived from the returns made to the treasury department:

The "Richmond Enquirer" says—The bank bill was yesterday indefinitely postponed in the house of delegates. It miscarried between the efforts of those who asked too much, and of those who would grant too little.

VOL. L.—SIG. 4.

Some were for running into an excess of about seven millions of new banking capital. Others, were against granting any or sufficient capital. The juste milieu, who were for avoiding either extreme, and were for allowing three or four millions, were outnumbered, and outvoted, and the bill was finally committed to the tomb of the Capulets. We regret the fate of the bill, because we had hoped that a reasonable addition would have been made to our banking capital, upon the condition of limiting the notes to at least $10.

The vice president of the United States, Mr. Van Buren, in a long reply to certain citizens of Ohio, at Cincinnati, says—

"From the bottom of my heart do I congratulate you upon the noble stand, which Ohio appears to have taken at this critical moment upon the subject of banks. Her course is deserving of all commendation, and may well be looked to by her older sisters in the confederacy, not only with admiration, but with profit."

The most prominent and the only leading measure, that was adopted by the state of Ohio, was the passage of a law to prohibit the circulation of the bills or notes of the United States bank of Pennsylvania, within that state—and to which Pennsylvania will resort to the lex talionis—very promptly. It will be an "unprofitable contest," and apply to the bills or notes of all the banks of Ohio: but Pennsylvania is clearly justifiable in this extreme act of discourtesy on the part of the legislature of Ohio. "Let the hardest fend off!"—said the oyster knife to the oyster.

[It appears, however, that this part of the Ohio bill, was "dropped like a hot potato," before the bill was passed.]

In the legislature of New York, a following of the reported act of Ohio, seems to have been designed. The Albany Argus has this account of it:

"Several of the New York papers, we observe, labor under a misapprehension, that a proposition or "motion," is pending in the assembly, to prohibit the circulation, within this state, of the bills of the bank of the United States, recently chartered by the legislature of Pennsylvania. The question, it is true, came up incidently in the assembly, upon the reference of a petition from Ontario county, to suppress the circulation of the bills of the new bank in this state. Subsequently, another petition, of a similar purport, and from the same county, was presented; but both were laid upon the table, where they now lie, and by a vote indicative, we should judge, of a determination on the part of the house, not to act further in the premises.*

The annexed paragraph from the Harrisburgh Intelligencer of Wednesday shows how universally the rail road system of improvement is about to pervade the state of Pennsylvania:

Between thirty and forty rail road bills were considered and passed in the committee of the whole, on Tuesday, in the house. A number of them were read a second time and passed. On Wednesday, those which had been read the second time, were agreed to on final passage and sent to the senate. The others were read the second time and passed. Something like sixty rail road bills have been reported to the legislature this session.

It is stated that in one of the experimental trips on the Greenwich railway in England, the train of six carriages was conveyed at the rate of a mile a minute, or sixty miles an hour. This is annihilating space with a vengeance.

The bill to extend the charter of the Girard bank, Philadelphia, which was vetoed by governor Ritner, has passed both houses of the legislature of Pennsylvania, by a constitutional majority of two-thirds of each branch, and become a law, without the signature of the governor.

*It was laid upon the table, (otherwise rejected) until November next, by a vote of 87 to 14!

Banks, aye, mammoth ones, are becoming as plenty—"as blackberries," in their season; and the mills will be hard-worked to make paper enough. Among the multitude that are about to vex the public, and bring swift destruction on honest labor, we see that a state bank has been established with a nominal capital of 12,500,000 dollars! But this bank, like the rest, will not add any thing to the solid capital of the country—on which the operations of discreet banking should be based. The banks incorporated during the late or present sittings of the state legislatures, will probably exceed the amount of from eighty to one hundred millions of dollars! The legislators are mad.

The legislature of Ohio has passed a law prohibiting the establishment within that state of any branch or agency of the United States bank, chartered by the state of Pennsylvania. The section which prohibited the circulation of the notes of the bank in Ohio, was stricken out before the passage of the bill!

Two millions of the capital of the Citizens' bank of N. Orleans, negotiated with Messrs. Hope & Co. of Amsterdam, have been received, and the bank will go into operation next month. This is "foreign" capital.

The Baltimore and Ohio rail road company has been the pioneer in subduing space, by means of such improvements. It is admitted, as well in Europe, as in all other countries and states, that they have rendered more KNOWLEDGE, the result of actual experiment, as to the use of the facilities and power gained by rail roads, than all the world besides! This is great, but just, praise. They have accomplished things deemed impossible by theorists, and in several respects—especially in the manufacture of locomotive engines by them, and for their own road—as the following will shew.

The editor of the REGISTER was politely invited to witness the great experiment performed on Tuesday last—but was so situated that he could not attend. The result, however, is well stated in the extracts appended. We have to add only, that the descent of the planes was attended with no difficulty whatever—the brakes were not used at all, the steam being shut-off, or used only to counteract the power of gravity; and the engine, at all times, was entirely under controul of the engineer.

The result of this experiment is worth millions on millions of dollars.

From the Baltimore Chronicle of Wednesday last.

The members of the city council, with other gentlemen, visited Parr's Ridge yesterday, by invitation of the president and directors of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company, to witness the experiment of running the engine up the inclined planes. The particulars of this experiment will be given, we presume, in the report of the committee of the city council.—We shall, therefore, content ourselves at present with stating, that the experiment was completely successful, demonstrating the practicability of using locomotive engines on the whole route to the Ohio, as there will not, we believe, be any other elevations so high as those at Parr's Ridge. The first inclined plane is 2,150 feet long, 2,050 feet at an elevation of 197 feet 2 inches per mile, and 100 feet at 201 feet 1 inch per mile. Up this plane the engine travelled with the following weight:

Weight of engine and tender.....	12½ tons.
Large car.....	5½
3 smaller cars at 1½.....	4½
50 passengers at 140 pounds each.....	3½

26 tons.

The second inclined plane extends in length 3,000 feet, of which 2,800 feet have an elevation of 170 feet 2 inches per mile; 100 feet 227 feet 3 inches per mile; and 100 feet 264 feet per mile. The engine carried the train of cars up to the last 100 feet, when the three small cars were detached, and the engine started itself, carrying the remaining car and passengers to the summit.

The late hour at which the party returned prevents us from noticing this interesting experiment more in detail to-day.

A writer in the "American" of Thursday, says—

Presently we arrived [at the foot of the planes] where the big car was to be unyoked, and the company to be bestowed in the small ones. What was our surprise at this moment, instead of coming to a halt, to see the whole array, big car and all, shooting up the plane at the rate of five miles an hour. Mr. Gwynn, the engineer, took it into his head to disobey orders and to push upward with the entire train as it was.

The first plane is 2,000 feet long, and a considerable portion of it rises at the rate of 201 feet to the mile. We went up with great ease. The next plane is about 3,000 feet long. Its ascent is in one part, 170 feet to the mile—in another 227, and in a third part, 264 feet to the mile. Our progress was steady, vigorous and rapid, until we got within 20 paces of the top of the plane. Here we dropped the three light cars* and had the satisfaction to see the engine actually start from its position, on the plane of 264 feet, with all apparent ease, and drag the large heavy car and its company to the top.

The burthen borne in the experiment has been weighed, I understand, and amounts to 26 tons. The cars detached on the last plane are estimated at 5 tons, leaving 21 tons as the weight taken over 264 feet elevation in the mile.

The return down the planes was exceedingly interesting. The engine held back like a trained horse and brought us, with two burden cars in addition, (making an increase of about 8 tons), to the foot, at the rate of one or two miles to the hour, and varying at the pleasure of the engineer, who sometimes, to show his command of the train, stopped stock still. All this was done without the aid of the breaks, and simply by the backward action of the engine.

It should be added, that a very strong wind prevailed, blowing "in the teeth" of the locomotive and the cars, at the time of the ascent—which much retarded their upward progress. Anthracite coal was the fuel used, with some wood—the fan of the engine not being in order.

Liverpool papers to the 14th ult. have been received at New York. Nothing interesting is related in them, except the following:

The Paris Moniteur of the 6th, contains the following important announcement:

"At the close of yesterday's sitting of the chamber of deputies, all the ministers repaired to the Tuileries, and placed their resignations in the hands of the king."

The proceeding of ministers, thus announced by the chief government paper, is accounted for by a reference to the report of Friday's sitting of the chamber of deputies, by which it appears that ministers were left in a minority of two, on M. Gouin's motion relative to the five per cent. question, the numbers being 194 for the non adjournment of the question, and 192 for the indefinite adjournment of it, as required by ministers.

New victories are claimed in Spain, over the forces of Carlos; but still the war drags on, with much loss of life and great cruelty. A letter from Sarre, dated February 3, says—

The days of Mina are numbered—I mean as regards his political existence; for, sanguinary as he is, I would not that his life should be sacrificed to the just vengeance of his countrymen! The representative of the queen in Catalonia—Mina, who ordered every fifth inhabitant in Lacaroz to be shot—Mina, whose horrible cruelties have caused thousands of Spaniards to quit, with disgust, the infant sovereign—that same Mina is now, at length, compelled to fly before the mob he created, and to seek a refuge from the fury of his own partisans, in the fort Montjouiuch, at Barcelona!

O'Connell's imputed job with Raphael, in causing him, in consideration of £2,000 paid for the expenses, to be returned for a borough in Ireland, was to be brought before the British parliament by Mr. Hardy.

In England, the ministry had a majority of 41 on an amendment to the address moved by sir Robert Peel against the proposed extension of the municipal reform to Ireland—the vote was, for the amendment 243, against it 284. The adversaries of government were, it is said, not prepared for so decisive a vote in its favor.

We have some valuable statistics from England—but they, with a large number of domestic articles of the same nature, must be deferred.

Nantucket is going largely into the silk business. This is characteristic of the enterprise of those famous hunters of the whale. The delicate fabric of the one employment is in singular contrast to the bold and daring dangers which are associated with the other. There is to be erected at Nantucket by the Atlantic Silk company, a steam silk factory, which is already in great forwardness.

The N. York American says—"The grand jury have, as we understand, found four bills of indictment against the journeymen taylor, for riot, and one bill against twenty-five of the same individuals, for conspiracy. These indictments will be tried next month."

On Wednesday last week, two auctioneers of N. York sold real estate in that city to the amount of $629,000. Two lots on Wall street sold, the first for $35,000, and the second for $60,000.

*They remained stationary, by the use of the brakes.

Twelve hundred and twenty-five houses were erected in New York, during the year 1835.

Eighteen pence a pound for choice cuts of beef. Two dollars for a good turkey. Eighteen pence a pound for North river bass. This in a land of plenty.

[N. Y. Star.]

Twelve thousand bushels of American wheat, which had been carried to England, bounded there, and re-exported to the city of New York, were sold last week at $112\frac{1}{2}$ to $118\frac{3}{4}$ cents, per bushel.

Information had reached Natchez (according to the Courier of that place, of March 4) by express, from Natchadoches, containing information as late as Feb. 6th, by which it is positively affirmed that Santa Anna, with his army, is on his march upon Texas. Six hundred troops, of his forces, have arrived at Matamoras, making that garrison 1,000. There are 1,000 on the Rio Frio; 1,000 more on the march to the Rio Grande. A simultaneous attack is meditated on Goliad and Bejar. The cavalry are said to be very choice, well armed with lances, muskets, pistols. Santa Anna has sworn to take Texas or lose Mexico.

The Philadelphia National Gazette says—It is authorised to state, that Burd Patterson, esq. of Pottsville, Penn. will give one thousand dollars a ton, for ten tons of good iron smelted with anthracite coal. The march of improvement and invention is onward; and the day will doubtless come when anthracite coal may be successfully applied to the smelting of "good" iron.

The editor of the Newark Advertiser acknowledges the receipt of a bunch of Isabella grapes, preserved fresh until this time, by a process discovered by Mr. C. A. Harrison of that place. They are said to be part of about two bushels which were plucked from the vines in September last; and are described as being as fresh, plump and luscious as on the day they were gathered. The process of preservation, the knowledge of which, for the present at least, Mr. Harrison reserves to himself, is said to be entirely simple and practicable, so much so that, when the vessels are once procured, a hundred bushels of the fruit may be preserved at an annual average cost of about one dollar.

We find the following paragraph in the Chicago American, of the 27th ult.

"Rumor says the Indians on our frontiers are discontented, and that those who were removed west of the Mississippi last year are returning. If such be the case, we may have another Black Hawk affair. The number of warriors in the neighboring tribes is estimated at 4,000 to 5,000. The country is wholly unprepared for resistance in case the Indians should commence hostilities."

A remarkable fact—The church at Southampton, Mass. was organized in 1743, and they have had but two clergymen in all that time, the first serving a period of 60 years, and his successor still holding on. This speaks as much in favor of the congregation as of their pastors. Such instances of uninterrupted harmony are but too rare in our country.

[N. Y. Star.]

Oak wood was sold in Philadelphia, last week, at twenty dollars a cord. The harbor had then been blockaded with ice for two months. It is now at about six dollars.

The Hudson Gazette says:—"This day makes 108 days that the ground has been covered with snow; a thing, we may venture to say, unknown in the history of America since its first settlement. We may reasonably expect, from present appearances, that the snow will last 20 days longer."

The Columbia (Pa.) Register says:—"If any evidence in addition to our senses were wanting to prove the excessive severity of the present winter, the fact that many deer have been found dead in the woods, in the upper townships, in this county, is conclusive. They are generally found standing erect braced in the snow."

The Philadelphia Herald gives a map of the district of country between Philadelphia and Baltimore, exhibiting the route of the several rail roads which combined are to connect the two cities. The first issues from the southern section of Philadelphia, passes the Schuylkill near its mouth, and runs through Chester along the banks of the Delaware, a distance of seventeen miles to the Delaware line, where the Delaware company takes it up, and continuing for some distance near the river, passes through Wilmington along the wharves, thence through Newport and Stanton, a distance of twenty-three miles to the Maryland line, where the Delaware and Maryland company commence and carry it on through Elkton and Charlestown, for nineteen miles to the Susquehanna river at Havre de Grace. Thence to the Canton wharves at the eastern extremity of Baltimore, the distance is thirty-four miles. It is confidently expected that the whole line will be ready for travel by next winter.

A straight line between the two cities would be eighty-seven miles in length; the present steamboat route is one hundred and five miles; and the route by the above rail roads will be ninety-three.

[American.]

Three men and thirty-four horses were consumed by fire, in New York, on the morning of the 16th instant. The distress and agony of the horses, evinced by their deafening cries and contortions of body, were heart-rending to the beholders, who were unable to render them assistance.

WINCHESTER AND POTOMAC RAIL ROAD. The Winchester Republican says—"Operations have commenced on our rail road." On Monday, the locomotive Tennessee, began its regular trips between Winchester and Harper's Ferry. For the present, says that paper, "the cars will start for the Ferry at about 7 in the morning, to arrive there in time for passengers to proceed immediately in the Baltimore cars, and will leave the Ferry (for Winchester) as soon as the cars from Baltimore arrive in the afternoon."

PROFITS OF CANALS. On the 8th inst. the commissioners of the New York canal fund made their annual report to the legislature of that state, giving the amount of tolls on the several canals for the last navigation season; together with the rates of toll for 1835, the rates, established by the canal board for 1836, and the minimum rates fixed by the constitution: and also a detailed account of the business done upon the canals.

The amount of tolls collected on the several canals is as follows, viz:

Tolls on the Erie canal.....	$1,375,821 26
" Champlain canal.....	116,131 10
" Oswego canal.....	29,180 62
" Cayuga and Seneca canal.....	20,430 14
" Chemung canal.....	4,714 98
" Crooked Lake canal.....	1,830 55

Total.....$1,548,168 65

This exceeds the collection for tolls in 1834, by the sum of $208,001 89.

LAKE ERIE AND NEW YORK CANAL. A committee at Buffalo have made a report to her common council of that city, from which we gather the following information as to the opening of the canal and lake at that place, and at Albany, for nine years past.

Year.	Canal opened at Buffalo.	Canal opened at Albany.	Lake Erie open at Buffalo.
1827	April 21	April 21	April 21
1828	" 1	" 1	" 1
1829	" 25	" 29	May 10
1830	" 15	" 20	April 6
1831	" 16	" 16	May 8
1832	" 18	" 25	April 27
1833	" 22	" 22	" 23
1834	" 16	" 17	" 6
1835	" 15	" 15	May 8

Here it will be perceived, that the canal at Buffalo and Albany, and the lake, at Buffalo, were never, during those nine years, except once in 1828, open so early as the 1st of April, and never but that one year open before the 15th of April. In three of those nine years the lake at Buffalo was closed till after the 7th of May. In six of those nine the lake at Buffalo was closed until after the 20th of April. In eight of those nine years the canal was closed, both at Buffalo and Albany, until the 15th April.

OHIO AND THE RAIL ROAD. The following important resolutions have passed both branches of the legislature of Ohio. Evincing the sense of that powerful member of the confederacy as to the national importance of this great work, they cannot fail to exert a proper influence whenever the matter in question may come before the legislature of the nation.

Resolved by the general assembly of the state of Ohio, That we deem the completion of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road as a measure of great importance to the western states, and affecting in some measure the interest of the whole union; and therefore that it be recommended to our senators and representatives in congress to use such means as they deem expedient to procure aid from congress towards the accomplishment, at an early period, of so desirable an object as the completion of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road.

Resolved, That his excellency the governor be requested to forward a copy of the foregoing resolution to each of our senators and representatives in congress.

The New York Gazette says:—"Yesterday was the eighty-eighth day since the awful conflagration which visited our city; and yet, in many places throughout the burnt district, the ruins are still smoking.

Vastly important! We understand that Mad'me Celeste visited the ladies of the president's family on Saturday, and expressed a desire to see the great hero of that city, where she had lately won golden favors, in almost as much abundance, as he had won laurels. The cabinet council of the nation happened to be in deliberation at the time, but what was that to the entreaty of so fair an applicant to the honor of an interview? The doors were accordingly thrown open, and the fascinating little danseuse was received duly by the president, surrounded by the national executive, with all that distinguished courtesy, for which he is remarkable. It may be readily believed, that the winning manner of the fair visitant left the most favorable impression on the eminent company.

[Georgetown Metrop.]

MONEY. The following notice of the state of the money market at Philadelphia, is from Bicknell's Reporter:

Money continues scarce—very scarce. On Saturday last, good paper was offered at one per cent. per month. The market was somewhat easier yesterday; very little, however. A change for the better must soon take place. The New Yorkers and Bostonians, who have been forwarding their stocks to our market for the last fortnight, and have thus been absorbing our capital, will not be permitted to do so any longer with impunity. Our capitalists have commenced retaliating upon them, and the New York market will soon be, if it is not already, in as bad a condition as our own. Some may think that this will not relieve us—it cannot do otherwise, however. The great difficulty with us has grown out of the immense amount of stock in our market, and the high price at which it sold here. We allude, of course, to the stock of the bank of the United States, and assure the holders of the "article" that it will not now bring a higher price in Philadelphia than any where else—that in fact it will not bring what it is really worth here, in consequence of their being so much in the market. Stocks are like every thing else—when the supply is greater than the demand, the article will depreciate in price.

GREAT LAW SUIT. The New Orleans Union of the 23d ult. says. "The suit so long pending between the United States and the city has at length been terminated by the decision of the supreme court at Washington, against the claims of the government. The consequences of this decision to the city are of an important nature.

The sum of $1,600,000, the proceeds of the sale of the lots on the levee, and which amount is now in the city and commercial banks, will become the property of the city; this is more than sufficient to pay the whole debt of the city, and thus removes one of the most serious objections to the bill of Alderman Labatut, dividing the city into three sections."

ILLINOIS. The country along the Mississippi and Illinois rivers, comprising the territory of Illinois, was discovered in the year 1673, by Marquette and Jofette, who had been sent to explore it by the gov. of Canada. Kaskaskia, Caliohia and several other villages were founded in 1683. In 1763, the territory was ceded to Great Britain. In 1783, it formed a part of Virginia, In 1787, it formed—with Indiana—the territory north west of the Ohio. In 1809, it was organized as a separate territory, and in 1818 was admitted into the union. At the time of its admission into the union it contained 35,220 inhabitants; in 1820, 55,211; in 1830, 157,445. The increase during the last five years has been very great. Illinois has already projected and commenced a system of internal improvements, on a scale worthy of the oldest, most populous, and richest states in the confederacy. The "young giant" has a glorious course to run, and he has started with a strength and vigor worthy of all admiration.

THE WOOL BUSINESS. We understand that large importations of wool are daily expected into this wool growing region, from the east and south west. Eighty-five thousand pounds will ascend the Ohio, shipped from Mexico, via New Orleans, and 230,000 will arrive by the Pennsylvania canals, importations from Mogadore, in Africa, via New York and Philadelphia. The manufacturers are able to purchase this wool from abroad, and pay the carriage here, cheaper than they can buy it from our farmers. The inevitable consequences will be, that the present prices must come down. [Wheeling Gaz.]

REVENUE. The amount of revenue collected in the port of New York for the last year, exceeds the revenue of the former years by forty per cent. The estimates being the same, the surplus of course goes into the deposit banks. In 1828 the amount was twenty-five millions imports—last year there was ninety millions. [Star.]

Lexington, (Ky.) March 15. We regret to learn by a gentleman of this city, who was in Frankfort on Friday night last, that the arsenal, containing the public arms, was discovered to be on fire between 2 and 3 o'clock Saturday morning, and such was the progress which the devouring element had made before it was discovered, that the building, with all it contained, was destroyed. Not a sword, musket, cartouch box, nor trapping, was saved.

The cause of the disaster, whether the effect of accident or design, had not transpired when our informant left. [Intel.]

NEWS FROM TEXAS. Randolph, Tennessee, March 1. Volunteers are returning from Texas. As we heretofore predicted, they have found any thing else there than food for a frolic, and report very discouragingly of the inhabitants of the country. In the camp at San Antonio, the troops had been entirely out of bread-stuff some days before our informant left, their food being Spanish beef. We wish not to cast a damp feeling upon the spirit of those disposed to see Texas free from the Mexican government, our own opinion being what it may. We are a friend to liberty any where and every where, in its pure sense; but any information, whatever it may be, from Texas, we feel bound to give. Many that have returned from that country speak of the land as being rich and productive. But of its inhabitants they give a miserable account. They are said to be very poor, and care not a fig under what government they live. We speak of them generally: doubtless there are exceptions. The volunteers even have to pay for the food for their horses; say there is no money there excepting what the volunteers take with them, and that the majority of them are returning. The principal object of the majority of the inhabitants that fight is plunder and pillage. The country is now free from Mexican troops, but Santa Anna is expected in the spring with a powerful army. The inhabitants are said to be indolent, and quite contented. The only lands that can be given to volunteers are upon the head waters of the streams, and back in the interior, the fine lands on the navigable streams being included in the grants to companies by the government. The weather during the winter has been a continual stream of sunshine—no rains for two or three months. [Recorder.]

Charleston, March 14. We are indebted to an officer lately in the Texian naval service, who arrived in this city on Friday last, via New Orleans, and who left Victoria, a port in Texas, on the 8th ult. for several particulars in relation to the state of affairs in that territory. Our informant states that gen. Houston arrived there from the Mission de Refugio, (which at that time was headquarters) on his way to San Felipe, the seat of government, some difficulty having taken place between governor Smith and the provisional government, who had not, however, resigned. The troops were concentrating at Copeno. They were to move on the 1st March, and the forces consisted, as well as can be recollected, of the following: at the Mission 180; at Labadie, 110; at Copeno, 210; at Bezar, 80. 100 men had landed at Dimmo's point from North Alabama, about the 10th February; 180 sailed from New Orleans about the 23rd. They are the troops that left New York, and were carried into Nassau, N. P. Colonel Fanning commands the forces at Copeno. The gallant corps of volunteer greys from New Orleans had generally returned, disgusted with the service, saying that they would no longer fight to enrich a few land speculators; they went to establish the liberty of the country. The general supposition in Texas was that there would be no fighting until the summer was far advanced, as the insurrection of two generals of Santa Anna's occasioned a division of his forces, which at no time amounted to more than 8,000 troops. Col. Bowie had gone amongst the Comanche Indians to have a talk, and he will endeavor to keep them quiet.

Elections were going on at the time our informant left for members to the new convention which was to assemble on the 1st March. On the 4th March the Texian declaration of independence was to be made at San Felipe and the provisional government under the new order of things instituted. [Patriot.]

HIGH PRICES IN THE WEST. We are informed, by an intelligent gentleman from the west, that the prices of pork, wheat and provisions generally, were never known so high as they are at this moment in Kentucky, Mississippi and the adjoining states. Pork, for example, running alive in the streets, brings $7 a hundred; and wheat from $2 to $3 a bushel. At Chicago, we have already known that pork was selling for $25 a barrel. At Louisville, Kentucky, and other places along the Ohio and Mississippi, we learn that the prices are equally exorbitant. The explanation given is this: During a few years past, the Atlantic states, in the south, have turned their attention to the more valuable culture of cotton, tobacco, rice, &c. and mean-while the western states have been filling in to an almost incalculable extent, with the flood of emigration constantly setting in that direction. Thus, Indiana, two or three years since, contained about 300,000, and now has 600,000 inhabitants. The population of the whole union has gone on increasing rapidly. Thus the demand for grain and provisions and live stock has been greatly increased in the states for example along the valley of the Ohio, where they are most abundantly produced, and secondly, the demand has been further increased by the attention of the planter, in the cotton growing states, being almost exclusively directed upon that and the other precious staples of the south. New Orleans, Feb. 20. The ship Unicorn, capt. Lindsey, which has just arrived at this port from Trieste and Marseilles, has on board three jacks and three jennies, which, we understand, are beautiful animals of the kind. The Unicorn touched at Malta for the purpose of bringing them to this country, for that public spirited individual HENRY CLAY, esq. to whom his adopted state is greatly indebted for this and other valuable acquisitions, accomplished without regard to labor or expense. THE SEMINOLE WAR.

Charleston, March 14. The schrs. George and Mary, captain Willey, arrived at this port on Saturday, in 40 hours from St. John's (E. Florida.)

We are indebted to capt. Willey for the Jacksonville Courier of the 10th inst. from which we have copied the interesting intelligence from the seat of war, given below.

Capt. W. informs us that the steamboat Florida arrived at Jacksonville late on Thursday afternoon, from Picolata, but brought no news in addition to what is given below:

LATE NEWS FROM GEN. GAINES.

The intelligence from the Wythlacochee continues to be of great interest and importance. Soon after our last publication, we learned that gen. Gaines continued fighting the Indians. After the battle of the first day, gen. G. found thirty Indians killed. He had two of his men killed, and several wounded. On the third day the Indians crossed the Wythlacochee to attack him. He having taken only eight days' provisions, and being thus closely pressed, sent for reinforcements, provisions and ammunition. Gen. Clinch, being under the orders of gen. Scott, and having received no order to send the provisions for the army, sent corn from his own plantation, and Mr. B. M. Dell started with upwards of eighty head of cattle.

They had not proceeded many miles, when an express arrived from gen. Gaines, containing the intelligence that he was entirely surrounded by the Indians, and, unless he received provisions, he should be under the necessity of cutting his way through them, leaving his wounded. He requested the assembling of the Alachua militia, to guard the provisions sent him. After receiving this unexpected intelligence, the provisions, which were on their way, were ordered back. The soldiers of Alachua, though so unceremoniously discharged, and who refused to be disbanded in the present defenceless state of the country, assembled to the number of about two hundred, to go to the assistance of gen. Gaines.

The following extract of a letter, received by colonel Dill from captain Pries, dated 4th instant, contains some further particulars:

"You may not have heard of the recent occurrences here. Gen. Gaines was attacked last Saturday evening on this side of the Wythlacochee, and has been fighting ever since. Sometimes he has three fights in the day and one in the night. At one of the fights there were found dead thirty Indians and one negro. The result of the others we have not heard. At the last advices, the loss to the army of 1,200 men was, 4 killed and 36 wounded. But we have heard the cannon several times since, firing very heavy.

"Alachua companies left here about one o'clock this morning in a very hard rain, in order to assist in guarding provisions and ammunition to the Wythlacochee, both of which general Gaines is much in want of. We understand that two days since gen. Scott, with his forces, was at Picolata, and that two different expresses have been received from him."

From the same.

By the arrival of Mr. Samuel Harrison from Alachua on Tuesday evening last, we are furnished with still later information.

Gen. Clinch, with his forces, in conjunction with the Alachua militia, making in all about eight hundred, had gone to aid gen. Gaines. He reached the camp on Saturday last, and effected a junction with him. With their united forces, amounting to nearly two thousand men, gen. Gaines intended crossing the Wythlacochee on Monday last. His boats, floating bridges, &c. were all prepared. He has four twelve pounders with which to cover his landing on the opposite side of the Wythlacochee. The Indians will undoubtedly make a desperate struggle to prevent his crossing. Mr. Harrison says that on Monday the cannon were distinctly heard. It is all over now, and we are anxious to learn the result. He states that gen. Gaines has never shown to the enemy more than about 200 men at one time. That in every instance of an attack, whether by night or day, he was prepared for them, having anticipated the movements of Ocoola. In this way he made great havoc among the enemy, having killed several hundreds of them. His loss, before gen. Clinch joined him, was only eight killed and about forty wounded. Mr. H. says that, in his express, gen. Gaines said he had men enough, and asked only for provisions and ammunition.

From some observations made by gen. Gaines, the number of Indians is estimated at between two and three thousand.

By some negroes, who have escaped to the whites, it is stated that, the Indians have made a fortification on the other side of the Wythlacochee, only four miles distant. It is made of earth and fascines, and surrounded by a wide moat. This is at Ocoola's town, and is probably the stronghold of the enemy. It is impossible to say how much credit is due to these reports of the negroes; but in most other instances since the commencement of hostilities much has been lost by not crediting their statements. Gen. Gaines intends marching for this place after crossing the river. There he will learn whether Ocoola yet knows how to make fortifications which can withstand our means of battering them down. Before that place is taken the one in which the women and children probably are, the struggle will be severe. It will be the fight of death to many.

Should gen. Gaines succeed, as he probably has before this, he will have conquered the Indians, and they must either surrender, or betake themselves to the hammocks and swamps for the purpose of concealment and eluding the whites. By all his movements gen. Gaines has evinced great skill, and has shown that he perfectly understands the enemy with whom he has to contend. The manner in which he cuts them off with so little loss to himself, shows that he has been no idle scholar in the art of war. We now confidently expect a speedy close of this savage warfare, and that Ocoola's boast of five years will be a short five months.

The following statement of the officers and soldiers who marched from Tampa Bay with gen. Gaines, furnished by lieutenant T. Paige, who was one of the number, is possessed of interest at this moment:

OFFICERS—Maj. gen. Gaines, commanding.

Lieut. col. Twiggs, commanding brigade.

Capt. Shannon, quartermaster.

Capt. Hitchcock, }
Lieut. McCall, } staff.
Lieut. Izard, }

Lt. col. Foster, commanding the 4th regiment United States infantry, seven companies, two hundred and sixty-five soldiers. Officers—Lieut. col. Foster, major Wilson, major Lear, lieutenants T. Paige, Scriven, Buchanan, Alford, Scott, Myers, Mitchell, and Reese.

Major Belton, commanding artillery, four companies, one hundred and seventy soldiers. Officers—Major Belton, majors Mountford and Zantlinger, lieut's Grayson, Linnard, Adams, Duncan, Stockton, Henderson, Allen, and Morgan. Medical staff—Drs. Heiskell, Leavenworth, Cuyler, and Reynolds.

A regiment of Louisiana volunteers, twelve companies, seven hundred soldiers, commanded by col. T. F. Smith, together with seventy friendly Indians.

From the Charleston Courier of 14th instant.

An impression has been very general in this quarter, from recent accounts received from Florida, that a hostile feeling exists between gen. Scott and gen. Gaines, and some letter writers have gone so far as to state that the former was determined not to afford assistance to the latter to extricate him from the perilous situation in which he was placed, previous to the receipt of our last advices from the banks of the Wythla-coochee.

An officer of the army, who arrived here on Saturday, in the steamer John de Nonin, assures us that there is not a shadow of foundation for these erroneous impressions. On the contrary, at the moment of his leaving Picolata, (6th instant,) there was not a man in the army of Florida, who felt more anxiously for the safety and success of general Gaines and his brave associates, than did general Scott himself; and it was believed, at the moment of his departure, that gen. S. who had then concentrated, at that point, about 2,000 men, would dismount as many of them as practicable, and, for the want of other sufficient means of transportation, load the horses with ammunition and provisions, and make a forced march to succor the detachment under general Gaines.

Many volunteers continued to arrive, to supply the place of others discharged, and increase the army in the field. It is supposed that gen. Gaines would immediately advance on the Indians, and force them, if possible, into a general action.

The following distinguished officers of the U. S. army are now at the seat of the Indian war in Florida—major general Macomb, brevet major general Scott, brevet major general Gaines, brigadier general Eustis, brigadier general Clinch, col. Lindsay, col. Crane, col. Bankhead, col. Gates, major Kerby, major Belton, major Twigg, major Whiting.

An officer of the Georgia volunteers who marched to Fort King with gen. Clinch, writes as follows:—

To give some idea of the scarcity at Fort King I will mention that $3 was paid for one biscuit, $1 per gill for liquor—$20 per gallon was offered for liquor, and would have been given readily. I think in one instance $100 was offered for one gallon. Money was of no use, grog usurped its place, and would buy any thing in the eating line. I offered a U. S. soldier twenty-five cents for his cup of coffee, and he would not take it, but would have given it up instantly for a drink of liquor. The generous fellow divided it with me and would not charge a cent.

Provisions had, however, become plentiful; supplies being furnished, at convenient points, by steamboats.

From the Savannah Republican.

Extract of a letter, dated Picolata, March 2.

"Captain Kenan's troop (the Baldwin cavalry, 90 men) who arrived here about a week ago, refused to be mustered into the service of the United States, except about 20, with captain Kenan himself, who has acted handsomely. The day before yesterday, ten or more of them, mounted their horses, and returned to Georgia—and yesterday, I had the mortification to see about 50 of them abandon their commander, and the few mustered with him into service, and rode in a body towards Georgia. They passed major Cooper's battalion about three miles on the western bank of the river, opposite Picolata, and their friends in the battalion endeavored to persuade them to return, but in vain.

These men came from Georgia with very wrong impressions. They thought they would be received as an independent corps, without being mustered in the U. S. service. Capt. Kenan did all he could to induce them to comply with the necessary terms, but they obstinately refused, although fond of their captain. Kenan is yet here—he has acted nobly, but his pride is greatly hurt by the conduct of his troop."

Despatches were received at the adjutant general's office, Washington, on Saturday evening from major general Scott, from which the following are extracts:

"Head quarters: army of Florida, between Picolata and Gary's Ferry, March 9, 1836.

"Sir: I have just set out for Fort Drane, via Gary's Ferry, on Black creek, with two companies of regulars, and intending to take with me from the latter place the small battalion of mounted Georgians, (heretofore mentioned,) under the command of major Douglas. Lieut. colonel Bankhead is at the head of the first detachment, and the two together make a total of about 240. But even this small force may be important to rescue major general Gaines.

"I had not received the slightest information of the operations on the Wythla-coochee (official or otherwise) of a later date than the 29th ult. up to this morning; and had concluded that he had effected his march, with more or less success, against the enemy, upon Tampa Bay, when at daylight, the steamer, that I am now in, arrived, and brought the rumor which is confirmed by the two accompanying notes from paymaster Little, received about six hours afterwards. On the reception of the rumor I immediately commenced preparations for this movement, but being delayed by the necessity of unloading and reloading the boat, I am now at anchor at the mouth of Black creek. I hope to put the troops in march, from Gary's Ferry, early in the day to-morrow, and to reach Fort Drane, with a small escort, the day following. It is possible that even these little detachments of horse and foot may reach the Wythla-coochee in time to render a valuable service.

"I am aware that the movement that I am making may be condemned, if regarded in any other light than a rescue, as premature. Colonel Goodwin's mounted regiment only arrived at St. Augustine last night on this morning; and consequently, the left wing cannot be in force on the Ocklawaha, in the direction of Pi-lak-a-le-kaha, earlier than the 17th, or up with the enemy before the 20th inst. Col. Lindsay, who may have already arrived at Tampa Bay, cannot operate more than two days' march from that place from the want of the means of transportation, major general Gaines having taken away the horses which were there, and the basis of the right wing is merged in the force brought by that general into the field, and must participate in his success or failure. If it falls back with him upon Fort Drane, it must suffer great loss, and if it follow him to Tampa Bay, it will be wholly out of position.

"In this and even in a greater state of uncertainty I have been ever since the 26th ultimo."

Gen. Scott then proceeds to give the reasons which have prevented him from having placed in advance a larger quantity of provisions, which were necessary to his operations. These have resulted from the nature of the country, where good roads are not to be found—from the wetness of the season and from the deficiency in the means of transportation, arising from causes entirely beyond his control; while at the same time the troops under maj. gen. Gaines have occasioned a greater consumption of provisions than gen. Scott had calculated would be required.

N. B. The amount of gen. Gaines' last express to gen. Clinch, dated 3d inst. was merely copies of his previous letters, with a note stating that the Indians were still around him, but little or no fighting had taken place since last communication.

The following is a copy of the letter of the 8th, from paymaster Lytle:

Fort Drane, March 8, 1836.

SIR: By direction of gen. Clinch, I opened your communication of the 6th instant, which arrived late last night in advance of the wagons. You will perceive by my letter of the 5th, that gen. Clinch, with all the forces at this post, and one hundred mounted men from the vicinity, had left for the Wythla-coochee, to escort a small supply of cattle, ammunition, &c. to general Gaines, having received the night before a third express from that officer. No word has been received from either of those generals since the 5th.

When gen. Clinch left here, he expected to be back on the 9th. The probability is, that the wagons will return without an escort, there being at present no troops here, and should gen. Clinch get back before the wagons depart, his men may be too much fatigued to march again immediately; but this of course is merely conjecture. I am satisfied, however, that gen. Clinch would advise that an escort accompany the wagons back to this place when reloaded.

Capt. Graham being directed by gen. Clinch to send back the wagons for supplies after their arrival here, will send them to Gary's, as being the best road.

Very respectfully, &c.

J. S. LYTLE.

Maj. gen. Scott, U. S. A. commanding in Florida.

The Indians attacked gen. Gaines with such boldness, and approached so near to his entrenchment, that many of his command, who were engaged in defending the right flank of the entrenchment, were wounded in the back by balls fired by the Indians on the left flank.

Our readers will thus perceive that, ere this, in all probability, the sun of Oceola has set—the lamented deaths of Dade and his gallant brethren been avenged, and fresh laurels added to the brows of our gallant regulars and not less gallant volunteers.

TWENTY-FOURTH CONGRESS—FIRST SESSION.

SENATE.

March 18. Mr. Nicholas offered the following resolutions, which lie one day for consideration:

Resolved, That the committee on public lands be instructed to inquire into the justice of granting to the state of Louisiana 500,000 acres of the public lands, within the limits of that state, in consideration of the great benefit derived from the levees made and kept up at individual expense, and the improvements, at the cost of the state, of the water courses, which, by act of congress, are declared American highways, forever free from any tax or toll imposed by said state.

Resolved, That the committee on naval affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of an appropriation for building or purchasing and equipping one or more steam vessels, to be employed in giving more effectual protection to the trade between New Orleans and the several ports of Mexico.

Resolved, That the secretary of the treasury be directed to communicate to the senate any information in his possession as to the expediency and probable cost of erecting a suitable building for the custom house and district court in the city of New Orleans.

Mr. Southard offered the following resolution, which lies one day for consideration:

Resolved, That the committee on commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making legislative provision for the employment of boys in the merchant vessels of the United States, in proportion to their tonnage.

An act authorising the conveyance of certain lands belonging to the university of Michigan, was read a third time, and passed.

Several bills from the other house were read and referred.

The expunging resolution offered by Mr. Benton being in order—

Mr. Benton made some observations on the subject, and concluded with moving the postponement of the further consideration of the resolution till Monday, the 4th of April, and that it be made the special order for that day;

Before Mr. Benton concluded his remarks—

The senate adjourned to Monday.

March 21. The chair laid before the senate a communication from the department of the navy, transmitting, in obedience to a resolution of the senate, the amount standing to the credit of the navy hospital fund, [$56,243].

The chair also laid before the senate a communication from the treasury department, transmitting, in obedience to a resolution of the senate, the amount paid by the United States for lands purchased from the Indian tribes from the commencement of the government to September 30, 1835.

Mr. Rives presented instructions from the Virginia legislature, in favor of the expunging resolution.

Mr. Buchanan presented instructions from the legislature of Pennsylvania, in favor of a distribution of the proceeds of the public lands among the several states.

Mr. Southard, from the committee on naval affairs, reported a bill to authorise the fitting out of an exploring expedition to the south pole; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

The resolutions on the table, offered by Mr. Grundy, Mr. Nicholas, and Mr. Southard, were severally considered and adopted.

The senate proceeded to the consideration of the unfinished business, being the expunging resolution offered by Mr. Benton.

Mr. Benton resumed his observations in support of his resolution, and concluded with moving to postpone the subject, and to make it the special order for Monday two weeks.

Mr. Porter expressed a wish to say a few words, when Mr. Benton withdrew his motion.

On motion of Mr. Wright the subject was then postponed, and made the special order for to-morrow.

Mr. Wright then reported without amendment, from the committee on finance, the bill making further appropriations for the suppression of Indian hostilities in Florida.

The bill was then considered and ordered to a third reading. [The bill wants only the president's signature to become a law.]

The senate then proceeded to the consideration of executive business: and, after remaining a short time with closed doors, the senate adjourned.

March 22. Mr. Benton, from the select committee appointed in reference to the dispute between Ohio and Michigan, and the northern boundary of Ohio, reported a bill for the admission of Michigan into the states of the union; which was read and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. Black, from the committee on private land claims, to whom were referred the petitions of numerous individuals claiming lands under the Choctaw treaty, made a report, at much length, which he read. The report was terminated by two resolutions unfavorable to the general practice in which these claims were founded.

On motion of Mr. King of Georgia, 2,000 extra copies of this report were ordered to be printed.

Mr. Buchanan, from the select committee to whom was referred the memorial of the territory of Arkansas, on the subject, reported a bill to provide for the admission of Arkansas into the states of the union; which was read and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. Benton moved to make the bill for the admission of Michigan, and the other bill last reported, the special order for Friday.

This motion was objected to by Mr. Ewing of Ohio, Mr. Porter, and Mr. Clayton, in consequence of the absence of Mr. Webster, Mr. Leigh and Mr. Naudain, who were necessarily away, but would be in their places early in the week.

On the other side, Mr. Benton and Mr. Buchanan stated that other senators would be compelled to go away next week, so that the senate would still not be full.

Mr. Ewing, of Ohio, moved that the business be made the special order for Wednesday, but the motion was negatively as yeas 19, nays 20.

Mr. Clayton moved Tuesday, and this motion was agreed to; yeas 21, nays 18.

On motion of Mr. Ewing, of Ohio, the senate proceeded to consider the unfinished business, being the expunging resolution offered by Mr. Benton.

Mr. Porter then spoke in reply to what had fallen from the senator from Missouri.

After speaking about an hour, being fatigued, Mr. Porter gave way; and

On motion of Mr. Southard, the further consideration of the subject was postponed till to-morrow.

The bill to appropriate for a limited time the proceeds of the public lands, &c. on motion of Mr. Ewing, was postponed till Wednesday week.

After attending to some private business, the senate adjourned.

March 23. Mr. Grundy presented a memorial from a committee of the clerks employed in the executive departments, on the subject of the inadequacy of their present salaries; and also a petition from individual clerks on the same subject; which were referred to the committee on finance.

Mr. Grundy gave notice that he should to-morrow ask leave to introduce a bill to authorise contracts to be made with railroad companies for the transportation of the mail.

Mr. Davis presented certain resolutions of the legislature of Massachusetts relating to the boundary line of the U. States between Maine and the British province of New Brunswick; in doing which he made some remarks.

Mr. Walker presented resolutions adopted by the legislature of Mississippi, on the subject of mail roads and a military depot; which were referred to the appropriate committee.

The senate again proceeded to the consideration of the expunging resolution.

Mr. Porter resumed the observations he commenced yesterday, in reply to the senator from Missouri; which he concluded a little before 3 o'clock.

On motion of Mr. Benton, the resolution was then laid on the table for the present, and the senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business; after which, they adjourned.

March 24. Mr. Grundy introduced his bill to authorise contracts for carrying the mail and public property of the United States, upon rail roads—which was twice read and referred.

Several unfavorable reports of committees were taken up and agreed to.

The chair laid before the senate the following communications from the treasury department:

1. A reply to a resolution calling for the expense of building a custom house at New Orleans.

2. The state of the deposit banks up to the 1st inst.

The senate was engaged principally upon private bills and resolutions—amongst the latter was one by Mr. Calhoun directing the judiciary committee to enquire into the expediency of preventing, by legal enactments, the mutilation, obliteration or expunging of the journal of the senate.

On motion of Mr. King, of Alabama, the senate proceeded to consider a bill for the relief of the several corporations within the District of Columbia.

[This bill had been recommended, by order of the senate, to the committee for the District of Columbia, and had been reported with an amendment, providing that before the secretary of the treasury shall assume the payment of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal stock, the stock shall be vested in the secretary (for the United States) the privilege being allowed to the corporations to redeem the stock within ten years, on repaying the money provided by this appropriation to be paid to the corporations.]

The amendment being agreed to, Mr. King, of Ala. moved to fill up the blanks for the sums appropriated for interest, &c. paid by the corporations, with the following sums: $449,685 for Washington; for Alexandria, $114,640 43; for Georgetown, $116,795 48; which amendments were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was reported to the senate; and the amendments having been concurred in,

Mr. Calhoun asked for the yeas and nays, which were ordered.

The question was then taken on the engrossment of the bill, and decided as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Clay, Cuthbert, Ewing, of Illinois, Ewing, of Ohio, Goldsborough, Kent, King, of Ala. King, of Ga. Linn, Nicholas, Porter, Preston, Rives, Robbins, Southard, Tallmadge, Walker—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Black, Buchanan, Calhoun, Davis, Hill, Hubbard, Mangum, Moore, Morris, Niles, Robinson, Shepley, Swift, Tomlinson, Wall, Wright—16.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Friday, March 18. After other business—

The house resumed the consideration of the report of the committee on elections relative to the North Carolina contested election.

While a desultory discussion was going on—Mr. Whittlesey called for the order of the day, [it being one of his days]; and after some opposition, it was so determined; and some private business was attended to.

Saturday, March 19. The North Carolina contested election was further discussed.

[In the course of his remarks, Mr. Newland (the claimant of the seat) avowed himself to be an unwavering friend of the present administration; and being called to order for introducing topics irrelevant to the question, was, by vote of the house, permitted to proceed.]

Mr. McKay expressed a hope that the house, before proceeding to other business, would settle the question whether further time should be allowed or not. The question had occupied a month, and, unless it was settled now, the discussion would be renewed on Thursday next, on the motion of his colleague.

Mr. Rencher wished, he said, to settle the preliminary question on the allowance of further time.

Mr. Underwood, with a view to enable the house to take the question now on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina, moved the reconsideration of the vote on his motion.

Which motion was agreed to.

Mr. Rencher then moved to strike out March 22d, and insert the third Thursday in April, with leave to the parties till that time to take further testimony.

Mr. Mann, of New York, asked the yeas and nays on this motion, and they were ordered.

The question being taken, it was decided in the negative, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Chilton Allan, H. Allen, Ashley, Bailey, Banks, Bell, Bond, Borden, Bunch, John Calhoun, W. B. Calhoun, Campbell, Carter, George Chambers, John Chambers, Chapman, Childs, Nathaniel H. Claiborne, Clark, Conner, Corwin, Crane, Darlington, Deberry, Denny, Dickson, Dunlap, Evans, Everett, Forester, Philo C. Reynolds, Ripley, Roane, Schenck, Shinn, Sickles, Speight, Sutherland, Thomas, John Thomson, Toucey, Towns, Turill, Vanderpool, Wagener, Ward, Wardwell, Webster, Weeks—103.

After some conversation between Messrs. Rencher, Speight, Underwood, Maury, A. H. Shepperd, Glascock and Hardin, as to the proper mode of bringing the constitution and laws of North Carolina, bearing on the question, before the house; the time proper to be allowed for collecting and printing those documents; and the propriety of referring the testimony which had been received since the committee reported, for the purpose of a decision upon its sufficiency.

The question now being on Mr. Mann's motion to postpone the consideration of the report of the committee on elections till Thursday next, the 24th, and make it the special order for that day, it was taken, and determined in the affirmative, by a vote of 124 to 49.

On motion of Mr. Speight, it was then ordered that so much of the constitution and laws of the state of North Carolina, relative to elections, as may be pointed out by the petitioner and sitting member, be printed for the use of the house.

Mr. Rencher moved that the house do now adjourn.

Mr. Whitlesey asked the yeas and nays on this motion, and they were ordered.

The question being taken, it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 104, nays 66.

The house then adjourned.

Monday, March 21. This being the day for the presentation and consideration of petitions and memorials, the subject first in order was the memorial presented on a former day by Mr. Howard, from sundry members of the National Trades' Union, praying congress to pass an act limiting the hours of labor to ten hours daily, in all cases where laborers are employed by the United States.

Three motions were pending: one to refer the subject to the committee on roads and canals; another to refer it to the committee on the judiciary; and a third to a select committee.

Mr. Howard remarked that the memorial was signed by about three thousand persons of the laboring class, and that their representations were entitled to the attention of this house. The ten hour system had been already extensively adopted, under which laborers were employed from six o'clock in the morning to six o'clock in the evening, allowing two hours for refreshment.

This system the memorialists represented to be more just, equal and convenient than that of laboring from sun to sun, which was a rule that necessarily varied with the latitude and with the seasons. The committee on roads and canals did not seem to be the appropriate committee for considering the subject, nor did it come within the cognizance of the committee on the judiciary. He had therefore, moved its reference to a select committee.

After some remarks from Mr. Parker,

Mr. Wardwell remarked that this subject was certainly entitled to some consideration. Almost every class of individuals and every leading interest in the country had a special committee assigned to their affairs in this house; and he saw no reason why those men, who formed the bone, muscle and sinew of the country, those who labored with their hands, should not also be listened to. He knew, moreover, that abuses existed on this subject, which required legislative interference; and alluded to the fact that our soldiers were employed on the Cumberland road, as laborers, and were compelled to labor, he believed, every day, not excepting Sundays; and that at Fort Gibson, where they were employed in making roads, six hundred of them had died. He was decidedly in favor of referring the memorial to a select committee.

The whole matter was laid upon the table—yeas 102.

The house then took up, as the next subject in order, the preamble and resolutions of the legislature of the state of Kentucky, in favor of the distribution of the proceeds arising from the sale of the public lands among the several states, presented last Monday.

The question being on the resolution offered by Mr. Williams, of Kentucky, for the reference of the subject to the committee of ways and means, with instructions to report a bill for the distribution of the proceeds arising from the sale of the public lands, among the several states, for the purposes of internal improvement and education.

Mr. Allan addressed the house warmly in favor of the resolution, until the orders of the day were announced.

Mr. Reed moved that the rules be suspended for this day, for the purpose of receiving petitions and memorials, excluding the subject of the resolutions of the legislature of Kentucky; which was agreed to.

And many petitions and memorials were presented—many of them against slavery in the District of Columbia.

Mr. Cambreleng, from the committee of ways and means, reported a bill regulating the deposits of the money of the United States in certain local banks. Read twice, and committed to the committee of the whole house on the state of the union.

Also, from the same committee, a bill to authorize the secretary of the treasury to adjust the claims of the bank of the United States for damages due that bank on account of a bill of exchange drawn on the French government, and protested, and for other purposes. Read twice, and committed.

Also, from the same committee, a bill to explain and amend the act for the relief of the sufferers by the fire in the city of New York. Read twice and committed.

A large number of reports were received from the different committees, which will sufficiently appear in their progress—some of them appearing to be of much general interest.

At last—Mr. Muhlenberg moved that the house now adjourn; and, on division, it was found that a quorum was not present.

The house then adjourned.

Tuesday, March 22. The chair announced, as the business first in order, the motion reported yesterday from the committee of ways and means, to discharge the committee of the whole on the state of the union from the further consideration of the following bill:

A bill repealing the fourteenth section of the "act to incorporate the subscribers to the bank of the United States," approved April 10, 1816.

Be it enacted, &c. That the fourteenth section of the act entitled "an act to incorporate the subscribers to the bank of the United States," approved April 10, 1816, shall be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The chair would state (he said) in advance, that the merits of the bill were not open to discussion on this motion.

Mr. Cambreleng called for the reading of the fourteenth section of the bank charter proposed to be repealed; and it was read, as follows:

"Sec. 14. And be it further enacted, That the bills or notes of the said incorporation, originally made payable, or which shall have become payable, on demand, shall be receivable in all payments to the United States, unless otherwise directed by act of congress."

Mr. Cambreleng said, the object of the committee of ways and means, in instructing him to move that the committee of the whole be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, was, to order it to be engrossed, and read a third time. He asked the clerk to read what took place in this house in 1812, when a similar question was presented in relation to the notes of the first bank of the United States.

The clerk read a passage from a report in the National Intelligencer of February 13th, 1812.

[The object of this proceeding is, immediately to check the circulation and currency of the notes of the late bank of the United States. A debate followed, and there were many speakers—but the substance of what was said may be gathered from the following remarks:

Mr. Patton, of Va. said it was merely a question of time and of form. It was a question whether the house should act deliberately and wisely upon the subject, which would have the effect to delay the passage three or four weeks. For one, he was not disposed to dispense with the usual forms of legislation. Whether there were any objections to passing the bill, he did not know; if there were, he should like to hear them. He asked if there was any reason for its passage. He thought the notes of the United States bank as good and safe as the notes of any bank. He could see no danger to the treasury, nor any other reason why the usual forms should be dispensed with, to hasten the passage of the bill. He could not see why those who wished to examine and discuss the subject should be deprived of the privilege, without any necessity; and he should oppose the motion, unless some good reason for it could be given.

Mr. Brown said if the 14th section was in operation, he could conceive no reason why it should not be repealed. If there was any doubt whether it was still in force, then it ought to be repealed. The only question then was one of time: whether we should repeal it now or at the close of the session. He could not view the measure as one calculated to discredit the notes of the United States bank; it would leave them precisely on the same ground with all other notes. The president of the bank himself, in his late address, congratulates the country upon the total disconnection of the bank from the government.

Mr. McKennon, after adverting to the past action of the committee and the house, asked for the pressing reason—if any thing had occurred—which called for this change of purpose and of action. He was opposed to bringing the subject before the house in this way. It was a question which required deliberation and discussion, and there was no better way than to consider and discuss it in committee of the whole. It was a question of expediency, whether the bill should be refused, or whether the repealing clause should go into effect. He thought it might be inexpedient to pass the bill, because it would depreciate the bills of the United States bank, and we could get no better currency, and he thought there could be no good reason unless it was to substitute a better currency. An attempt was making to destroy the circulation of that bank, by directions of the head of the treasury for the deposit banks to refuse its bills, and by this attempt to bring the influence of congress to discredit them. He offered these reasons to show that the bill ought to remain in the committee of the whole, and ought to be discussed.

Mr. Wise said it was a question not what mischief, but what good, would arise from the course proposed. The members of the committee of ways and means, he believed, were the only individuals who had started any doubt as to the fact whether the clause in question had become extinct. There was not a doubt on the part of the friends of the "monster" that it was dead, and the gentleman from Indiana might, if he chose, go and bury it. No good was to ensue to the country from passing this bill at all; much less from passing it speedily. If it was hurried into the house, the previous question stood there in dread array against the freedom of debate. There was a reason why this subject ought not to be acted on speedily; and he would inform the gentleman from Pennsylvania why it was that this question was pressed. No one doubted—the secretary of the treasury did not doubt whether the notes of this bank were receivable. He himself asked the secretary of the treasury what notes were receivable in payment for public land, and the secretary could not tell him, but referred him to the receivers of the public money. When it was not pretended that the notes of this bank were a legal tender, what object was there in saying, by this act, that they are not a legal tender? He would tell the gentleman what the object was. It was to array the government on the side of one set of banks against another bank or set of banks. The whole of this war against the bank of the United States was a contest between one set of bankers and another set.]

One o'clock having arrived, the house took up the special order of the day, the naval service bill, and Mr. Bell resumed his remarks, and went into a general examination of the past and present principles of the party in power, with a view to show that abusive expenditures and dangerous practices had increased since the present administration came into power.

And before he had concluded, the house adjourned.

Wednesday, March 23. The early part of the day was occupied upon the motion made, on the preceding day, to discharge the committee of the whole from the consideration of the bill to repeal the 14th section of the act of April 10, 1816, "to incorporate the subscribers to the bank of the United States;" which motion, after some proceedings, of which an account will be hereafter given, was carried (by the aid of the previous question.) So that bill is now on the table of the house.

The following business occupied the residue of the day's sitting:

The house, in committee of the whole on the state of the union, resumed the consideration of the bill making appropriations for the naval service of the United States for the year 1836.

The question being on the motion of Mr. Bell to strike out the following clause:

"For improvement and necessary repairs of the navy yard at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, sixty-seven thousand dollars."

Mr. Bell resumed his remarks on the subject, and gave his reasons, at length, for the belief that the friends of the administration did not actually expect a war with France, and maintained that, if they did, they were themselves chargeable with having grossly neglected the defences of the country. He reviewed the proceedings of the government and of the house during the last session, to show that no preparations for a war were attempted to be made, up to the time when the three million appropriation was proposed, on the very last night of the session; and further, that every proposition made for increasing the appropriations for particular points were steadily resisted and defeated by the friends of the administration. The causes of the loss of the fortification bill on that night he examined and explained, at great length. The main cause of the difficulty was, as he maintained, an anxious desire, on the part of the majority of the house, to hold the senate and particularly a distinguished senator, responsible for the loss of the measure. For this purpose, he contended that it was wilfully, voluntarily, and by design, so managed by a party on this floor, in the interest of the vice president, as to lose both the extra appropriation for the defence of the country, and the fortification bill also.

Mr. Bell commented upon the use which had been made of this manoeuvre by the party, and appealed to every member from the south west to say whether the charge against the senate, founded upon the failure of this measure, was not one of the most potent, effective, and irresistible instruments used by the administration party in the presidential contest. Mr. Bell also passed in review many other topics connected with the course and policy of the present administration; and, after speaking about three hours, concluded by thanking the committee for the indulgence which they had extended to him during his protracted remarks.

Mr. Garland, of Va. obtained the floor, and the committee then rose, and the house adjourned.

Thursday, March 24. This day was expended in receiving reports and bills, and in considering the North Carolina contested election.

[In the course of the debate about the bank on Wednesday, Mr. Cambreleng requested the clerk might read a letter, which he handed in, from the cashier of one of the deposit banks in Boston, to the secretary of the treasury. It would be seen that the branch of the bank in Boston refused to redeem the bills of other branches, which were, consequently, at a discount, and were bought up to pay bonds due at the custom house. If this was the course on the Atlantic, he said it might easily be imagined what was the trouble in the interior; and if the rule of the Boston branch was to be generally adopted, and no branch would redeem bills except of their own issues, he would like to be informed where the bills of branches which were now discontinued, would be paid.]

The following is the letter referred to:
Copy of a letter from the cashier of the Commonwealth bank of Boston, to the secretary of the treasury, dated Boston, March 18, 1836.

SIR: Yours of the 14th instant is at hand. In answer to the last paragraph, viz: "I will thank you to inform me how, and in what case, the question can arise in your bank, as it has been presumed that the payments for duties have been, and will be, paid chiefly, if not entirely, by checks on your own, or other city banks."

Heretofore the branch bank in this city has redeemed the bills of the United States bank, drawn here by regular course of business, consequently making them equal to the city bank bills; being therefore no difference in value, the payments to government have been made generally in checks and bills of the city banks. But this branch of the United States bank now refused to redeem any bill, but of their own issue, and consequently every other city bank refuses to receive them. This depreciates in value all the United States bills issued elsewhere, and they must be negotiated by brokers, and purchased for the purpose of paying debts due to the government. The rate of exchange will probably cause them to be remitted from one city to another, when money is scarce, and to be placed in the hands of the bond payers, to whom they will be equal to specie, although payable at a distant part of the country, and for all other purposes of less value. It was to guard, if possible, against this probable contingency, that I addressed the department. Respectfully,

CHARLES HOOD, cashier.]

REMARKS OF MR. WEBSTER,

On the question upon a motion not to receive an abolition memorial, March 1.

Mr. Webster expressed shortly his judgment as to the proper course to be taken with these petitions. He thought they ought to be received, referred and considered. That was what was usually done with petitions on other subjects, and what had been uniformly done, heretofore, with petitions on this subject also.

Those who believed they had an undoubted right to petition, and that congress had undoubted constitutional authority over the subjects to which their petitions related, would not be satisfied with a refusal to receive the petitions, nor with a formal rejection of them, followed by an immediate vote rejecting their prayer.

In parliamentary forms there was some difference between these two modes of proceeding, but it would be considered as little else than a difference in mere form. He thought the question must, at some time, be met, considered and discussed. In this matter, as in others, congress must stand on its reasons. It was in vain to attempt to shut the door against petitions and expect in that way to avoid discussion. On the presentment of the first of these petitions, he had been of opinion that it ought to be referred to the proper committee. He was of that opinion still. The subject could not be stifled. It must be discussed, and he wished it should be discussed calmly, dispassionately and fully, in all its branches, and all its bearings. To reject the prayer of a petition at once, without reference or consideration, was not respectful; and in this case nothing could be possibly gained by going out of the usual course of respectful consideration.

NEW YORK SESSIONS.

MARCH 16, 1836.

Before the recorder and aldermen Barnes and Lovett.

TRIAL OF THE RIOTERS. Edward Hallahan, John Sweeney, John Dougherty, John Hogan, James Edgar, John Gilmore, John Peet, Edward O'Brien, and John Lyon, stevedores and shoremens, were put upon their trial for a riot committed on the 23d day of February last, in South street, between Maiden lane and Fletcher street. The evidence established clearly the facts of the rioters proceedings as detailed at the time in our paper, and the participation of all the prisoners in them, and the jury found them all guilty, recommending John Peet to the mercy of the court.

Assault on Mr. Brink. Edward Hallahan, one of the above, was then tried for an assault and battery, with intent to kill Dennis Brink, police officer, by striking him over the head with a heavy pipe stave, on the 23d of February last, while endeavoring to suppress a riot of the stevedores and shoremens. The evidence proved that Mr. Brink had arrested one of the ring-leaders of the mob on the wharf, near the ship United States, and was conducting him along the wharf to South street, when he was surrounded by a crowd of the rioters, about fifty of whom seized pipe staves, a pile of which laid on the pier, and the prisoner, with a heavy white oak pipe stave, which he wielded with both hands, struck him over the head and felled him to the earth. The blow came with such force as to cut entirely through the hat and the flesh to the frontal bone of the head, and rendered Mr. Brink insensible for several hours, until after his wound was dressed and he conveyed home in a sleigh, and for a time his life was considered in danger.

The prisoner acknowledged the striking, but said that Mr. Brink first struck him with a cane, which was disproved by the officer and two or three other witnesses, and the jury found the accused guilty as charged. (The punishment is not less than two nor more than ten years in the state prison.)

Mackin, Roberts, Harrington and Somerindyke, charged on several indictments with committing riots in the Bowery on the 3d of March, and with an assault and battery on David Norris, were arraigned for trial, but on motion of their counsel, the trials were postponed to the next term. Courier.

MARYLAND—THE "INDEMNITY" BILL.

From the Baltimore Chronicle, of the 23d inst.

At a late hour, last night, we received the annexed letter from Annapolis, announcing the important fact, that the indemnity bill has passed both houses of the legislature and is now a law.

Annapolis, March 22, 1836—10 minutes to 2 o'clock.

I hasten to communicate to you the intelligence that the "indemnity bill" has just this moment passed the house of delegates by a clear majority of the whole house. Affirmative 42, negative 28—majority of 14.

The bill passed without amendment, as you published it in your paper. No doubt of its passage by the senate.

P. S. I open the letter to say that the bill was immediately sent to the senate and was read a first and second and third time by special order, and unanimously passed. It is now a law.

The following was the vote upon the question:

HOUSE OF DELEGATES.

YEAS—Messrs. Gantt, speaker, Heard, Fowler, Donkinson, Carroll, of St. Mary's, Islehart, Mercer, Kent, Weems, Merrick, Carpenter, Dulany, Winder, Hamblenton, Dudley, Bruff, Mullikin, Jones, Dennis, Ford, Bayly, Townsend, Pratt, Bryan, Brewer, Duckett, Hemsley, Spence, Whitelock, Hearn, Gilles, Willis, Annan, Davall, Shriver, Gough, Carter, Turner, Burchenal, Hardestie, Wharton, McMahon—42.

NAYS—Messrs. Primrose, Kirby, of Kent, Miller, Hood, Waites, Durke, Ely, Brown, Carroll, of Balt. co. Long, Teackle, McCullough, Nowland, Henderson, Palmer, Kirby, of Queen Anne, Boyd, Sutton, Nelson, Richardson, McLean, Newcomer, Brookhart, Fiery, Beam, Matthews, Berry, Frantz—28.

SENATE.

YEAS—Messrs. Hughlett, president, Claude, Mayer, Montgomery, Osborne, Pignan, Sappington, Wilson, Wootton—9.

NAYS—None. Mr. Morris excused from voting.

The indemnity bill is to compensate the owners of property destroyed by the mobs in this city in August last—the amount of which will be about 150,000 dollars—and the means are these: the state holds the receipts from the auction duties, (collected in Baltimore); but, so holding, has heretofore appropriated, to the use of the city, a large proportion of the proceeds thereof, for the purpose of deepening and preserving the harbor of the city; and it is out of this appropriation that the "indemnity" is to be paid. It is, therefore, virtually an additional tax on the tax payers of Baltimore, until the amount of the "indemnity" is satisfied.—But the auction duties may be secured to the city in perpetuity, by paying the "indemnity" within two years.

LAW OF MARYLAND.

The following bill has passed both houses of the legislature, and is, therefore, the law of the state:

AN ACT RELATING TO RIOTS.

Sec. 1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of Maryland, that from and after the passage of this act, if in any county or incorporated town or city of this state, any church, chapel or convent, any dwelling house, any house used or designated by any person or any body politic or corporate as a place for the transaction of business, or deposit of property, any ship, ship yards or lumber yard, any barn, stable, or other out house, or any articles of personal property, shall be injured or destroyed, or if any property therein or thereon shall be taken away, injured or destroyed by any riotous or tumultuous assemblage of people, the full amount of the damage so done shall be recoverable by the sufferer or sufferers by suit at law against the county, town or city, within whose jurisdiction such riots or tumult occurred, provided, however, that no such liability shall be incurred by such county, incorporated town, or city, unless the authorities thereof, shall have had good reason to believe that such riot or tumultuous assemblage was about to take place, or having taken place should have had notice of the same in time to prevent the said injury or destruction either by their own police, or with the aid of the citizens of such county, town or city, it being the intention of this act, that no such liability, shall be devolved on such county, town or city, unless the authorities thereof having notice, have also the ability of themselves, or with their own citizens, to prevent said injury—provided further, that in no case shall indemnity be received, where it shall be satisfactorily proved that the civil authorities, and citizens of said county, town or city, when called on by the civil authorities thereof, have used all reasonable diligence, and all the powers entrusted to them for the prevention or suppression of such riots or unlawful assemblages.

Sec. 2. And be it enacted, that in any suit instituted under this act, the plaintiff or plaintiffs may declare generally and give the special matter in evidence.

CONSTITUTION OF ARKANSAS.

Arkansas being about to become a state, has already furnished herself with a constitution. We find the following synopsis of its contents in the New York Times:

"Every free white male citizen of the United States, who shall have been a citizen of the state for six months, shall be deemed a qualified elector. Members of the house of representatives are to be elected for two years, members of the senate for four. The general assembly shall meet every two years. All general elections are to be viva voce. In the prosecution of slaves for any crime, they shall have an impartial trial by jury. Any slave convicted of a capital offence, shall suffer the same degree of punishment as would be inflicted on a free white person, and no other, and courts of justice before whom slaves shall be tried, shall assign them counsel for their defence. The senate shall never consist of less than seventeen, nor more than thirty-three members. The house of representatives shall consist of not less than fifty-four, nor more than one hundred representatives. The governor is to hold his office for four years, but shall not be eligible for more than eight years in any period of twelve years. The judicial power is vested in a supreme court, circuit courts, county courts, and justices of the peace. The supreme court is to consist of three judges. Its jurisdiction shall be appellate. The official term of the judges of the supreme court is eight years, of the judges of the circuit court, four years. The judges of the supreme and circuit courts are to be chosen by the general assembly. Justices of the peace are to be elected by the people, and their term of office is two years—judges of the county courts are to be chosen by justices of the peace. The legislature shall have no power to emancipate slaves without the consent of their owners. No lotteries shall be established, nor the sale of lottery tickets allowed. The person of a debtor shall not be imprisoned except where there is a strong presumption of fraud. The legislature may establish one state bank with branches, and one banking institution to promote the agricultural interests of the country."

PENNSYLVANIA—SINKING FUND.

In the house of representatives of this state on Tuesday, Mr. J. Krause reported the following bill:

AN ACT TO ESTABLISH A SINKING FUND.

Section 1. Be it enacted, &c. That the annual sum of three hundred and sixty thousand dollars is hereby appropriated yearly to constitute a sinking fund for the extinguishment of the public debt of this commonwealth, which sum is placed under the direction of the state treasurer and auditor general, who are hereby constituted commissioners of the said sinking fund, and the said sum shall be paid out of any moneys which may remain in the treasury after the payment of the interest on the said debt, and satisfying the purposes for which appropriations shall have been made by law; and together with any other moneys which may be hereafter specifically appropriated to, or vested in said sinking fund, shall be applied by the said commissioners to the purchase or reimbursement of the principal of the said debt, and payment of the necessary charges thereon; and the said commissioners shall, with the approbation of the governor, cause the said purchase or reimbursement, to be made in such manner and under such regulations, as shall appear to them best calculated to fulfil the intention of this act, and do equal justice to the public creditors.

Section 2. The revenues of this commonwealth, which may hereafter accrue, and shall not have been otherwise appropriated or pledged, shall become vested in the sinking fund; and whenever in addition thereto there shall be in any year a surplus of money in the treasury, above the sums required for the service of such year, the payment of which to the sinking fund, will yet leave in the treasury a balance of then such surplus shall become vested in the sinking fund, to be paid at such times as the situation of the treasury and the demands upon it will best permit, to be applied as aforesaid, and the commissioners of the sinking fund shall report to the legislature at the commencement of each session, an account of all the purchases made and public debt redeemed, in pursuance of this act.

Section 3. If the present or any future session of congress shall make a distribution of the surplus revenue among the several states, the amount which the state of Pennsylvania would in that event be entitled to, be, and the same is hereby vested in said fund, to be applied as is directed by this act.

THE TENNESSEE RESOLUTIONS, WHICH PASSED AGAINST THE PROTEST OF TWENTY MEMBERS OF THE LEGISLATURE.

"Resolved, That it is the opinion of the general assembly of the state of Tennessee, that the resolution of censure introduced by Mr. Clay, in the senate of the United States, and adopted by that body on the 28th March, 1834, in the following words: 'Resolved, That the president in the late executive proceedings in relation to the public revenue, has assumed upon himself authority and power not conferred by the constitution and laws, but in derogation of both,' was not unconstitutional, but within the legitimate exercise of their powers, and the freedom of debate.

"Resolved, That it is the opinion of this general assembly, that it is not constitutional to expunge the said resolutions from the journals of the senate, but said process would violate that provision of the constitution of the U. States which requires that each house shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, except such parts as may in their judgment require secrecy, and the yeas and nays of the members of either house on any question, shall, at the desire of one-fifth of those present, be entered on the journal."

"Resolved, That it is the opinion of this general assembly, that expunging means blotting out and destruction of the record, and that to instruct to draw black lines, is but a subterfuge, and unbecoming the consideration of the senate.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this general assembly, that the said resolution of censure passed upon the president of the United States, was wrong, uncalled for, and unjustifiable, and that we have full confidence, that our senator Hugh L. White, will use every constitutional effort in his power to cause said resolution of censure to be rescinded, and do that justice to the president, which has been denied him, and that it is wholly unnecessary to instruct him to do that, which he has always said he was willing to do."

VIRGINIA RESOLUTIONS OF 1834.

The legislature of that period, says the "Richmond Whig," passed the following resolutions by a majority exceeding two to one.

"1. Resolved by the general assembly, That the recent act of the president of the United States, exerting a control over the public deposits, by causing them to be withheld and withdrawn, on his own responsibility, from the United States bank, in which they had been ordered to be placed by the act of congress chartering the said bank, is, in the judgment of the general assembly, a dangerous and alarming assumption of power by that officer which cannot be too strongly condemned.

"2. Resolved, That while the general assembly will ever be ready to sustain the president in the exercise of all such powers as the constitution has confided to him, they, nevertheless, cannot but regard with apprehension and distrust the disposition to extend his official authority beyond its just and proper limits, which he has so clearly manifested in his recent interference with the treasury department of the federal government in the exercise of a sound discretion which congress has confided to the head of that department alone.

"3. Resolved, That our senators in congress be instructed, and our representatives requested, to use their best exertions to procure the adoption, by congress, of proper measures for restoring the public moneys to the bank of the United States, or, at least, for causing them to be deposited therein for the future, according to the direction and stipulation of the act of congress chartering the said bank, if at the time of their action on the subject, said bank be, in their opinion, a safe depository of the public treasure.

"4. Resolved, That the general assembly cannot recognise as constitutional the power which has been claimed by congress to establish a United States bank, because, in the opinion of the general assembly, as they have heretofore solemnly declared, that power is not given to congress by the constitution of the United States.

"5. Resolved, That the general assembly do not intend by the declaration of their opinion in regard to the unconstitutionality of the bank of the United States, to qualify, or in any manner to impair, the force of their disapprobation of the withholding and withdrawing of the public deposits.

"6. Resolved, That the governor of the commonwealth be requested to transmit a copy of these resolutions to each of our senators and representatives in the congress of the United States."

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

The special joint committee, appointed to investigate the doings of any or all the banks in the commonwealth, having considered the instructions given them by the legislature, on the recommendation of their first report, as to what further legislation may be necessary on the subject matter thereof, respectfully

REPORT:

That on mature consideration of the facts, developed by their investigation your committee are of opinion, that sundry banks have committed gross, and palpable violations of the laws. It will not be denied, that it is of vital importance, both to the government, and to the people, that the supremacy of the laws should be maintained. If it be so important, as between the government and its private citizens, how immensely important is it, as between the government and its corporations, the creatures of its bounty? Misconstructions of doubtful provisions, and violations of loosely defined enactments, are not only pardonable, but in some instances justifiable. The deliberate infraction, however, of a law clearly expressed, and consistent in its provisions, can never be justified by a plea of ignorance, or misapprehension of its purport. A statute, that is so plain in its provisions, as to be understood and construed alike, by the mass of men, can never be made to palliate its own violations by those whose interest it may be, to misconstrue or misapprehend it. The laws relating to banks and banking, we apprehend are of this character. Their provisions are so explicit, and the language in which they are clothed, so precise and definite, that it is almost impossible for ingenious minds to differ, as to their true intent and meaning. We are constrained to believe, therefore, that if they have been violated, the violation has been deliberate and intentional.

That the law against usury has been violated by some of the banks, we cannot doubt, and we can as little doubt, that the violation was committed with full knowledge of the laws. The circumstances, proved in the case, force this conclusion upon us. Why was all this machinery employed to effect an object, that could be much more easily attained in the ordinary way, unless the agents of its introduction were satisfied, that the object aimed at was illegal? Why pursue this circuitous course to obtain more than six per cent. interest, unless they knew such interest to be unlawful? More than six per cent. is admitted by some of the banks to have been taken. Whether it were obtained by direct or indirect means, by premiums on checks paid for notes discounted, or by a greater actual discount than six per cent. can make no difference, as the law equally prohibits both means of obtaining it. This resort, then, to these expedients, novel and ingenious as they are, satisfies your committee beyond a reasonable doubt, that the law was understood, and that these expedients were adopted for the very purpose of evading its well known provisions. Being thus persuaded, we can find no sufficient justification for the delinquents, nor can we discover any good reason, (and we have anxiously sought for it), why the government should, again, forbear to enforce the sanctions of its violated laws.

The best good of corporations, especially of banking institutions, as well as the public weal, seems to require at the hands of the government, an admonitory example. A war is already begun, and vigorously carried on against corporations. This hostility may have been occasioned, in part, by their usurpation of powers and privileges, not delegated to them. It is for their good, therefore, that they should be strictly restrained and circumscribed by the limits of their charters. And how can the government command the respect of its citizens unless it respect itself and meet with just and reasonable severities, wanton infractions of its laws? The committee are of opinion, that the public good, and the best interests of corporations, and the common sentiment, concur in imposing upon them, the unpleasant duty of recommending to the legislature, further prosecution of certain banks.

We are not disposed to be vindictive, nor do we believe that the public weal would be promoted, by pursuing all the banks, which may have, more or less, transgressed. The government must maintain its dignity, the people demand a redress of grievances, corporations require reform. These objects can be as well accomplished, in the opinion of your committee, by selecting, for further investigation, and for final remedies, some few prominent cases, as by pursuing the whole, and graduating penalties to the degrees of their several transgressions.

Having arrived at these conclusions, with great unanimity, your committee present the four following named banks, as proper subjects for further proceedings. Our great difficulty in making this selection, has been, not to determine what banks should be further prosecuted, but, chiefly, in deciding what ones should be left unprosecuted. We regard several of them not reported, as deserving especial censure, and unless there should be immediate and thorough reform, in all objectionable practices, it may hereafter be expedient to introduce them to the more particular notice of the legislature.

Your committee present, as worthy of further proceedings, the New England bank, the City bank, and the State bank, in Boston, and the People's bank, in Roxbury; and do respectfully recommend to the legislature, that they be severally proceeded against, according to the provisions of the 17th sec. 96th chapter of the statutes of the year 1823.

All which is respectfully submitted. By order of the committee,
M. LAWRENCE.

THE DEPOSITE BANKS.

The report of the state of the deposite banks, being made on the 16th inst.

Mr. Webster, in support of his motion to print 3,000 extra copies of the statement of the affairs of the deposite banks, said in the senate—

In making this motion Mr. Webster, called the attention of the senate to the document from the treasury, showing the state of the deposite banks at the latest dates. He quoted from the tabular statement some of the leading facts. The immediate liabilities of the banks amounted, it appeared, to nearly seventy-two millions of dollars, viz: the public depositories, $30,678,379 91; the private depositories, $15,043,033 64; the bills in circulation, $26,243,688 36.

The amount of specie held by these banks, it further appeared, was $10,198,659 24, that is to say, there is less than one dollar specie for six dollars debt; and there is due to the government by those banks more than three times the amount of all the specie.

There are other items (said he) which swell the amounts on each side, such as debts due to banks, and debts due from banks. But these are only equalizing quantities, and of no moment in the view I am taking of the question.

Among the means of these deposite banks I see an item of "other investments" of no less amount than $8,777,928 79. What is meant by these "other investments," I am not informed. I wish for light. I have my suspicions, but I have no proofs, sir, look at the reported state of the Farmers and Mechanics' bank of Michigan, the last in the list. The capital of that bank is only $150,000. Its portion of the public depositories is no less a sum than 784,764 75. Now, sir, where is the money. It is not in specie in the bank itself, for its specie is only $51,011 95—all its discounts, loans, &c. are only $500,000 or thereabouts; where is the money. Why we see where it is; it is included on the item due from banks 678,766 37. What banks have got this? On what terms do they take it? Do they give interest for it? Is it in the deposite banks in the great cities? and does this make a part of the other liabilities of these deposite banks in the cities? Now, this is one question: what are these other liabilities? But, as to these "other investments," I say again I wish to know what they are. Besides real estate, loans, discount and exchange, I beg to know what other investments banks usually make.

In my opinion, sir, the present system now begins to develop itself. We see what a complication of private and pecuniary interests have thus wound themselves around our finances. While the present state of things continues, or as it goes on, there will be no lack of ardor in opposing the land bill or any other proposition for distributing or effectually using the public money while this state of things exists, or as it goes on.

We have certainly arrived at a very extraordinary crisis: a crisis which we must not trifle with. The accumulation of revenue must be prevented. Every wise politician will set that down as a cardinal maxim. How can it be prevented. Fortifications will not do it. This I am perfectly persuaded of. I shall vote for every part and parcel of the fortification bill, reported by the military committee. And yet I am sure that, if that bill should pass into a law, it would not absorb the revenue, or sufficiently diminish its amount. Internal improvements cannot absorb it: these useful channels are blocked up by vetoes.

How, then, is this revenue to be disposed of? I put this question seriously to all those who are inclined to oppose the land bill now before the senate.

Sir, look to the future, and see what will be the state of things next autumn. The accumulation of revenue may then probably be near fifty millions; an amount equal, perhaps, to the whole amount of specie, in the country. What a state of things is that! Every dollar in the country the property of government!

Again sir; are gentlemen satisfied with the present condition of the public money in regard to its safety? Is that condition safe, commendable and proper? The member from South Carolina has brought in a bill to regulate these deposite banks. I hope he will call it up, that we may at least have an opportunity of showing for ourselves what we think the exigency requires.

THE "EXPUNGING" RESOLUTION.

On Wednesday, the 16th, Mr. Benton offered to the senate, the following preamble and resolution—

Whereas, on the twenty-sixth of December, 1833, the following resolve was moved in the senate:

"Resolved, By dismissing the late secretary of the treasury, because he would not, contrary to his own sense of duty, remove the money of the United States in deposite with the bank of the United States and its branches, in conformity with the president's opinion, and by appointing his successor to effect such removal, which has been done, the president has assumed an exercise of power over the treasury of the United States not granted him by the constitution and laws and dangerous to the liberties of the people."

Which proposed resolve was altered and changed by the mover thereof on the 28th March, 1834, so as to read as follows:

"Resolved, That in taking upon himself the responsibility of removing the deposite of the public money from the bank of the United States, the president of the United States has assumed an exercise of power over the treasury of the United States, not granted to him by the constitution and laws, and dangerous to the liberties of the people."

Which resolve, so changed and modified by the mover thereof, on the same day and year last mentioned, was further altered so as to read in these words:

"Resolved, That the president, in the late executive proceedings in relation to the revenue, has assumed upon himself authority and power not conferred by the constitution and laws, but in derogation of both."

In which last mentioned form the said resolve, on the same day and year last mentioned, was adopted by the senate, and became the act and judgment of that body; and, as such, now remains upon the journal thereof.

And whereas the said resolve was irregularly, illegally, and unconstitutionally adopted by the senate in violation of the rights of defence which belong to every citizen, and in subversion of the fundamental principles of law and justice; because president Jackson was thereby adjudged and pronounced to be guilty of an impeachable offence, and a stigma placed upon him as a violator of his oath of office, and of the laws and the constitution which he was sworn to preserve, protect and defend, without going through the forms of an impeachment, and without allowing to him the benefits of a trial, or the means of defence:

And whereas, the said resolve, in all its various shapes and forms, was unfounded and erroneous in point of fact, and therefore unjust and unrighteous, as well as irregular and unconstitutional, because the said president Jackson, neither in the act of dismissing Mr. Duane, nor in the appointment of Mr. Taney, as specified in the first form of the resolve, nor in taking upon himself the responsibility of removing the public depositories, as specified in the second form of the same resolve, nor in any act which was then or can now be specified under the vague and ambiguous terms of the general denunciation contained in the third and last form of the resolve, did do, or commit, any act in violation or in derogation of the laws and constitution, or dangerous to the liberties of the people:

And whereas, the said resolve, as adopted, was uncertain and ambiguous, containing nothing but a loose and floating charge for derogating from the laws and constitution, and assuming ungranted power and authority in the late executive proceedings in relation to the public revenue, without specifying what part of the executive proceedings, or what part of the public revenue was intended to be referred to, or what parts of the laws and constitution were supposed to have been infringed, or in what part of the union, or at what period of his administration, these late proceedings were supposed to have taken place, thereby putting each senator at liberty to vote in favor of the resolve upon a separate and secret reason of his own, and leaving the ground of the senate's judgment to be guessed at by the public, and to be differently and diversely interpreted by individual senators, according to the private and particular understanding of each, contrary to all the ends of justice, and to all the forms of legal or judicial proceedings—to the great prejudice of the accused, who could not know against what to defend himself, and to the loss of senatorial responsibility, by shielding senators from public accountability for making up a judgment upon grounds which the public cannot know, and which, if known, might prove to be insufficient in law or unfounded in fact:

And whereas, the specifications contained in the first and second forms of the resolve having been objected to in debate, and shown to be insufficient to sustain the charges they were adduced to support, and it being well believed that no majority could be obtained to vote for the said specifications, and the same having been actually withdrawn by the mover, in the face of the whole senate, in consequence of such objection and belief; and before any vote was taken thereupon, the said specifications could not afterwards be admitted by any rule of parliamentary practice or by any principle of legal implication, secret intendment, or mental reservation, to remain and continue a part of the written and public resolve from which they were withdrawn; and if could be so admitted, they would not be sufficient to sustain the charges therein contained:

And whereas, the senate being the constitutional tribunal for the trial of the president, when charged by the house of representatives with offences against the laws and constitution, the adoption of the said resolve before any impeachment preferred by the house, was a breach of the privileges of the house, a violation of the constitution, a subversion of justice, a prejudication of a question which might legally come before the senate, and a disqualification of that body to perform its constitutional duty with fairness and impartiality, if the president should thereafter be regularly impeached by the house of representatives for the same offence:

And whereas, the temperate, respectful and argumentative defence and protest of the president against the aforesaid proceedings by the senate, was rejected and repulsed by that body, and was voted to be a breach of its privileges, and was not permitted to be entered on its journal or printed among its documents, while all memorials, petitions, resolves and remonstrances against the president, however violent or unfounded, and calculated to inflame the people against him, were duly and honorably received, encomiastically commented upon in speeches read at the table, ordered to be printed with the long list of names attached, referred to the finance committee for consideration, filed away among the public archives, and now constitute a part of the public documents of the senate, to be handed down to the latest posterity:

And whereas, the said resolve was introduced, debated and adopted at a time and under circumstances which had the effect of co-operating with the bank of the United States, in the parhical attempt which that institution was then making to janic and pressure in the country, to destroy the confidence of the people in president Jackson, to paralyze his administration, to govern the election, to bankrupt state banks, ruin their currency, fill the whole union with terror and distress, and thereby to extort from the suffering and the alarm of the people the restoration of the deposits, and the renewal of its charter:

And whereas, the said resolve is of evil example and dangerous precedent, and should never have been received, debated or adopted by the senate, or admitted to entry upon its journal: wherefore,

Resolved, That the said resolve be expunged from the journals, and, for that purpose, that the secretary of the senate, at such time as the senate shall appoint, shall bring the manuscript journal of the session of 1833-4 into the senate, and in the presence of the senate, draw black lines round the said resolve, and write across the face thereof, in strong letters, the following words: "Expunged, by order of the senate, this day of —, in the year of our Lord 1836."

LETTER FROM THE WAR DEPARTMENT,

In answer to a resolution of the senate, calling for information concerning the Indian tribes, &c.

War department, March 8, 1836.

SIR: In conformity with a resolution of the senate, of the 2d ultimo, I have the honor, herewith, to transmit a tabular statement, giving the information called for respecting the number and situation of the Indians upon the frontiers of the United States, so far as this department can furnish it, and a report from major general Macomb, containing a plan for an increase of the numerical strength of the army accompanied by tables, showing the positions now occupied by it, the number to which it is proposed to increase it, its distribution, should such an increase take place, and the additional expense which will attend the measure.

It is, of course, impracticable to furnish any thing like accurate information concerning the number of Indians. All that can be expected is such an approximation towards the truth as our means of communication with them will permit. The population of those tribes which are in contact with our settlements, and more particularly of those to whom annuities are paid, may be estimated with considerable probability. But all computations of this nature, respecting the remote and wandering tribes, must be received with much doubt.

It appears, as a general result, from this statement, that about 31,000 Indians have removed from the eastern to the western side of the Mississippi river, and that about 72,000 yet remain to be removed. With a majority of the latter, treaty stipulations already exist for their removal, or for such arrangements as will necessarily lead to it. And there is little doubt but that nearly all of them will, within a few years, quit their present residences, and withdraw to the country west of Missouri and Arkansas. I would remark here, that this statement shows an increase of about 10,000 over the tables heretofore prepared at this department upon this subject. This increase has been occasioned by a census recently taken of the eastern Cherokees, and which shows the population of those Indians to be about 18,000. It is estimated that the indigenous tribes of the region between the Mississippi and the Rocky Mountains amount to about 150,000. These, added to the emigrants already removed, will make upwards of 181,000; and when all the tribes are removed, there will be an aggregate Indian population in that country of more than 250,000. This, it will be observed, is independent of the Indians upon the peninsula of Michigan, upon the shores of Lake Huron and Lake Superior, upon the northern coast of Lake Michigan, and of the various bands of the great Chippewa family, occupying the regions south of Lake Superior, and upon the heads of the Mississippi. Much of this country is of such a character that we cannot look forward to any reasonable time within which all these Indians will be required to emigrate. Those, however, in the peninsula of Michigan, will, no doubt, remove within a few years, and will still further increase the aggregate of the Indian population in the west.

It is difficult, from the mode of life, and consequent dispersed condition of the Indians, to state their positions accurately, with relation to the inland frontier of the United States, extending from Arkansas to Maine. Beginning, however, at Red River, it will be found that almost all this force is in contact, or may be in communication with the western and north western frontier of the United States. The Indians are very sparsely scattered along the shore of Lake Superior and towards the sources of the Mississippi. The Chippewas and Sioux, extensive families, and separated into many bands, divide those regions among them. These Indians are brought into contact upon the Mississippi, about the falls of St. Anthony. And as feuds have existed between them for ages, they frequently send war parties against each other, and, by this means, outrages have been committed upon our citizens. This state of things renders Fort Snelling, at the mouth of the St. Peter's an important point.

It will be seen, by the tabular statement, that the Indians in the state of New York are supposed to be about 4,000. But this department has not the means of ascertaining, with any precision, the number upon the north eastern frontier in the state of Maine. They have generally been computed in the statistical tables at about 1,000.

The statements herewith furnished embrace all the tribes who now occupy, or who it is supposed will occupy, the country west of the Mississippi, and extending to the Rocky Mountains. It may be safely estimated that this amount of Indian population can furnish 15,000 warriors, who may be considered so nearly in contact with our settlements, as to render them at all times dangerous neighbors, unless kept in check by a proper disposition of our military force; and it is probable that double that number could be supplied, if any circumstances should occasion a general war in that region, in which the Indians could be brought to unite. Such a result, however, is altogether improbable, as many of these tribes are hereditary enemies, and are in a constant state of hostilities with one another. And, from the dispersed condition of the Indians, as well as from their habits and the nature of their institutions, a general coalition is not to be anticipated. Nor, indeed, if it existed, could such a force be collected and brought to act together. Still, however, it is obvious that even now there is upon our western frontier a large force, which has been augmented, and is yet augmenting, by the action of the government, and upon whose peaceable or friendly disposition no reliance can be placed. And the scenes which are now going on in Florida, and those which have frequently taken place elsewhere, show that the Indians are totally ignorant of their own relative strength and that of the United States, or that, in a moment of impulse, they are totally indifferent to it. A just regard to the tranquility of an important section of the union requires that measures should be permanently adopted for preventing a renewal of those predatory incursions which have occasioned so much loss of life and property.

In further obedience to the resolution of the senate, I have the honor to report that I consider the "present military force of the United States" sufficient "to garrison the fortifications of the seaboard, and at the same time give protection to the inhabitants residing in the states and territories bordering on the Indian frontier."

The aggregate number of the non-commissioned officers, musicians and privates of the army, according to the existing laws, is 6,301. This is exclusive of the men engaged in the ordnance service, who are principally artificers, and are employed in duties relating to the custody, preservation, repairs, &c. of the public arms. Owing, however, to sickness, to occasional absence, and to the time lost in recruiting and in marching to join their respective corps, as well as to other causes, the actual disposable strength does not average more than 5,250. This is now organized into one regiment of dragoons, four regiments of artillery, and seven regiments of infantry, occupying fifty-three stations, extending along the whole frontier of the U. States, inland and Atlantic. If equally divided, the force actually in service would allow to each post a little less than one hundred effective men.

Extensive and permanent fortifications have been constructed upon the seaboard, and it seems to be generally conceded that our most important points of communication with the ocean should be gradually rendered secure by similar works against the advance of an enemy. These forts, as they are finished, should be occupied by troops not only to prevent such insults and injuries as large commercial places are exposed to, whose approaches are not sufficiently guarded, but also to keep the works in a proper state of preservation. These duties, it is believed, will require the artillery force proposed to be maintained. Experience has shown that we are perpetually liable to occurrences which demand the concentration and movement of the troops. Whenever these happen, the positions occupied must remain defenceless, unless a greater force is raised. This is now the state of things along almost all our Atlantic border.

With respect to the inland frontier, circumstances of a still more imperative character require an augmentation of the army. Events have shown that our force in that quarter is not sufficient to keep the Indians in check. Disturbances are continually occurring at comparatively short intervals, some of which terminate merely by alarming and agitating the country, while others lead to hostilities, more or less extensive. On these occasions, the regular troops are collected from great distances, and a militia force is usually called out. Heavy expenditures are the necessary consequences, besides the loss of property and derangement of business in the section of country where these troubles exist. Instead of having a force at all times embodied, sufficient to overawe the Indians, or, if they commence hostilities, immediately to subdue them, much time is lost in the necessary arrangements, while the spirit of dissatisfaction is spreading, and the hostile force becomes thus greatly increased. Within the last nine years we have had four difficulties of this nature: one with the Winnebagoes, two with the Sacs and Foxes, and one with the Florida Indians; which altogether have occasioned great loss of property, great derangement of business, a heavy expenditure of money, and much inconvenience in those portions of country affected by these troubles, and which furnished the militia whose services were required to aid the regular troops in their operations. An augmentation of the army to a reasonable extent, if it did not prevent these occurrences altogether, would certainly render them less frequent, as well as less injurious and extensive. And this policy is not less humane than useful. It is far better, by the display of force, to render its actual employment unnecessary, than it is to be compelled to resort to it, with all the usual accompaniments of an Indian campaign.

The army is so constituted that a very considerable addition may be made to its rank and file, with but little increase in the expense of the officers. It is proposed to augment its numerical strength to 9,955; to leave the regiment of dragoons as it now is, and so to distribute the additional force as to make five regiments instead of four of artillery, and nine regiments instead of seven of infantry. A regiment of artillery now contains 497 non-commissioned officers, musicians and privates, divided into nine companies; and a regiment of infantry, 514 non-commissioned officers, musicians and privates, divided into ten companies. The plan submitted proposes to add 2,032 men to the artillery, and 1,622 to the infantry, and to divide the regiments of both arms into eight companies each, giving to each regiment of the former 804 non-commissioned officers, musicians and privates, and to each regiment of the latter 580 non-commissioned officers, musicians and privates. This organization into companies will have the advantage of uniformity, and it is believed will be found more advantageous to the service than the existing one. The whole artillery force now authorized by law is 1,988, and that of the infantry 3,598, which, with the addition proposed, will make the whole artillery force 4,020, and the whole infantry force 5,220; thus raising the legal establishment of the army to 9,955. These numbers, it will be observed, are exclusive of the commissioned officers. By authorising the president to require one of these regiments to do duty as riflemen, and one as light infantry, our military establishment would be rendered more complete, and in some situations more efficient; and this might be done without any addition to the expense of maintaining the troops.

The proposed augmentation of the non-commissioned officers, privates and musicians, may be so distributed as not to require any change in the number of the regiments, or in the grades of the officers, by simply adding a given number to each company. The only advantage, however, of this plan over the proposed one is, that it may be carried into effect at a little less expense. This consideration is always important, and when not counterbalanced by other circumstances, should be decisive. But I think that in this case the difference in the expenditure is not sufficient to outweigh the other advantages which are presented by the project herewith submitted.

It is proposed to reduce the number of second lieutenants from 142 to 112, making a diminution in that grade of thirty; and at the same time to add twenty-five other officers, making an actual reduction of five in the existing establishment. But as those who are added will be of higher grades, this arrangement will occasion an increase in the annual expense of $8,573 as is shown by one of the accompanying tables. But it will give more efficiency by the increased rank, authority and experience of the officers, while at the same time it will probably be found that the number of men proposed to be added to each regiment will be sufficiently great for the attention of all the officers. It will also prevent, in some degree, that dispersion of the regiments, which is very injurious to our service, as it materially impairs the personal superintendence of the field officers. These advantages will be greater as the sphere of command is removed to the more remote frontiers, where circumstances necessarily require higher responsibility and more experience.

All the information necessary to a full knowledge of the increased expense which will attend the addition herein proposed to the numerical strength of the army, will be found in the accompanying tables.

I beg leave to remark that the plan of organization above proposed proceeds upon the assumption that the whole force of the non-commissioned officers, musicians and privates of the army will be about ten thousand. That is the smallest number which, under present circumstances, the public interests will, in my judgment, allow. Should congress, however, think it proper to add to that number, then I would recommend that the infantry companies be placed upon the same establishment as the companies of artillery. This would render the organization uniform in all respects, and, from the casualties of the service, would not probably give more than two-thirds of the number for active field operations. Very respectfully your most obedient servant,

LEW. CASS.

Head quarters of the army, Washington, March 7, 1836.

The hon. Lewis Cass, secretary of war:

The undersigned, in conformity with the instructions of the secretary of war, to submit a project for augmenting the military establishment to ten thousand men, without increasing the number of officers, has, after fully considering the subject, come to the following conclusion:

*The number of Cherokees has been stated, in other communications made the present session, at 8,000; the above number is taken from a census recently received.

The present establishment consists of 4 regiments of artillery, of 9 companies each, each company of 55 men, making an aggregate in the 4 regiments, including the non-commissioned staff, of 1,988
7 regiments of infantry, of 10 companies each, each company of 51 men, making an aggregate, in the 7 regiments, including the non-commissioned staff, of 3,598
1 regiment of dragoons, aggregate 715

The organization of the regiments of artillery into nine companies is not convenient, nor do the four regiments furnish a sufficient number of companies for the seaboard. It is therefore proposed to add one regiment of artillery, and make each company to consist of 100 men, instead of 55, as now organized. This organization will give a force of 4,020 non-commissioned officers, musicians, artificers and privates, in the artillery, as will be seen by the accompanying paper marked A.

The organization of the infantry might also be improved, and the regiments rendered much more useful and efficient, by making each regiment to consist of eight companies instead of ten, and by adding two regiments, to be armed as light infantry or riflemen, to consist also of eight companies each, which can be done by simply adding two companies to the infantry, there being at present seven regiments of infantry on the establishment, consisting of ten companies each, which give an aggregate of seventy companies. By the addition of two companies, the required number of companies, to wit, seventy-two, will be obtained, to constitute nine regiments of eight companies each, and each company to consist of 72 non-commissioned officers and privates, making the whole of the infantry force 5,220 men, as will be seen by paper marked B.

The formation of regiments into eight companies is conformable to our established system of tactics, and is every way much more convenient for manœuvring than either a formation of nine or ten companies, as is now the case with our artillery and infantry. A uniform organization into eight, both for artillery and infantry, is preferable and more systematic than the irregular formations now existing in the regiments of those arms in our service, as shown above.

If this organization should be adopted, the military establishment would then consist of—

5 regiments of artillery of 8 companies each, or 40 companies 100 strong, giving a force, including 20 non-commissioned staff, of 4,020
9 regiments of infantry, 8 companies each, each company 72 men, making 72 companies, including 36 non-commissioned staff, giving a force of 5,220
1 regiment of dragoons 715

As the number of men in all the companies of infantry and artillery is considerably increased, an additional number of non-commissioned officers becomes indispensable. In lieu of the non-commissioned staff officer, heretofore denominated sergeant major of a regiment, it is proposed to substitute that of sub-adjutant, to have the rank pay, and emoluments of a cadet, with a suitable allowance of clothing, not exceeding the cost of that now allowed a sergeant major. To this office the sergeants may look as the reward of merit, and as the stepping-stone to promotion of lieutenant. It will give great encouragement to the non-commissioned officers of companies, as well as the rank and file, when they see before them a prospect of promotion to the rank of commissioned officer through the non-commissioned staff. For the same purpose, and with a view to facilitate and distribute more properly the company duties, it is proposed, in the organization, that the first sergeant of each company be styled sergeant major, with the pay and allowances as now provided, which are somewhat greater than those allowed to other sergeants. His duties to the company are analogous to those of an adjutant of a regiment, he having to attend, under the direction of the captain, to all the company details as it regards the duties of the non-commissioned officers and privates, and the making out of reports, &c. To each company there is also provided a quartermaster sergeant, an indispensable non-commissioned officer, whose duty it is, under the direction of the captain, to take charge of the camp equipage, spare arms, extra clothing, and other property belonging to the company, and keep the accounts of them, as well as to attend to the distribution of the rations, straw, wood, &c. and on the march to take charge of the company baggage: his pay to be the same as that of the other sergeants. In the French army these two non-commissioned officers are allowed to every company, under the title of sergeant major and fourrier. There is no service in which these officers are more wanted than in ours, because our troops are frequently separated from their baggage: in marching through the wilderness, where it is impossible to transport it, and consequently, obliged to be sent round to meet the troops, either by land or by water, when it is much exposed to be lost or damaged; and thus the troops arriving at the points where they may expect to meet their baggage, without these officers to take charge of it, will be often disappointed, and suffer for the want of essential comforts.

Although, according to the instructions of the secretary of war, the organization here proposed is limited to ten thousand men, and which may be considered as a minimum force for the purposes for which the army is intended, it is respectfully recommended that, in order to have the amount of force always effective, eighteen men be added to each company of infantry and artillery, which would increase the nominal force to something below twelve thousand men; but owing to the fact of the men being enlisted for only three years, the great distance the recruits have generally to march, and the time consumed in joining the regiments on the frontiers, and the necessity of keeping within the authorised numbers, it hardly can be expected that ten thousand men would ever be exceeded, should congress authorise twelve thousand men, as here recommended.

Upon a review of the fortifications which have been erected, and which are now in progress for the defence of the seacoast, it is found that there is a considerable deficiency of artilleryists to serve the guns, and to guard and preserve the forts, as well as the valuable property in them. It is therefore proposed, as above recommended, to augment the number of companies in the artillery from 36, as now authorised, to 40. These companies of artillery it is proposed to distribute along the seaboard, from Eastport, in Maine, to the delta of the Mississippi; and in order to show the proposed distribution, two tables are here annexed, marked C and D; that marked C shows how the existing thirty-six companies may be most advantageously disposed of; and that marked D, how it is proposed to distribute the forty companies. Also, a list of forts on the seacoast, prepared by the adjutant general, marked E.

The infantry force, with that of the regiment of dragoons, is best adapted to the defence of the frontiers, including the Gulf of Mexico. The present amount of infantry is not sufficient, in the opinion of the undersigned, to afford adequate protection to the inhabitants residing in the states and territories bordering on our Indian and other frontiers, and guarding the arsenals in the southern and western states.

If the project above recommended, of organizing the infantry, as exhibited in paper marked B, be adopted, making the infantry consist of nine regiments, instead of seven, it is proposed that they be distributed on the frontiers and on the Gulf of Mexico, as shown in paper marked F, which organization and distribution, it is believed, will be the most effectual for maintaining the discipline of the army, and affording protection to our extensive frontiers.

Paper marked G contains a summary of the expense of the present and proposed regiments of artillery and infantry.

Respectfully submitted, ALEX. MACOMB, major general, commanding-in-chief.

MARYLAND.

GREAT MEASURES PROPOSED.

Report of the committee of ways and means of the house of delegates of Maryland—made to the house March 9.

The committee of ways and means have the honor to report to the house of delegates, that they have carefully examined and considered the report of the treasurer of the Western Shore, and particularly the estimate of receipts and expenditures, and are assured by them of adequate supplies to meet the wants of the current fiscal year. Whether a large addition will not be made to the list, already formidable, of unproductive capital, and a large and increasing deficit of means to meet the engagements of the state, appal the eyes of our successors, must depend upon the wisdom and decision of the assembly now convened. Your committee, deeming it unnecessary to recapitulate or transpose what has been set forth with adequate reflections by the treasurer, proceed to spread before you the reflections and conclusions to which they have been irresistibly led, upon the latter immeasurably more important inquiry.

In approaching the consideration of the financial concerns of the state at the present session, the object towering above all others and compelling alarmed attention, was the disclosure, that the estimates of the cost of completing the Chesapeake and Ohio canal to Cumberland have proved largely inadequate. So large a portion of the state's capital and credit have been embarked in the construction of rail roads and canals, that these works now constitute the leading feature of the fiscal policy of the state, and the duties of the committee of ways and means are necessarily mingled with, and must probably ever remain inseparable from those hitherto deemed more exclusively the province of the committee on internal improvements. Without further and liberal aid from the state, the prosecution of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal must shortly cease—far short of the region which has always been regarded as the great source of its revenues, and the great inducement to its construction. Their work thus incomplete, that company would possess but very small means of reimbursing the loan which it has received from the state, or even of paying the annual interest upon it; while the large amount of stock previously subscribed for, would necessarily prove a total loss; and a resort to other means of maintaining the credit of the state, however painful, would prove inevitable.

The committee has not thought proper further to pursue the train of inquiry indicated, because, however for a moment we may have been startled by the erroneous estimates of which we have spoken, to stop, with the work in its present condition, is a thing not to be thought of. It must go on, and with unflinching energy, redeem itself. Its execution must furnish the ways and means of refunding the expenditure it has caused, and must yet occasion, and we are yet unshaken in the conviction, and rejoice in the full belief, that when completed to Cumberland the transportation of the single article of coal will produce a revenue more than sufficient for that purpose. Maryland is, in every respect, most deeply concerned and responsible for the result. The whole work being pledged in their hands, means to prosecute it can be obtained from no other quarter. It is incumbent upon her to furnish them, and promptly. The evil of delay will be felt by all, but as the largest contributor, on her it will fall with the greatest severity.

From these remarks it will be seen that your committee has not felt at liberty to pass by the subject of the investments of the state in internal improvements, but on the contrary have been necessitated to devote a large share of their reflections and deliberations to that absorbing topic, and in doing so have arrived at conclusions, which are now presented to the legislature, as to the mode in which alone those investments may be rendered safe and profitable, while the system is further and harmoniously extended, so as to produce the greatest good to the greatest number; develop the resources and augment the commerce, population and wealth of the state.

The condition of the currency has not failed also to attract their careful attention. Maryland is a small and central state, surrounded by large and powerful communities, the movements and policy of which in relation to this subject, cannot fail to be felt throughout her borders, with an intensity little short of the results of her own legislation. It is therefore idle for her statesmen to think of regulating her course by abstract theories: The facts which surround us, force themselves into observation, and by them we must be guided, or be made to bear the evils, while precluding our people from participation in the mixture of good with which the period seems fraught.

The causes of the depressed value of large portions of the landed estates, and of the emigration of our people, are so intimately connected with the subject of national wealth, that it was also to be expected of the committee that they would endeavor to investigate and suggest appropriate remedies for those evils.

In the examination of the first of these topics, the internal improvement of the state, your committee have been obliged to consider it with reference to a general system. Without doing so, they found it impossible to recommend any measure, with a certainty that it would not be found ultimately, to be partial in its effects, and liable to interfere with such enlarged scheme as the state, having in view the full development of its resources and the benefit of its citizens, might deem it just and expedient to adopt and prosecute.

Your committee believe that the time for the adoption and prosecution of a general system has now fully arrived. It has been accelerated, not only by the partial action of Maryland heretofore upon the subject, but by the rapid steps that have been taken by neighboring states, with which she is in competition for those ends that internal improvements are alone competent to attain.

Your committee propose therefore to present to your consideration their views with regard to the general system which they are of opinion should now be prosecuted by the legislature—to show how far it has already been accomplished by existing works—what new works are still required to perfect it in its principal features—how far pecuniary aid from the state is essential, and the mode in which that aid ought to be rendered, so as to produce the greatest amount of benefit, while at the same time it imposes, if possible, no burden upon the people.

The system of improvements best suited to Maryland, is rendered simple by the peculiar features of her geography, and its chief lines are indicated by the Chesapeake bay and the great rivers which fall into it. It should be such a system, that while it unites different and remote portions of the state, in the best and most convenient manner, would at the same time connect the state with its neighbors, or more remote states, in the mode which, as far as possible, makes them through their wants and interests, contributors to its prosperity and increase.

The principal line of the general system, which presents itself at once upon the inspection of the map of the state, is that which passes through it from its western to its eastern border, along the valley of the Potomac, diverging to Baltimore, and from thence, crossing the Susquehanna near its mouth, and terminating at the Delaware boundary in the north east portion of the state, in Cecil county. This line may be termed the axis of the system, and its extension beyond the limits of the state to the west, could reach Wheeling and Pittsburgh, from which places there is little doubt, that it would be continued through Ohio to Meauville bay, at the western extremity of Lake Erie; thence to be carried on to Michigan city and Chicago, at the head of Lake Michigan—and thence to Galena, on the waters of the upper Mississippi and Alton, at the mouth of the Missouri river. The eastern prolongation of the same line, would pass through Philadelphia, New York and Boston, and being thence carried to Belfast, in Maine, would in all probability terminate on the St. Lawrence, in the neighborhood of Quebec.

A portion of this line within the limits of Maryland, is already the designated route of both the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, and the Baltimore and Ohio rail road, which works, diverging at the Point of Rocks, will again unite in the city of Baltimore, agreeably to the original intention of the legislature, as evinced by the acts of assembly of 1825 and 1826; the remainder of the line within the state, admits of both a rail road and canal communication, from Baltimore to the Susquehanna, and from thence to the eastern boundary of the state, of rail roads only.

From the main line or axis, of the system thus described, there branches towards the north a rail road from Baltimore to the Susquehanna above the Pennsylvania line, while a series of canals down that river meets the same line again near its mouth—another branch to the north should be one, which leaving the main line at Hagerstown, would unite with the rail road along the Cumberland valley in Pennsylvania.

To the south of the main line, there should be a rail road from Elkton or its vicinity, passing near the heads of the rivers on the Eastern Shore, close to the Delaware boundary, and terminating by one branch at Watkins' Point in Somerset, and by another, on the southern boundary of Worcester county, with convenient lateral connections with various points on the Chesapeake bay: thus offering to the inhabitants of that beautiful peninsula a direct and easy communication, with either Baltimore or Philadelphia, and putting them, by means of steamboat navigation across the bay, in close connection with the internal improvements, which, commencing at Norfolk, open a way through the entire section of the union.

Another branch towards the south, is the admirable rail road which connects Baltimore and Washington, and whose continuance into Virginia will be perfected on the completion of the rail roads from the Potomac through Fredericksburg, Richmond and Petersburg to Wiedon in North Carolina, where it will intersect the Norfolk improvements above mentioned. Parallel to the rail road between Baltimore and Washington, will be a most important part of the main line, already in view, continuing the Chesapeake and Ohio canal to Baltimore, the terminus originally destined for it by the state of Maryland. Another branch to the south, is the rail road which crosses the Potomac at Harper's Ferry, and unites with the Winchester and Potomac rail road, and the other rail roads which aim at the remote south west through the great valley of Virginia and Tennessee. Another branch from the principal line above laid down, should be a canal, which diverging from it, either in the District of Columbia, or at some preferable point, would terminate on the Severn river, and at or near Annapolis.

If the lines, here indicated, are drawn upon a map, of the state, it will be seen that there is not a county which is not in near proximity to some one or other of them; and but four through which one or other of them will not pass. Of these, the three lower counties of the Western Shore are so intersected by water courses, with the Potomac on one side, the Chesapeake bay on the other, and the Patuxent river dividing the peninsula, that nature may be said to have supplied or pre-occupied the place of artificial improvements, by multiplying, in all directions, her facilities of intercommunication. One of the recommendations of the system here suggested, however, is, that it admits of almost indefinite ramification; inasmuch as each of these lines is capable of being made the axis of a system of its own; so that at a future day, should any extension of the system become desirable, a branch of the Washington road, or of a cross-cut canal, may be extended through, or along the counties of Charles, St. Mary's and Calvert; while a branch of the Eastern Shore rail road to the flourishing town of Easton, will probably be constructed immediately after, if not simultaneously with the construction of the principal road.

The works here enumerated may be classed in the following order:

1. The main line from east to west, consisting of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal and the Baltimore and Ohio rail road, the extension of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal to Baltimore, the Baltimore and Port Deposit rail road, a canal from Baltimore to the Susquehanna, the Wilmington and Susquehanna rail road, the Oxford and Cecil county rail road, and the Newcastle and Frenchtown rail road.

Of these works the Newcastle and Frenchtown rail road has been completed, and in use for some time. The Baltimore and Port Deposit, the Wilmington and Susquehanna, and the Oxford and Cecil county rail roads are in the hands of joint stock companies, and will before long, it is understood, be ready for use. The canal from the Susquehanna to Baltimore is not yet undertaken, although spoken of. Its execution is uncertain, and must depend upon circumstances; but if made, it will probably be at the expense of individuals, without the aid of the state. The cross cut or extension of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal to Baltimore, is a work, in the opinion of this committee, of the highest moment to the state, and towards its completion they propose, a moderate subscription and such alterations of the charter of 1835, as have been rendered necessary by the abolition of the board of public works. The near approach of the fruition in the trade, which we have so long and arduously labored to create on the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, should admonish the citizens of Baltimore, and the state at large, that the execution of this extension should be no longer delayed. The Baltimore and Ohio rail road and the Chesapeake and Ohio canal are still incomplete; large sums have been expended upon them, and your committee will, for the reasons hereinafter given, recommend that the aid of the state be decisively afforded to those cardinal works. To the improvements enumerated under this head, may be appropriately added the canal or slack water navigation on the north branch above Cumberland, and the various rail roads projected to the coal and iron mines in that region, plans for which are now before the legislature. These works are of vast importance, and will constitute the ducts to convey to the greater arteries, the trade which will give them utility and produce their revenue. To execute them no pecuniary aid is sought from the public treasury; they will be undertaken and accomplished, probably in anticipation of the opening of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, by the enterprise of the proprietors of the mines, if encouraged by the grant of suitable powers, and such as ordinarily given, without bonus or other public inducement—a result which the wise sanction of the committee on internal improvement and the enlightened liberality of the legislature leaves no room to doubt.

2. Of the branches from the main line to the north. These are the Baltimore and Susquehanna rail road, the canal up the Susquehanna, and the rail road from Hagerstown to Chambersburg, and possibly a branch from the same place to Gettysburg. The loan of a million of dollars, authorised at the last session of the legislature, has secured the completion of the first of these, according to actual estimate, it is understood, without the necessity of further aid from the state; and the other northern lines, will unquestionably be perfected by the wants of Pennsylvania and by individual enterprise.

3. Of the branches of the main line to the south. Of these, the Washington rail road, and the connection with the Winchester road have been completed; while the rail road from Elkton to the southern limits of Somerset and Worcester counties, is not yet, but will be speedily, authorised by law, and a charter has been but recently obtained for the construction of the canal from Washington to Annapolis. Both of these projected works are, in the opinion of your committee, in a high degree deserving of the aid and patronage of the state, and it is the intention of your committee accordingly to recommend subscriptions to the stock of each of them.

From the enumeration here made, it will be perceived that but a few of the works, deemed by your committee, necessary parts of a general system, have not been actually commenced; and all that is now necessary to bring that system into full and complete operation, is the aid of the state, required to finish some of them. Of these not yet commenced, or still unfinished there are but five, which in the opinion of your committee, require the pecuniary assistance of the state—These are

1. The Chesapeake and Ohio canal.
2. The Baltimore and Ohio rail road.
3. The Maryland canal.
4. The canal to Annapolis.
5. The Eastern Shore rail road.

Your committee has before adverted to the disappointment which prevailed in the legislature, when it was ascertained that the appropriation made at the last session to the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, had been found insufficient to complete the work to Cumberland, and that a large sum would still be required for that purpose. Without attempting a detailed examination of the facts connected with this subject, in the absence of all charge or suspicion of improper expenditure of the fund for objects unconnected with the canal, your committee do not doubt, that the cause of the error is to be found, in the vague and uncertain character of the estimates submitted at the last session, and that those who submitted them were as much imposed upon by their belief in their correctness, as was the legislature itself. One thing is certain—if the Chesapeake and Ohio canal was, twelve months since, of sufficient importance to induce the legislature to determine on its completion, whatever mistakes may have occurred cannot have altered or diminished its importance, as a great and inestimable public work. Time, instead of lessening our conviction of its value, has on the contrary greatly increased it, by the development that has taken place since the last session, of the mineral treasures of the mountainous region, into which it penetrates. A further most valuable and unexpected consequence has followed the grant of that session, in the immediate influx of capital and enterprise, which have largely enhanced the value of property in that region, which now stands ready and is praying for permission to execute dependent works, that but a few years since would have deemed enterprises, not unworthy of the means and energy of a sovereign state. As part, therefore, and a most important part of a general system, and as a source which cannot ultimately fail of great pecuniary as well as political advantage, your committee would recommend an immediate subscription to the stock of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, to such an amount as will secure its completion. Whatever may have been the vagueness and uncertainty of the estimates of 1835, those furnished to the present legislature may, it is believed, be certainly relied upon; and they fix the amount that may be required, at something less than three millions of dollars. To these estimates must necessarily be added, the expense of feeders to be brought from several of the principal southern tributaries of the Potomac across that river by aqueducts, and the cost of lock keepers' houses and other incidental charges which render it expedient that the subscription should embrace that sum.

The next work in order, is the Baltimore and Ohio rail road. The Chesapeake and Ohio canal, should it never be extended beyond Cumberland, would be, to most purposes, a perfect work, and make an ample return to the state from the profits to be derived from the transportation upon it of the products of the mountain region alone. On the other hand the Baltimore and Ohio rail road would derive its revenue from the transportation of passengers chiefly, and the number of these would depend, in the greatest degree, upon its completion to the navigable waters of the west. Whilst the canal therefore might, without injury to the interests of Maryland, suspend its progress at Cumberland, the rail road to be equally advanced, so far as profit is to be considered, must be pushed forward to the Ohio. The following estimate of the probable profits of this work when completed to Pittsburgh and Wheeling, is chiefly derived from the calculations of Jonathan Knight, chief engineer of that company, and falls, it is believed, within the most moderate calculation:

300 passengers per diem (150 each way) 400 miles at
3 cents a mile $3,600, making per annum	$1,314,000
Interest on $12,000,000, the entire cost of the road when completed at 6 per cent.	$720,000
Add the amount for moving power, salaries, repairs, contingencies	720,000
And the sum of this is	$1,440,000

So that taking the cost of working the road at the exaggerated sum of one half the receipts, the work, from the transportation of passengers only, would probably pay six per cent. upon the capital invested in it. When to this, however, is added the revenue from the transportation of goods and merchandise on this great highway, and that which it must derive from the carriage of the mails and other property of the United States, no reasonable doubt can be entertained as to its ample returns of profit. To this work your committee recommend a subscription also of $3,000,000, and in order to make the completion of the road certain, they further recommend that this subscription shall only be made, when four millions in addition to the present capital shall have been subscribed, bona fide, to the stock of the company from other quarters, or funds to that amount contributed in some form other than by loan on interest.

This will make $7,000,000, which, with the yet unpaid capital of the company, will produce nearly the sum of eight millions of dollars, for which the road can be finished. For this belief your committee have the estimate of the distinguished engineer above named, and have in further support, the fact, drawn from the experience of the company, that the road, so far as it has now progressed, has cost, exclusive of the portion in the immediate vicinity of Baltimore, which peculiar circumstances rendered expensive, but little more than $22,000 per mile. And it is believed, this average will hold good for the remaining distance of 318 miles; giving the sum total of $6,996,000, say seven millions; leaving $1,000,000 to meet contingencies and furnish the moving power and other machinery.

To the Eastern Shore rail road your committee would recommend a subscription to the amount of one million of dollars, on condition that there shall have been first subscribed, bona fide, to the stock of the company by others, such sum as with the state's subscription shall be, after a careful location of the road, estimated to be necessary to its construction.

To the cross-cut or Maryland canal from the Chesapeake and Ohio canal to Baltimore, and also to the Washington and Annapolis canal, your committee would recommend a subscription of $500,000 each, upon condition in each case, that the sum of $1,000,000 if so much shall be estimated to be necessary for the completion of the works respectively, shall have been subscribed by other bona fide subscribers.

In the case of the last mentioned work your committee recommend that the option be allowed the company of tapping the Maryland canal at any convenient point, if upon examination it shall be found, on the score of economy or in other respects, preferable to a separate canal, and if the connection be found to be practicable without injury to the other improvement.

The proposed appropriations towards the accomplishment of these great public works, are as follows:

To the Chesapeake and Ohio canal.....	$3,000,000
To the Baltimore and Ohio rail road.....	3,000,000
To the Eastern Shore rail road.....	1,000,000
To the Maryland canal.....	500,000
To the Annapolis canal.....	500,000

Making in all the sum of.....$8,000,000

Your committee propose presently to recur to this subject, being now led to the discussion of the second leading topic proposed. As has been before intimated, the committee desire to meddle little with abstract theories. It is not intended here to examine whether it be desirable or practicable in the present state of society to banish from use bank paper, substituting the precious metals; or whether the latter could be commanded in quantity adequate, without aid of paper, to meet the demands of a commerce of infinite activity. These things are at least impossible in this state, under the circumstances of our union, and there is a crowd of evidence around, that unless nearly all our sister states are mistaken in the means by which they seek to benefit themselves, this state has erred by indisposition to change, and by too close an adherence to a hard money currency. It is besides, embarrassing to perceive the most unequivocal signs of prosperity in some of those states, coincident if not correlative with their deviation from that which many deem the path of safety.

To show this, a few examples will suffice:
The area of Maryland contains eleven thousand square miles, with a population of 447,000, or about 41 to the square mile, and we have at this time a banking capital amounting in all to about eight millions of dollars.

Louisiana, with a population of 215,730, had, at the commencement of the present year a bank capital of twenty-six and a half millions, which has since been increased to about fifty millions.

Rhode Island, with an area of only 1,200 square miles, and a population of 97,000, or 81 to the square mile, has no less than sixty banks, with an aggregate of capital of more than eight millions of dollars.

The committee need not attempt to recapitulate the great enlargement of bank facilities which has recently and is now about to be made in Pennsylvania, nor advert to the equal steps of the great state of New York—but behold the galaxy of prosperity. The two latter, advancing with giant strides, envious of each other, grasping at the commercial rule of a continent, while the spirit of successful enterprise fills the dwellings of their humblest citizens with joy and plenty—Louisiana, growing with unparalleled rapidity, and expanding herself as it were to receive the rich tribute of the hundred armed father of waters: Rhode Island, with a population scarcely equal to the city of Baltimore alone, with an area and with water power not exceeding those of Baltimore county—sits, self-poised, amidst her hundreds of cotton manufactories, while her hardy mariners penetrate into every sea, a miracle of commercial and manufacturing enterprise.

Why does Maryland exhibit a spectacle so different? Is not the answer plain, that under the laws of Rhode Island, one hundred citizens have the use of as much banking capital as is afforded in Maryland to five hundred? In other words, if the banking capital of this state were increased to forty millions, the people would in that respect enjoy commercial facilities, about equal to those of which the people of Rhode Island are in possession. Proofs of the same character might be readily drawn from the statistics of almost every member of this union, and if there be any, whose policy squares with ours, there may the idle ship be found rotting at the wharf, while lethargy seals up the eyes of the people.

Your committee are far from designing to recommend at this time, an increase of capital to so great an amount as comparison with those examples would seem to render reasonable. Caution is to be used in the effectuation of all great changes, however desirable they may appear: but a moderate increase would seem indispensable under existing circumstances; and yet more so, if the great improvements we have spoken of are indeed to be prosecuted, and the destiny of the state fulfilled. Why is it that the cities of New York, Philadelphia and New Orleans require bank facilities, so extensive as we know they have and use—in the latter city, too, at the rate of ten per cent. interest, while here the rate is but six? Because nature for one, and art and industry for the others, have opened up the trade and supply of the vast, the fertile, the increasing interior. If Baltimore is to enter into that glorious competition, she must like them, have her facilities for business increased, and her capital made commensurate to her commerce, of which that of Maryland, great as it must become, will constitute but a very small part.

There are yet other important considerations, tending to the same result, and to others of a singular moment. It is impossible to close our eyes to the various tendencies of a question which is now deeply agitating the public mind of this union. In our state the distinction between master and servant, is color. In the administration of her government the servant has no participation; and hence although the voice of fanaticism may be heard from abroad, we aspire to the tower of frowning down and repressing disorder, wherever it may originate, and are enabled to protect our capital against the levelling cry of "the poor against the rich," which in the non-slaveholding states, must ever place the property of the employer under the control of the employed. The fanaticism which would intermeddle with and wrest away the rights of the south, if not general at the north and east, at least there finds shelter; and while Philadelphia and New York are straining every nerve to obtain the trade of the south as well as of the west, Maryland should not overlook her advantage, as the frontier of the slave holding states. She has a common interest and a common sympathy, with the entire south, and all that seems wanting to place the commercial metropolis in advance of her competitors for the commerce of that region, is CAPITAL, to enable her merchants to purchase the agricultural products which will be borne to it by the ocean, or by the improvements uniting, and to unite in Baltimore as a common centre, and to furnish in return, by direct importation, the various productions of every clime.

Actuated by these and similar considerations, your committee have laid upon your table and respectfully recommend the passage of

- A bill to incorporate the Western bank.
- A bill to incorporate the Commercial bank.
- A bill to incorporate the Eastern bank.
- A bill to incorporate the Chesapeake bank.
- A bill to incorporate the Farmers & Planters' bank.
- A bill providing for the enlargement of the Franklin bank.
- A bill to incorporate the Real Estate bank, all of Baltimore.
- A bill to incorporate the Farmers & Millers' bank of Hagerstown.

And a bill providing for the incorporation of the Mineral bank of Alleghany at Cumberland.

Your committee will observe, that should all these charters be allowed, the sum of bank capital in the state, will still be far below the scale prevalent in our sister states. They are all of moderate capital, one as low as $300,000 and none exceeding two millions, with the exception of the Commercial bank, to which in view of the gigantic dimensions of the banks of Philadelphia and New York, it has been deemed advisable to allow the privilege of extending its capital, as occasion shall require, to six millions.

Your committee are not unmindful of the lesson of history, teaching the dangers of an unwise multiplication of banks, but in their opinion those have read that lesson amiss, who argue evil from an augmentation of sound capital. About the period of the last war, the general suspension of specie payments led to the establishment of numerous concerns with no basis whatever but public credulity. A legal permission to issue promises to pay; a room sixteen feet square, and a steel engraving, constituted alone, but too frequently, the pedestal of delusion. Far different is now the condition of the things and widely diverse the guards with which we have endeavored to surround the charters recommended above. In a state of profound peace, the attempt to force into circulation, paper not redeemable with gold or silver, would be not less idle, than wicked. All of these banks, should they go into operation, will be amply provided with specie and in all respects be as solid as any of those now in operation; and as they will begin well, so the restraint upon issues and the penalties attendant upon non-compliance, will keep them punctual to their engagements and protect from injury the holders of their paper.

The depression of the agricultural interests and the causes of emigration, constitute the subject on which your committee proposes next to submit a few brief reflections.

Constituted as your committee is, chiefly of farmers and planters, and representing especially the agricultural interest, they cannot be ignorant of the complaints which come up loudly for aid and relief to that important portion of society. They are well aware that in many portions of the state, and particularly on the tide waters, no exertion of individual activity or capital has proved effectual to save proprietors from a gradual, but seemingly irresistible sinking in the value or price of their property, however improved in productiveness. The cause of this can only be found in the ceaseless tide of emigration which bears away the industrious and enterprising poor, from among whom, under other circumstances, the ranks of the independent landholders should be recruited; the savings of patient industry enabling them to come forward as the purchasers of land, as fast as it would be thrown into market, by the improvidence of the owners, or the operation of our law of descents. If there be in any county, twenty tracts of land for sale, and purchasers for only nineteen can be found, the twentieth will not only remain unsold, but the price of each of the twenty be considerably reduced. What then are the causes of the evil, and what can be done to arrest it? A principal cause is probably, that throughout a great portion of the extensive districts alluded to, the pursuits of the whole people are agricultural, and there being few considerable towns, the small farmer disposes with great cost, difficulty and inconvenience of the productions of his labor and articles of marketing—small things, which in districts differently situated, afford the means of comfort and the foundation of prosperity. The lands are naturally productive, possess abundant resources for their restoration when exhausted, are easily tilled, and the waters afford many advantages peculiar to these regions. Instances not unfrequently occur of emigrants unsatisfied who return to the advantages they once disdained; but the bulk do not return. Another great cause may be discerned in the swamps and marshes which in many parts deeply indent the country in some places on the shores of the bay, cover many thousands of acres, (which if rescued from inundation would prove of unsurpassed fertility), and very generally constituting a poisonous fringe around the inlets, bays and creeks, constituting the arms of the Chesapeake bay. It is true notwithstanding, that many situations on the eastern and lower counties of the Western Shore are blessed with health, as they are with beauty, fertility and all that can render them desirable, but it is no less true, that they constitute generally, a malarious region, in which although the diseases be not often of a high or malignant type, the poor man, who has not time to nurse the ague and fever is unapt to dwell. Not unfrequently the same causes produce fatal diseases, by which valuable men, the heads of families, are stricken down prematurely, or desolation spread through hearts, lamenting the young, the lovely and the lost.

If these sources of pestilence could be dried up and reclaimed, who would press me to reckon the rich coinage with which the good and liberal deed will be repaid—who estimate the benefits, financial and political, which would redound to the state from the productions of the reclaimed land, the improved salubrity of large districts, and the happy multitude who would no longer be forced to leave their homes!

Much of this can be accomplished by individual enterprise, properly encouraged; and it has been asserted by skilful observers, familiar with similar achievements in Europe, that all are within the reach of a liberal and paternal policy, and at no unsuitable expense on the part of the state. A government will not hesitate to expend its treasures in resisting the visible assailants of its people, and surely it is a duty no less holy, to go forth to destroy the haunts and resources of a foe no less deadly, though unseen.

Your committee also fully sympathise with the numbers of their agricultural brethren who yearly come up to their representatives, complaining that their exertions are crippled by the want of pecuniary aid; they are of opinion that these are entitled to receive aid, and that it may be adequately afforded, not only without injury, but even with the greatest certainty of much and various advantages to the state. In the mode of relief alone, and in a preference for more simple machinery, your committee, actuated by a single aim at the general good, presumes to differ from those who have urged at one time the establishment of a state bank, and more recently of a Real Estate bank, founded on the credit of the state. This report has already swollen to a length which forbids the detail of reasons by which your committee has been convinced, that the mode of relief which they are about to recommend will operate more equally, and produce more extensive benefit, without incurring many dangers, which may be feared from the grant of the state's guaranty to the stockholders in the Real Estate bank; but they indulge the hope, that a plan for lending money, in which any holder of real estate may participate on easy terms, the interest enuring to the benefit of the whole people, may prove acceptable, and suffice until a sufficient experiment can be made, as is proposed in part for this purpose, by means of the Real Estate bank of Baltimore, of the capacity of such an institution, without the credit of the state to operate advantageously.

Trusting that the bank charters above recommended may receive the sanction of the legislature, your committee conceive that by these adequate encouragement and relief will be afforded to the holders of real estate in the city of Baltimore, as well as to those who are engaged in commerce, manufactures and the mechanical arts; and to carry out the views above expressed, they recommend there be placed in the treasury of each shore, or elsewhere, under the direction of a board of commissioners, consisting of one member for each county, the sum of one million of dollars, further augmented as the bill reported herewith will explain, to be equitably distributed throughout (excluding from participation the city of Baltimore for the reason above given) in loans on landed security at long terms. It is further recommended that the loans shall bear interest after the rate of six per centum, payable semi-annually; but that for such sums as shall be expended in the melioration of lands by drainage, by the application of mineral manures, or in planting the mulberry and the production of silk, the annual charge for interest shall be reduced to four per cent. This reduction of interest is recommended by way of premium to agricultural industry, and cannot, in the judgment of your committee, fail greatly to redound to the advantage of the public, as well as to individual good; but especially in directing the attention of proprietors to the reclamation of drowned lands, your committee anticipate that while individuals will accomplish much, a large stock of experience will be acquired, and the way prepared for those operations of that character, which, by reason of their extent, will require the interposition of the state.

There is one work of this character to the accomplishment of which your committee would advise an immediate appropriation. It will be remembered that in the preceding description of the several works of internal improvement projected, every part of the state may directly participate, except the three southern counties of the peninsula of the Western Shore. It is an honor due to those counties, of which none can deprive them, that thus situated, from the first embarkation of the state in these great enterprises, however those portions of the state more deeply interested have been divided by jealous contentions, they have, by their representations in general, given to every public work, a support as steady as it has been generous and disinterested. The work now indicated lies in their midst. It is a body of the richest alluvial land, containing perhaps fifteen thousand acres, called "Zachia Swamp." It is described, delineated, and the improvements declared practicable, in the late report of the state engineer.

Your committee has the honor herewith to submit a bill entitled "an act to provide ways and means to complete the works of internal improvement, and to promote the agriculture, commerce and manufactures of this state," which will be found so fully explanatory of itself, that it will perhaps be only sufficient to add, that it provides for the negotiation in Europe of a loan of ten millions of dollars, bearing an interest of six per centum and redeemable at the pleasure of the state, at any time after the expiration of fifty years. Upon such a stock, in the present easy condition of the foreign markets, your committee entertain no doubt but a premium of at least twenty-five per centum may without difficulty be obtained. Upon that hypothesis a brief calculation is subjoined, by which, assuming that these public works shall when completed be competent to pay on their stocks conjointly, not more than simple interest, we hold it demonstrated that the whole debt, principal and interest, will be paid off at maturity. In the mean while the productiveness of all the former investments of the state may be placed and maintained in full activity, her ordinary revenues increased, her population multiplied, her property and resources developed and augmented; the wilderness subdued, her people happy in the fruition of an ample provision for universal education, and every other blessing which it is the object and end of government to secure.

When the sure realization of such results shall have come, what son of our soil, wandering from his home, will not feel the burthen of each remove more and more insupportable? With what affection will he not ponder on the domestic altar, sighing to behold again the green fields, bright sunshine and laughing waters of his natal spot—and how will his soul swell, to find dwelling in the applause of nations—Maryland—heart of the union!—the enterprising—steadfast—unterrified—unsubdued.

MARYLAND INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS.

The able report of the committee of ways and means of the house of delegates, which we published yesterday, has been received in this community with feelings of gratification as warm as they are universal. Few documents, indeed, have ever been presented to our citizens that have given more general and unqualified satisfaction than the one in question. The enlarged and liberal scope of its views is in excellent keeping with the circumstances of the times, and citizens of Maryland may justly dwell upon them with pride as well as pleasure in regarding them as assurances that our state is resolved to keep even pace with the wisest and most enterprising members of the union, in the onward march of the country to her high and happy destinies.

Accompanying the report was the following paper, a copy of which we could not obtain in time for publication yesterday. Its design is to illustrate the practical operations contemplated by the committee under the bill prepared in conformity with the recommendations of the report:

A calculation showing the practical operations contemplated by the committee on ways and means, under the bill which they have reported to complete the internal improvements and promote the agriculture, commerce and manufactures of the state of Maryland.—

Firstly—They propose that ten millions of state six per cent. stocks or bonds be issued and disposed of, redeemable after fifty years, and believe that they will sell for an advance or bonus of twenty-five dollars on each one hundred dollars—and therefore bring into the treasury of this state the sum of $12,500,000

Secondly—They propose that subscriptions be made to works of internal improvement, and paid out of said fund as follows:—

- | | |
|--|--------------------|
| 1. To the Chesapeake and Ohio canal company | $3,000,000 |
| 2. To the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company | 3,000,000 |
| 3. To the Eastern Shore rail road company | 1,000,000 |
| 4. To the Maryland canal | 500,000 |
| 5. To the Annapolis canal | 500,000 |
| Together | $8,000,000 |

|--|---------|
| 6. To pay the interest on said subscriptions during the first three years thereon, say an average of two years on the whole, it being payable in three equal parts annually, or 12 per cent. and being | 960,000 |
|--|---------|

Forming in all the sum of $9,960,000

And leaving a balance to be employed through the loan offices to the amount of $3,540,000

Thirdly—They propose to lend all the balance just above mentioned, through the agency of two loan offices, one on each shore—and at 6 per cent. interest, except on such portion thereof as shall be expended in the draining of lands, or applying marl or other mineral manures; in the rearing of plantations of the mulberry tree and producing silk—and they estimate such part at one million of dollars.

Fourthly—They infer from known facts in like cases and the preceding propositions.

1st. That the dividends which may be declared on the contemplated subscriptions to works of internal improvement, will meet all of the interest that can accrue on the amounts so subscribed—after the end of the first three years provided for as above noticed.

2dly. That the interest which will be realised at the loan offices, on one half of the sum of two millions proposed to be borrowed for the exclusive use of the farmers and planters of Maryland, will provide for the interest which the state would have to pay on the said half part.

3dly. They are aware that on the other half part, to wit: on the sum of one million of dollars, that would doubtless be applied to the draining of lands, &c. &c. the state would have to pay two per cent. per annum interest more than would be received thereon at the loan offices, and that this difference would be, in fact, as it is desired that it might be, a premium wisely and profitably given for the improvement of agriculture and promotion of manufactures.

Fifthly—Upon the foregoing data the committee arrive at the following conclusions:—

1st. The bonus or advance that would be received on the sale of ten millions of state stocks or bonds, would be, as above stated, $2,500,000—from which $950,000, or two years interest on the sum of $3,000,000 invested in works of internal improvement, being deducted, there will be left, and may be lent through the loan offices for the term of 50 years, an excess amounting to

$1,540,000

2d. At the end of twelve years—computed from the opening of said offices—by compounding the interest on said sum or excess, it would produce the sum of

3,550,000

3d. At the end of twenty-four years so compounding, this would become

6,160,000

4th. At the end of thirty-six years, the same course being continued, it would produce

12,320,000

5th. And at the end of the fourth term, or expiration of the forty-eight years, it would produce

21,640,000

6th. If from this accumulated fund the whole debt incurred by the state as well as the two millions borrowed in order to lend the same to farmers and planters, the eight millions borrowed to be invested in works of internal improvement—should be paid off and he

10,000,000

7th. There would still thereafter remain in the loan offices a surplus of 14,640,000

8th. If from the aforesaid surplus there shall be deducted the sum in which two per cent. per annum rebated on one million of dollars lent to those who drain their lands, &c. &c. and which for fifty years would be 100 per cent. in all, or

$1,000,000

1,500,000

9th. They may be regarded as a premium conferred on those who drain their lands, &c. &c. and amounting together to the sum of

$2,500,000

10th. And would leave a remainder or balance in the loan offices—subject to the expenses of their administration, &c. &c. say

$12,140,000

11th. Besides which, the state would then own, exclusive of their present investments, eight millions of capital stock in shares of the canal and rail road companies aforementioned, that would be worth far more than they cost: and also two millions of dollars of claims, being the original sum borrowed for and lent to the farmers and planters of this state.

Finally—If the government of Maryland should then think fit to sell said shares and pay off the debt now proposed to be incurred, in order to subscribe to them—the proceeds of such sale would undoubtedly yield ten millions of dollars, that would discharge said debt, and leave in the loan offices of this state, subject only to the aggregate expenses incurred in their original management, the grand sum of

CITY COUNCIL OF BALTIMORE.

Proceedings in first branch, March 14.

Mr. Seidenstricker, from the joint committee on internal improvements, submitted a report and resolution, directing the mayor to subscribe to the capital stock of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company three millions of dollars, in the name of the mayor and city council of Baltimore; provided that the whole sum shall be exclusively applied to the prosecution of the work in an unbroken line from Harper's Ferry, or such point near that place as shall be selected, from which said extension shall be made. On motion, 500 copies were ordered to be printed. The report is as follows:

The joint committee on internal improvements, to whom was referred the memorial of the citizens of Baltimore setting forth the importance of securing an immediate connection with Wheeling and Pittsburgh, by means of a continuous rail road, and praying that the corporation of Baltimore should at once assume to raise one million of dollars and determine to supply hereafter whatever sums may be eventually necessary to accomplish the object, report, that they have given their most mature deliberation to the topics of the memorials which has been referred to them.

That a crisis has arrived in the affairs of our city, big with the most important considerations in relation to her future prospects, and which calls for the united efforts of our men of business, property holders, capitalists and the municipal authorities in the adoption of measures for a prompt, vigorous and active prosecution of the various works of internal improvements which have been commenced and the speedy entrance upon others in contemplation, is a fact obvious to all eyes, can admit of no dispute, and needs no argument to establish. It is perfectly evident to almost every mind that upon the course which is now pursued must depend the issue of the question whether the city of Baltimore, is to be reduced to a place of comparative insignificance in a commercial point of view, or to assume a position, equal at least if not superior in rank and importance to that of any other city in the union. If the opportunities which now present themselves be permitted to pass by us unimproved, we must expect to see the trade with the west, which has hitherto been enjoyed by our citizens, turned into other channels, to the advantage of other cities and our own ruin; but if such measures be now adopted and prosecuted with that vigor which the time, the circumstance and the effect which necessarily result therefrom demand, we have reason to indulge in the utmost assurance that our city will become in a great measure the centre of trade for the whole union.

It is no longer a question whether or not the trade and intercourse with the west is of sufficient importance to compensate for the expenses necessary to be incurred in the construction of great works of internal improvement, for facilitating such intercourse and transportation of produce and other commodities between the seaboard and the extensive and fertile regions of the west. By a wise reference to the course pursued by the other sections of our country with regard to these important measures, we may profit by their experience, and derive ample encouragement to prosecute our own works of a similar character. The course adopted by the state of New York, a number of years since, and the consequences which have resulted therefrom, have long since dispelled all doubts upon the subject. When the construction of some of these works was conceived and recommended by the giant mind of De Witt Clinton, it was considered almost as visionary and extravagant, as was the idea of Christopher Columbus, when first suggested by him, that the mighty continent we now inhabit existed in what was then generally supposed to be one wide and unbroken expanse of ocean; that the advantages which have resulted from and are likely to result from the measures of the former, have added almost, if not quite as much to the advantages and prosperity of the state of New York as did the discovery of the latter to the old world, and without any of the evils to a large portion of the human race, the history of which cannot be read and reflected upon without exciting feelings of horror and indignation. It is now discovered, that extensive as have been the works constructed in New York, under circumstances which occasioned a much larger expenditure of money than would now be required, arising from a want of experience and various other causes which do not now exist, they have been completed and put into operation without the expenditure of a dollar by the state; a revenue is now derived from them, not only much greater than was anticipated by the most sanguine advocates of the system, and have been the means of diffusing throughout the state, wealth, prosperity, knowledge and happiness, which has placed her far in the advance of any other state in the union. So obvious to the people of New York are the advantages which have resulted from those improvements, that notwithstanding their great extent, and the immense expenditures which have been in their construction, they are now planning and carrying into effect other improvements, almost as extensive as those which have been completed and are in successful operation.

Where but a few years since there was little else to be seen than a wide extended wilderness, but seldom visited and but little known, large cities have grown up whose magnificent edifices, lofty spires, extensive warehouses and smiling and happy inhabitants furnish evidence to the eye and mind of every beholder, of the vast advantages which resulted from the public spirit and enterprise which were exercised in the construction of those works. They have been the means of adding, not only to the wealth of the state, and the prosperity, knowledge and happiness of her citizens, but to the number of her inhabitants, and thereby giving to her a degree of weight and importance in the nation, which without them she could not have achieved.

But it is not to the people of that state alone that the knowledge of these facts is confined. The people of other states have perceived the immense advantages which have resulted from the construction of those great works, and have begun to imitate the example of New York. In Pennsylvania similar improvements of vast extent have been made, diverging and extending in almost every direction, and still new works are planned and prosecuted for the purpose of securing for Philadelphia the trade, to as great an extent as possible, not only of her own wide domain, but of the new states of the west. The young giant of the west, Ohio, has also made rapid strides in the march of improvement, the consequences of which are rapidly developing themselves in the increase of her cities, the improvement and cultivation of her territory, the increase and number of her inhabitants, and the advancement of her importance among the states of the union.

Kentucky has commenced the work of internal improvement with great earnestness and energy, and is thereby producing a great change in the appearance of things. Tennessee is following close in the train; Indiana, Illinois and other of the younger states are engaging in the work to an extent which is calculated to excite in no small degree our surprise and admiration. If we turn our eyes to the south we find the same spirit manifesting itself; in all the states, Virginia, N. Carolina, S. Carolina and Georgia have all their extensive projects of the kind which they are prosecuting with all possible rapidity; and the period cannot be far distant when the face of the whole country will be changed, and trade and communication between the various portions thereof, will be carried on with a rapidity resembling the flight of the eagle.

With these facts before us, the course which our interest and duty invite us to pursue cannot be doubtful. In point of location, and other advantages our situation is not inferior to that of any other city in the union; and in many respects it is vastly superior to any other, on, or near the Atlantic seaboard. The near approximation of New York to the Atlantic, gives to her an advantage in that respect vastly greater than that of Philadelphia or our own city; but that advantage is counterbalanced in no small degree by the difference in climate between the state of New York and that of Maryland; while her great canals are fast locked up in fetters of ice, and her rail roads are covered with mountains of snow, ours can be in successful operation. It is stated that during the present season many of the western merchants, who have been in the habit of making their purchases in the city of New York, have been induced by the fact, that the facility with which merchandise can be transported from Philadelphia or this city, to the west, is vastly greater than from that city, in the early part of the year—have left them and come on further south for the purpose of procuring their supplies; and the fact is well known here that the business done in this city during the present season has greatly exceeded that of former years. These facts speak volumes in favor of our superior advantages in this respect. The distance between the capes and the city of Philadelphia is something less than that between our city and the Atlantic; but this difference is more than counterbalanced by the superior advantages which are enjoyed by our city, arising from the facts, that our bay can be navigated with much greater ease and safety than that of the Delaware, and that the ice is removed from our harbour some time earlier in the spring than it is from Philadelphia. It is indeed but seldom that our harbour is entirely closed, and when it occurs, it is generally but for a short period. In point of distance between us and the western states the advantage is decidedly in our favor; and this is a consideration of vast importance.

The nature of the ground over which it is necessary to travel from Baltimore to the west is greatly superior to that between Philadelphia and the same region of country. In Pennsylvania it has been found to be utterly impracticable to pass the mountains without the use of stationary engines, which are attended with difficulty, delay and expense, while, from the report of the engineer who has surveyed the route from this city, it is represented to be entirely unnecessary to have any such engines, and consequently none of the evils will exist which grow out of the necessity of resorting to the use of them. Our central situation, and the short distance between us and the seat of the general government is another circumstance of no small importance in our favor. Many of the merchants who depend upon the Atlantic for their supplies of merchandise, have business to transact at Washington, and many others will be induced by a desire to gratify their curiosity, or to visit friends, to go to that city, after making their purchases, and with equal advantages in other respects, these considerations will cause them to give to our city a preference over others; but when it is considered that our advantages in other respects are actually much superior to those of any other, it is but reasonable to conclude that Baltimore will have a decided preference.

From a view of all these considerations and facts, what is the necessary consequence? From this city to Wheeling the distance, by the proposed route of the rail road, is 332, and to Pittsburgh, 352 miles. Over eighty miles of this distance the Baltimore and Ohio rail road has been completed and is in successful operation. The construction of the road for that distance has been attended with great expense, and from the experience which has been acquired, the improvements which have been made in the manner of applying the means, and various other circumstances, we have the best reasons for believing that as the work progresses, the expense will be greatly reduced. But whether this be or be not the fact, the work should be prosecuted with energy, zeal and activity, and no difficulty, however great, should be regarded as insurmountable. These should be met with a boldness and determination which the occasion and the circumstances may demand. They should be seized with a resolute mind and an energetic hand. That which may to the timid and the diffident be considered as amounting to an impassable barrier, to the stout heart and strong hand will melt into nothingness like snow beneath the burning beams of the tropical sun.

If we cast our eyes on the map upon which is traced the routes of the different rail roads which are proposed to be constructed from Wheeling and Pittsburgh, through different parts of the western states, we will be convinced that we shall secure at least a very large portion of the trade of every extensive and fertile region of country, which, by means of those internal improvements, will be brought to those points, and when to this is added the trade from the banks of the Ohio and its tributary streams, which will be brought to these places, the importance of opening the proposed communication with them must appear written in legible characters too plain to be mistaken, and should not fail to enlist in its favor the feelings and energies of every mind and every heart that regards the growth and prosperity of our city. The object to be aimed at is a noble one, and should excite in the minds of every Baltimorean a spirit of emulation to be foremost in endeavoring to aid in its attainment.

The prize is one which will justify the straining of every nerve to reach. The times and circumstances are propitious and full of promise. A hesitation to act, and that with promptitude, zeal, firmness and energy, would be to neglect our own interest and our duty to the city and the state in which we live.

Under these considerations, it is apparent that to secure as large a portion as possible of the trade with the west, is of vast importance to this state and particularly to this city. To the state it is important because in proportion as the prosperity of Baltimore is promoted, will that of the state be advanced. Much, very much of the revenue which flows into the state treasury is derived from this city, and in proportion to the increase and prosperity of the city must be the increase of that revenue. Whatever, therefore, shall tend to the prosperity of the city of Baltimore, will, in a similar ratio, be productive of the best interests of the state, and if the city should by any means be injured in her character, trade, commerce or manufactures, the wound she receives must be materially felt by the state, and in that respect the state is connected with the city by bonds that, on her part, should be cherished and constantly protected.

We then must come to this conclusion, that the city of Baltimore should embark to the utmost of her means for the accomplishment of this great work. A voice from every section of the city cries aloud for her to come forth and discharge this paramount duty—a duty, which, if well performed, is fraught with all that is calculated to produce a basis of well founded prosperity. It is perhaps unnecessary to say that the securing of the western trade to the city of Baltimore is of direct and immediate importance; that it will be the means of increasing the business of the merchants, of inducing men of capital and enterprise to locate themselves among us, and of giving employment and extending prosperity to all classes of our citizens; and to persons who may become such. What further inducements can be held out, even supposing it necessary to offer any, to persuade the corporation of Baltimore to embark in this work. We believe persuasion is unnecessary, but that with one voice and mind a cordial response will be given to the memorials of the citizens of Baltimore who are awake to the importance of the enterprise, and are willing to bear the burden of taxation for awhile, confident in return to reap a full and abundant harvest, not only from the amount of revenue to be derived from the use of the rail road, but from the accumulating business of all branches of industry and in the increase of the population of the city.

By a reference to the following synopsis connected in part from the ninth annual report of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company, we believe it will be admitted that the company will be able not only to compete with other cities, as it regards the western trade, but to transport produce, if necessary, at a less rate per mile than other similar works of internal improvement, and that the travel alone on this road will amount to the large sum of two millions of dollars per annum.

1st. Length of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road, including the branch road to Frederick, 85 miles.

2d. The total expenses of working that road for the year ending the 30th September, 1835, including repairs salaries, wear and tear of the horses and every other disbursement, was, as appears by the ninth annual report, document C, No. 4, page 165, $156,204 39.

N.B. This expenditure is the result of the mixed horse and steam power heretofore used and will be much reduced, pro rata, when an efficient steam power will have been provided, and a perfect system of organization shall have been effected.

3d. The number of passengers that travelled on the road during the past year appears by the last annual report, Doc. C. No. 3, page 164, to have been 97,758.

4th. The distance from Baltimore to Pittsburgh will not exceed 360 miles; to Wheeling 350 miles.

5th. The road to both Wheeling and Pittsburgh may cost twelve millions of dollars; say $12,000,000.

Assuming the foregoing data and the following results may be expected:

1st. If a road 85 miles long cost, for all expenditures, annually, $156,000, a road 360 miles would cost	576,000
Add for branch to Wheeling,	124,000
	700,000
Add 50 per cent. for additional travel,	350,000
	1,050,000
2d. Interest, 5 per cent. on capital, say 12,000,000, invested	600,000

Total cost for interest and working the road per year, 1,650,000

3d. It is seen as above that 97,000 passengers now travel the road, no one can estimate the number that would daily pass between the city of Baltimore and the western states at less than equivalent to 100,000 in each direction, say in both directions, 200,000.

4th. 200,000 passengers at $10, the price charged by the charter, would be 2,000,000

5th. From which deduct, as above, viz:
For all expenditures,	1,050,000
Interest on capital,	600,000

Leaving a surplus revenue of 350,000

Exclusive of freight and tonnage by which it is plain that the rates of transportation might be reduced to a charge that would put all competition out of the question, if the road were made and in full operation, and in the above estimate it is also observed that there is no allowance for carrying the mails, which would not be less than $300,000 annually.

By a recent act of the legislature we have been authorised to borrow the sum of three million of dollars to be applied to the construction of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road; and by the same act it is provided that for every $500,000 appropriated to that object, the city is authorised to appoint an additional director to manage the business in connection with the directors of the company. The amount of stock now held by the city in the company is $500,000, on which she has been and is to be entitled to the privilege of two directors. By the late act, the ratio of representation has been changed from a quarter to a half a million of dollars of the appropriation made and to be made by the city. The reasons which induced the legislature to make this change in the ratio of representation, we are unable to perceive or conjecture, and we cannot but regard it as a very objectionable feature in the late law.

It appears to us that when the city is expected to take such a large interest in the work, it would have been but right to have entitled her at least to an equal representation in the board of directors with the private stockholders. We believe it to have been expected by those who signed the memorials which have been laid before the council praying for a proposed appropriation to the work that the ratio of representation upon the stock proposed to be subscribed should be the same upon that now held, and it may, to some, be a matter of doubt whether, under the present circumstances of the case, they will expect or desire that the appropriation shall be made by the council; but we regard the work as so essentially important to the interests of the city, and that it be carried on as speedily and rapidly as possible, so loudly called for, in consequence of surrounding circumstances, that all objections of minor importance should be waived in considering and deciding upon the course which it is proper to pursue. Notwithstanding, therefore, the strong objections which are felt to the change made by the late law, in the ratio of representation, we conceive that it would be proper, and called for by a regard for the prosperity of the city, that measure should be taken as soon as practicable to carry into effect the object of the late law.

Another important work upon the success of which must depend in a great measure the prosperity of Baltimore, is the Baltimore and Susquehanna rail road. For many years an extensive and valuable trade has been carried on by our citizens with large portions of the state of Pennsylvania, which has tended greatly to the promotion of the prosperity of our city. Our geographical position is such that to the people of those sections of that state it is much more convenient to send their produce to, and derive their supplies of foreign products from our merchants than from those of Philadelphia; and while the facilities for travelling and transportation between them and the two cities are in any measure equal in point of rapidity and ease, it is but natural and reasonable to expect that they will give to Baltimore a decided preference over the commercial emporium of their own state. This fact has been so perfectly obvious to the people of Philadelphia, that it has long been a primary object with them, that while they were giving every possible encouragement, and all practicable aid to the construction and support to works of internal improvement, having a tendency to open a more speedy and convenient access to their own city from the interior of the state, they have constantly and perseveringly exerted all their influence and persuasion with their legislature in opposition to the construction of any works calculated to facilitate intercourse and communication between our city and any portion of that state.

For many years they were successful in their efforts to defeat all applications which were made to the legislature of Pennsylvania for grants either to aid in the construction of works of improvement to open a more easy access to our city, or to authorise their being constructed by others. When the charter of the Baltimore and Susquehanna rail road company was obtained from the legislature of Maryland, application was made to that of Pennsylvania for authority to extend the road to the borough of York, and was subsequently several times repeated, but without success, in consequence of the influence which was exercised by the citizens of Philadelphia against the grant of the authority for which application was made. But the legislature has since become aware of the important fact that the people of every portion of the state have an equal right to participate in the advantages to be derived from legislative action, and the application of the state fund; that they have all an equal right to be heard and gratified in their desires; that all are alike interested, that the interest of all parties demand equal participation, and that to those to whom it is more convenient to carry on trade with our city, were as to the people of the interior of the state generally it is much entitled to their regard as any other; and that of great importance to have a choice of markets for the disposal of the fruits of their labor and the products of their soil. They have accordingly passed a law by which authority has been given to the Baltimore and Susquehanna rail road company to extend the work to the town of York, agreeably to the original design. When that point shall have been attained a safe and convenient intercourse and communication will be opened, by means of the Codorus canal not only with the Susquehanna river, its numerous tributary streams meandering in every direction through extensive and fertile valleys covered with abundant harvest and abounding with products of great value and importance, but through the medium of the different works of internal improvement, which have been, and are about to be constructed in that state with a most extensive and fruitful region of country.

For a considerable period the operations of the Baltimore and Susquehanna rail road were suspended in consequence of the want of funds necessary to enable the company to prosecute their labors; but the act passed at the last session of our legislature, by which provision was made for the loaning to the company the sum of a million of dollars has effectually removed the difficulty under which they labored, and has enabled them to renew their labors with increased industry and zeal. They are therefore now prosecuting their labors with all possible diligence, and there is every reason to believe that the period is not far distant when it will be completed, and all the benefits to our city which were contemplated at the time of its commencement will be enjoyed in complete and full fruition. A considerable portion of the time which has elapsed since the passage of the law for granting from the state to the company a loan to enable them to complete the work has been occupied in making surveys for a selection for the route for the work, which have been much more extensive than were at first deemed requisite, but have since been considered expedient and proper, with reference to both economy and convenience for the purpose of securing the best selection. These surveys have now been completed, and the route has been decided upon which in the judgment of the engineer is the best adapted to the work. Consequently the company is now prepared as soon as the season and the state of the weather will render it practicable, to recommence active operations under the most favorable circumstances and with the most flattering prospects.

It is proposed in Pennsylvania to form a connection between the Pennsylvania canal and the great Erie canal of New York, and a rail road is about to be constructed from Williamsport lying upon the western branch of the Susquehanna river, and on the line of the Pennsylvania improvements to Elmira, which is at the head of the Chemung canal in the state of New York, and connects through the Seneca lake and canal, with the Erie canal at Montezuma. The route has been surveyed and is reported to be peculiarly favorable for the construction of such a work. The books have been opened for subscriptions, the stock taken, the company organized, and from the importance of the connexion to be formed, and the vast advantages it offers to the people of both those powerful and enterprising states, there is every reason to believe that it will be speedily completed. It is proposed in New York to construct a rail road from that city to Lake Erie, and in Philadelphia it is proposed to construct another from that city to connect with that of New York. Should both those works be carried into effect, which is highly probable, the distance from the point where the Philadelphia road will leave the Susquehanna to the borough of York, will be comparatively trifling, and the communication between those two points so as to connect with the Baltimore and Susquehanna rail road, by means of different improvements, will be so easy and expeditious that it cannot fail to attract much trade and intercourse to our city. To show that this will, in all probability, be the case, it is only necessary to cast our eyes upon the map of the country, from which it will be at once perceived that when the different roads are completed, the distance between Baltimore and Lake Erie, by means of canal and rail road communication, will be much shorter than that to any other Atlantic city. When the works now in progress shall have been completed in Pennsylvania, which may be expected to be the case in a very short time, Baltimore will be placed in a situation to compete, under very advantageous circumstances, with her powerful neighbors, New York and Philadelphia, for the immense trade which must necessarily flow through the various channels of communication which will be thrown open. The near approximation of New York to the ocean will be more than counterbalanced by her distance from the far west, and the fetters of ice and snow which for a considerable portion of the year will obstruct all intercourse, while our great works will be in successful operation.

Philadelphia has no advantage over us with regard to an intercourse with the ocean, but labors in this respect under difficulties greater than our own; while on the other hand in point of distance to the points in the west which it is the object of all to reach, the difference in our favor over New York is one hundred and ten miles, and over Philadelphia about thirty. Under these circumstances who can doubt that the prospect of advantage to result from the various works of improvement now prosecuting or is in contemplation are greatly in favor of Baltimore, and that our monumental city is destined at no very distant day to present a scene of activity which will be the means of drawing capital and an increase of population which will elevate her to a rank and importance among the states in the union equal to those which stand the highest. Here is a field presented to the view and open for the active operations of men of wealth and enterprise inferior to none to be found. Such is our geographical position, that the wealth arising from a trade with the extensive and fertile states of the west and the south west, the interior counties of Pennsylvania and the western counties of New York is ready to be poured in our lap. Nothing more is necessary to secure it than the completion of the works of internal improvements now in progress and in contemplation and for the completion of which the most ample means are now ready to be applied.

With regard to the Baltimore and Susquehanna rail road it is believed that the means afforded by the loan from the state of a million of dollars already provided for, will be sufficient to complete the work, and we may feel perfectly assured that all the benefits anticipated from its completion will be speedily enjoyed, without any further expense and without the extension of any further aid on the part of the city or the state; and the only barrier which now stands in the way of our enjoying the benefits expected to result from it when the work was commenced, is the time which will be necessary to enable the company to apply the means they have now at their command.

Another work connected with the trade between our city and the interior counties of Pennsylvania and New York, of great importance, is that of the Susquehanna canal from Columbia to tide. This is of great importance to us, for the reason that it will afford a better means for the conveyance of coal, iron, lumber and other heavy and cumbrous commodities, which cannot be conveyed upon a rail road with the same convenience, and to an amount as extensive as they can be upon a canal. Strenuous efforts are now making to place the business connected with this work in such a situation as to enable the company to commence operations upon it to the best advantage, and sanguine hopes are entertained that they will soon be enabled to commence the work with a zeal, energy and perseverance which will insure its early completion. At present, however, the plans of the company are not sufficiently arranged and digested to enable us to speak of them with any satisfaction to ourselves, or in such a manner as to afford any information to the public. But of this we feel assured that those who have the matter in hand, will employ all possible diligence and perseverance to put the business in a train which will enable them, very speedily, to commence active operations upon the work, and carry it on to a speedy completion.

If we cast our eyes upon the map on which is traced the outlines of the different extensive improvements which are now either in progress or contemplation, we shall perceive that Baltimore forms a central point to which they all tend. Those from the south and south west all point to our city. With regard to those from the west, the north or the east, the same is the case. The travelling between the north and the south, the east and the west, by means of those improvements, must nearly all of it, pass through Baltimore, and it is almost impossible by any means to avoid it. These facts are calculated to afford the utmost assurance that our city must necessarily form the centre trade for the whole union, if we are but true to ourselves, and employ for our own advantage the means within our reach. Under these circumstances, who can avoid feeling a desire to exert his utmost efforts to aid in furnishing the means necessary to secure the accomplishment of such important ends? Who is there that does not feel disposed to engage in a spirit of emulation with his fellow citizens in forwarding the great works which are evidently fraught with such beneficial consequences? It is needless to ask. All are alive to the subject—all are willing and anxious that the works of internal improvement shall progress with all possible rapidity, under the full assurance that the application of the means necessary to their completion will be but a loan to be repaid with ample and overflowing interest.

We cannot permit ourselves to close our remarks upon this highly interesting and important subject without calling the attention of our fellow citizens to the proposed lateral canal between Baltimore and the Chesapeake and Ohio canal. The great importance of this work is becoming every day more and more obvious to every one who has watched the course of travel upon the main canal. Much of the produce which was formerly brought to our city from the western counties of our state and Virginia, has by the opening of that canal been diverted to other cities, and as that work progresses to the west, that diversion must necessarily increase, unless means are adopted to counteract its operation. All heavy and cumbrous commodities which may be brought into contact with the canal will naturally be carried upon it to market, and when once placed upon it, will never be removed therefrom until they reach a point at which they can change hands. On the extensive line of that work there must be a great abundance of such articles, and they will as naturally be carried to Georgetown and Alexandria and be forever lost to Baltimore, as that water will flow downwards, or when confined will seek its own level.

And how is this operation to be counteracted? The answer is a plain one, and may be readily given. It is that it should be done by means of the proposed lateral canal. Nothing else can secure the accomplishment of the object, and by that means it can be effectually secured, if the proper means be employed for the purpose. But will it be secured by a connection with the Chesapeake and Ohio canal within the District of Columbia? We think not. In that case all articles brought to the District must command in our market a price so much higher than that at which they can be disposed of in Georgetown, as to be sufficient to pay for its transportation an additional distance of 40 miles; and that difference, we apprehend, would be too extensive to enable us to indulge any hope of being able to compete with the dealers in such articles with any hope of success. It is true that it is much less difficult to navigate the Chesapeake bay and the river Patuxent than the Potomac from its mouth to Alexandria and Georgetown, but we do not conceive that this difference would be sufficient to counterbalance the disadvantage resulting from the cost and time which would be occasioned by the transportation of the articles an additional distance of forty miles. We are willing to view the matter in an aspect as favorable for ourselves as possible, but we consider the subject of too much importance to be willing to deceive ourselves and the public by the indulgence of a hope which we think can never be realized, and which it would be unreasonable to expect ever to see realized. It must be recollected that between our city and Washington there are no fertile valleys from which we might hope to draw abundant supplies of rich and valuable products to afford a compensation for the construction of such a work, with the view of obtaining a portion of the trade which will flow down the Chesapeake and Ohio canal. There is comparatively nothing to be derived from that quarter, and all that can be expected to be received through such a channel must come from beyond Georgetown and be disposed of in our market at a price above that which it will command in that place equal to the cost of transportation.

What then is to be done and how are these difficulties to be avoided? Our answer is that it is by constructing the lateral canal over a route by which it will be connected with the main canal at the highest practical point; and that point is perhaps the mouth of the Monocacy. That it will be attended with an additional cost of considerable amount is very certain, but of what consequence is that consideration in a case of so much importance? It is a matter that should not and we trust will not be considered worthy of a moment's attention. The object to be obtained by it is one that will more than compensate for the difference of expenditure ten times told. That there will still be a difference in point of distance from that point between Georgetown and Baltimore in favor of the former we will readily admit, but the amount of the distance will be reduced and the reduction of that difference will be an important point gained. And then the canal will run through a highly cultivated district of country, from which extensive and valuable supplies of produce and other commodities will all be conveyed upon it to our market. From these considerations we consider it perfectly clear, that the course we propose, of carrying the canal to the highest practicable point on the Potomac should by all means be adopted.

That the completion of this work at as early a period as possible is of vital importance to the trade of our city is too obvious to every observer to require any argument, we conceive, perfectly certain; and it is to be hoped and presumed that efforts will speedily be made to commence the work with an energy and zeal which will insure its early completion. It is gratifying to perceive that the attention of the legislature has been directed to the subject, and that a proposition is now before that body to appropriate towards it five hundred thousand dollars. Should the proposition be adopted as we sincerely hope it may be, it will furnish the means for a commencement, in which case it will no doubt soon receive from other sources such aid as will be amply sufficient, under wise and prudent management to secure an early accomplishment of the important work. All which is respectfully submitted, and your committee beg leave to offer the following resolution—

JNO. B. SEIDENSTRICKER, } committee of SAMUEL HARKER, } first branch.
BERNARD COSKERY,

WILLIAM REANY, committee of second branch.

Resolved by the mayor and city council of Baltimore, That the mayor be and he is hereby authorised and directed to subscribe to the capital stock of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company, the sum of three millions of dollars, in the name of the mayor and city council of Baltimore—provided that the whole sum shall be exclusively applied to the prosecution of the work in an unbroken line from Harper's Ferry, or at such a point near that place as shall be selected from which the extension shall be made.

With all our crowding, we were compelled to omit three columns of the preceding table, on account of the length of the page. They do not affect the general results, but we shall mention them: 1st, the column of "foreign exchange," amounts only to $406 592 98—of which the U. bank of Louisiana had $248,934 21. 2d, of expenses, only $36,391 49, ranging from 15,000 dollars to 268—an unimportant affair. 3d, the "contingent fund," being $340,270 97, in all—of which $55,763 were in the bank of Virginia and its branches—and the remainder in 19 or 13 other establishments, in the rest of them, nothing.

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY H. NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

A large body of articles, prepared or in type, for the present publication, remains "over." We shall publish a supplement next week, to dispose of some of them.

We give an account of the riot that took place in the house of representatives on Sunday morning last, derived from various sources. They all partake more, much more, of a party character than we are accustomed to publish, and of one side, only, but generally agree in the main facts; and we have not seen any statement, drawn up by a friend of the other party. We regret this, and the whole occurrence. But the house relieved itself of a vast amount of censure on Tuesday—by referring the contested election back to the people.

POSTSCRIPT. The great improvement bill, before the legislature of Maryland, was defeated on Thursday last, by a solitary vote! It is hoped that this is not final—and that it may be reconsidered this day, probably the last of the session.

We have news from Europe 12 days later than our last accounts. The most important matter related is the execution of Fieschi and some of his associates—which was peaceably effected in five minutes.

On Monday last, at 11 o'clock, Elias Glenn, United States district judge for the state of Maryland, Nathaniel Williams, esq. United States district attorney, the marshal for the district, and the clerk of the court, waited upon Mr. Roger B. Taney, at his dwelling, and accompanied him thence to the circuit court room. The court was then opened, when judge Glenn proceeded, in presence of many members of the bar, and a number of citizens whom the occasion had called together, to administer to Mr. Taney his oath of office as chief justice of the United States court and presiding judge of this circuit.

Elias Glenn, esq. has resigned his office of judge of the district of Maryland, and it is supposed that his successor will be Upton S. Heath, esq.

At a meeting of the whig members of the legislature of Maryland, held on the 23d ult. the nomination of gen. Harrison, as president, and of Mr. Tyler, as vice president, was concurred in, and col. Pratt and Thomas Burchenal were nominated electors on the part of the state at large.

The Globe noticing and denying the correctness of a report published in the New York Star, "that Mr. Kendall, the post master general, advocated a proposition to lend the states, pro rata, the whole of the surplus revenue without interest," adds the following very gratifying information:

"We know that Mr. Kendall fully approves of the plan in Mr. Grundy's bill, of employing a portion of the revenue in purchasing from rail road companies, the right for the government to use them for the transportation of the mail, and for all other purposes of a public character.

"Such a disposition of a part of the public money on hand, we are satisfied, would prove more serviceable to the country than any other application which can be made of it."

Hallahan, who was convicted of being engaged in the late riots of the stevedores and ship laborers in New York, and also of an assault upon Mr Brink, the police officer, was on Saturday sentenced to seven years imprisonment in the state prison. The other individuals concerned in the riots were remanded to the next term.

The bill to indemnify the heirs of Mrs. Jane White for losses sustained during the war-mob of eighteen hundred and twelve, has been passed, by the legislature of Maryland.

Vol. L.—Sig. 6.

Among other "accidents," we see that the steamboat Benjamin Franklin exploded, on leaving the wharf, on the 13th ult. at Mobile, with the following horrible results—

5 men killed,
7 men missing,
21 men wounded.
33 total.

The locomotive, with a train of cars, on the Lexington and Ohio rail road, when within two miles of Frankfort, from some unknown cause, was thrown off the track, and the passenger cars hurled down a high embankment, whereby two persons were instantly killed, another died shortly after, and ten or twelve were wounded—the car being dashed to pieces.

A great steamboat, the Randolph, was burnt to the water's edge, (with a valuable cargo), near Nashville. She had 350 tons of goods on board, among them 23 packages for the Hermitage, the property of the president of the United States, and large supplies from the eastern cities, for the merchants of Nashville. The total loss is supposed to have exceeded 200,000 dollars. Two or three lives were lost, in consequence of the accident.

Two persons, named Crockett and Russell, were recently executed within the prison yard, at Boston, for the crime of arson—which offence has assumed a fearful aspect in that city.

The legislature of Virginia adjourned on Thursday last week. It will be marked by the "expunging resolutions," which were passed by it.

The legislature of Mississippi adjourned on Saturday, the 27th of February, to the first Monday in January next.

The incorporation of many banks and rail roads were made during the session—in all to the amount of seventeen millions of dollars. One of the most important bills passed is that establishing a penitentiary.

The legislature of Virginia has voted, unanimously, swords to the son of the late lieutenant colonel George Armistead of the U. S. A.—the gallant defender of Fort McHenry—and to captain A. F. Valette, of the U. S. navy, for his good conduct in the battle of Lake Champlain.

From Louisiana we have, in answer to inquiries made, received information of the true amount of the existing bank capital of that state, as lately increased. It is not so much as seventy millions, heretofore reported. The nominal bank capital of this state is, however, fifty-six millions, of which thirty-two millions have been paid in. The whole circulation upon this great capital is but six millions of dollars—less probably than the amount of specie in the vaults of the same banks. [Nat. Int.]

A storm is apparently brewing in Upper Canada—the people of the lower province have long been in a very "seditious" mood. The executive council have all resigned—because the "Algerine government," as it is called, that is the governor, "did not consult them in carrying on the government."

Died, at Washington, on the 22d ult. gen. Mountjoy Bailly, in his 82d year—an officer in the revolution.

It is said that Mr. Wilkins, our minister at St. Petersburg, is about to return home, his fortune and salary being too small to allow him to support the style and state of his brother ambassadors.

The brig Ark has arrived at the port of New York from London, has on board 1,788 bags wheat, 600 bags oats and 2,750 barrels flour!!!

The burning of the treasury office. The Baltimore Patriot of Saturday last, said—

For several months past, the treasury department has been in possession of information calculated to lead to the detection of the persons engaged in causing the destruction by fire, of the treasury office at Washington, about three years past. On Wednesday last a person was arrested in the city of New York, charged with firing the building with his own hands, hired to commit the act, as we have heard, by some of those who had committed frauds upon the pension office, which they wished to have destroyed, to screen their guilt. Other persons, we hear, before this, will have been arrested in the western part of New York, one in Vermont and another in Ohio. The person that was taken in New York was brought on yesterday in the steamboat line in charge of Mr. Blaney, the high constable of Philadelphia, Mr. Kelley, deputy marshal of Ohio, and Mr. Merritt, of the New York police. These officers left Baltimore this morning with their prisoner for Washington, where the trial is soon to take place.

And the National Intelligencer of Monday said—

It is now about three years since the destruction by fire of the treasury building, with the greater part of its contents. Never, perhaps, did so serious a public calamity, in any country, produce so little excitement, raise so little curiosity, or provoke so little censure of the government. The opposition press, slow to censure except where there is just ground for it, forbore accusation, because they saw nothing in the circumstances of the case to inculpate the administration. Of neglect of due care and precaution, there was sufficient evidence in the fact of the conflagration; but censure for that would have fallen upon subordinates, such as watchmen, &c. already sufficiently afflicted by the loss of their employments, and the censure was either withheld or sparingly bestowed.

Upon a vague suspicion of design being at the bottom of this fire, examination into the matter was made, by the proper authorities, at the instance of the executive; and, after full investigation, nothing appeared to justify the belief that the fire was not the result of accident.

Time, however, which is often the only test of truth to the senses of mortals, has disclosed circumstances which leave little doubt of this fire having been the work of a conspiracy of individuals, of whom some were directly, and others indirectly, instrumental in producing the conflagration. The matter has, we believe, been some time in the course of investigation: but, as secrecy was important to success in the pursuit of evidence and the criminals, we should have refrained from noticing it even now, were it not that the bringing to this city one of the persons implicated has been noticed in the Baltimore papers. Such an individual, arrested in the city of New York, arrived here on Saturday, in custody of several peace officers, and is now in confinement. Another, we have heard, is in confinement in Canada, and one or more others elsewhere. The evidence must be in some degree circumstantial. We have reason to think, however, that the whole inquiry will be brought to light and judicially established. The desire to destroy evidence in the public records will probably appear to have been the motive of this desperate action.

The N. Y. Courier and Enquirer, in speaking of the individual arrested on suspicion of having set fire to the treasury office at Washington, about three years ago, adds the following particulars:—

Since his apprehension, we understand, his wife has also been arrested in Sussex county, (N. J.) and a warrant granted by Judge Baldwin, at Philadelphia, to which city she has been conveyed for examination touching her knowledge of the affair. Three months since we were informed of all the circumstances connected with this business, but under an injunction of secrecy which prevented our giving them to the public as the injunction has not yet been entirely removed, we are only now at liberty to state, that three persons were concerned in the crime, to which they were instigated by an individual filling a high station in society, Judge Temple, whom our readers may recollect, committed suicide by shooting himself at his residence, in Rutland, Vermont, in consequence of a discovery having been made that he had defrauded the United States treasury to an immense amount, by means of forged claims for revolutionary pensions.

Finding that his fraud must inevitably be discovered, he engaged these persons under a promise of a large reward, to commit the arson, in the hope that the fire would destroy every trace of his guilt. In this, however, he was disappointed; the most valuable papers and vouchers of the treasury department were rescued from the flames, and amongst them the proofs of his delinquency.

Upwards of a year ago one of the incendiaries was arrested at Syracuse, in this state, by Mr. G. Finch, a police officer of Newark, N. J. on a charge of forgery committed on three of the banks at Philadelphia: but on his way to that city he contrived to elude the vigilance of the officer and made his escape. Knowing, however, that he must eventually be retaken, he made a virtue of necessity and voluntarily surrendered himself, under the hope of pardon, to secure which, he communicated to the police all the circumstances in relation to the burning of the treasury office at Washington, admitting that he was particeps criminis, and through his exertions, the actual incendiary and his other accomplice have been apprehended, and are now on their way to Washington.

The frigate Constellation, and the sloop of war St. Louis, came up from the navy yard on Wednesday last. We understand the sloop of war Warren will sail in a few days. Her present destination is Key West, at which place she will remain some time. It is very unfortunate that at this moment the government cannot command the services of a few small armed vessels, of a light draught of water, to cruise among the islands, bays and inlets of the peninsula. It was understood some time ago that the revenue cutters had been placed under the direction of commodore Dallas for this purpose. This appears now not to be the case; indeed, it is questionable whether they are suitable craft for such a service. They are generally sharp, and draw too much water; still, however, they might be employed to great advantage in cutting off all intercourse between the Indians and the fishermen of the West Indies, as well as in transporting troops from point to point along the peninsula. [Pensacola Gazette, March 12.]

The Baltimore Transcript of March 26th, says—

The detachment from the different military companies which left the city yesterday, under command of capt. Willey, for the scene of disturbance on the Susquehanna rail road, returned to the city last night. The cause of the disturbance, as stated yesterday, was a refusal on the part of some of the laborers to work without an advance of wages. They attempted also to prevent others who were satisfied with their wages from working. The result was a fight between the two parties. About 30 were taken prisoners; but on examination before a magistrate all were discharged except three. Two of these gave security for appearance, the other was brought to town and committed. The statement yesterday, that they had commenced tearing up the rails, proves to be incorrect.

There is much trouble in several of our large cities and manufacturing towns. The journeymen have had their strikes for higher wages—limiting them chiefly, or solely, by their own will—and the employers, in some instances, have associated and refused to give work to any persons belonging to a "Trades' Union," and even in some branches which have been free from "strikes"—that the workmen might not obtain the means of supporting one another. If these things are proceeded in, we must expect a serious arrest in the creations of wealth, and short supplies of articles produced by labor.

A deputation of twenty-seven Ottawa and Chippewa chiefs and delegates are now in Washington, for the purpose of treating for the cession of their lands within the state limits of Michigan. They have been kindly received by the president, who has referred the subject of their business to the secretary of war. We understand the portion of country which it is proposed to purchase, is of high value, and that it is probable a cession of it may be obtained on terms advantageous to them and to the United States.

We learn from Galena that John B. Smith, who shot Woodbury Massey, at Duquque's mines, last fall, and whose case was dismissed by a late circuit court held at Mineral Point, for want of jurisdiction, was shot down in Galena on the 13th ult. by Henry L. Massey, a younger brother of the deceased. Smith lingered a few days and died. Massey had left the country.

The Boston Traveller of Friday says, "the premium paid yesterday for the boxes at Tremont theatre, beyond the regular price, was the unparalleled sum of $1,241 50. It was the farewell benefit of Mrs. Wood."

It is said that the object of Mr. Jaudon, in visiting Europe, is to dispose of the obligations which the bank of the United States has received, from various institutions in the different states, for the sale of its branches. It is calculated that the bank may realize a premium upon these obligations, and that twenty millions of dollars will be brought into the country by the operation.

Mr. Leigh, in his speech at the late Richmond dinner, mentioned a curious circumstance, which must not a little embarrass Messrs. Benton, &c. The resolution of the senate, as it happens, is part on one page, and part on another. It had been proposed, he said, to get over the difficulty, by writing Ex- on one page, and Punged on the other! The announcement "set the table in a roar."

The bribery "bumbag" that was hatched at Philadelphia, (in which Gen. Krebs, of the senate, and a Mr. Conrad of the house figured so famously), has been brought to a close—as follows:

Harrisburgh, March 26, 1836. After some preliminary business, the house by a large vote, directed the speaker to reprimand Henry W. Conrad; whereupon Mr. C. rose, took his hat and walked out. Mr. McGiffin then moved that the sergeant-at-arms arrest Mr. C. instantly, which was carried unanimously.

With no little difficulty the sergeant-at-arms found Mr. Conrad, and brought him before the house for a reprimand. Conrad took the centre of floor, and told the speaker he wished it understood that he had been brought there by force. The speaker replied that he had heard the gentleman, and then delivered his reprimand. It was an excellent article, well written, strongly pointed, and extremely severe. Conrad winced, trembled, and turned, first to one side, and then to the other, and bit lips violently.

When the speaker had finished, Conrad asked if he was still in duress. The speaker replied, "the gentleman from Schuylkill can now take his seat as a member of the house." Conrad made no answer but walked out. The house have ordered the reprimand to be printed. Thus ends the bribery and corruption affair. [Phila. Herald.]

Another account says—

The speaker then called upon Mr. Conrad, and informed him, that the house had made it his duty to reprimand him. Mr. Conrad rose in his seat, and declared he never would be reprimanded and took his hat and left the hall.

Mr. McGiffin moved that the sergeant-at-arms bring him back instantly, which was agreed to nem. con. No sooner said than the sergeant-at-arms left the room, and the members flocked to the windows to see the fun. Conrad made sail for the land office, where he was overtaken by the fast running sergeant, and he hove too. He ran upon his toes, and declared with great energy that he never would be taken; but the pertinacious officer gives him directly to understand that he must weigh his anchor, and sail back, and take in more cargo. "Sir," said he, "you must come, for I am told by the speaker to take you." He paddled back, with great speed, and did not stop until on the floor of the house, when he called the speaker to notice that it had been done by force! The speaker then pronounced one of the severest reprimands I ever heard, when Conrad again left the house. He has brought suit against the speaker and sergeant-at-arms.

The report on the case, and the reprimand shall be published.

The Albany Advertiser says, there is a search making for the heirs of Hugh, John and Daniel Mosher, in this country, to whom an estate of 32 millions has recently descended in England.

New Orleans, March 10. Some of the hands on the new canal had a quarrel with the sailors on board of the schooner Napoleon, lying at the Julia street basin, on Tuesday; a fight between them was prevented by the interference of the captain—but yesterday morning they watched the departure of the vessel, and when she had gained the bridge, they seized her hauser, drew her to the shore and began beating the crew; one sailor escaped with some injury, and brought the news to the city. The city marshal went in pursuit of the rioters, but was drove off. It was reported that three men had been murdered; but we were unable to obtain any positive information. We understand that a part of the legion were ordered out to assist the police in apprehending the criminals.

March 11. The hands on board of the schooner Napoleon, who were assaulted by the laborers on the new canal on Tuesday, were only kilt, not killed. They are, we understand, in the hospital, very badly injured. Some means should be devised to put a stop to the outrages so frequently committed by this kind of gentry. [True American.]

The "National Intelligencer" of Tuesday last says—
The senate, it will be perceived, yesterday voted, by a large majority, to fix upon the 23d of May for the termination of the session. It was a saying of the famous Sam Patch, we believe, that "some things can be done as well as others." It is upon that principle, we suppose, assisted by a very natural anxiety on the part of the members to escape to their homes, that the senate has come to the conclusion that it will be possible to get through the mass of business upon the table of congress within less than sixty days. Most sincerely do we wish, however, that they may be able to accomplish an object so laudable and so desirable.

LATEST FROM ENGLAND. The packet ship François I, from Havre, via Plymouth, has arrived at New York, bringing London dates to the 15th February.

M. Semonosoff, first secretary of the Russian embassy at the court of St. James, had been appointed minister to the United States, and would soon sail direct for this country.

Lord Brougham is still in feeble health, at his seat, Brongham Hall. He does not, it is said, immediately contemplate the resumption of his parliamentary duties. In case of a division of the chancellorship, the present chancellor will be chancellor in equity, Lord Denman speaker of the lords, and sir Jno. Campbell, chief justice.

The future king of Portugal, accompanied by prince Augustus, of Saxe Cobourg and count Lavradio, arrived at Brussels on the 9th.

Nearly all the English and French journals are excluded from the Russian reading rooms.

A new treaty of commerce is spoken of between England and France.

The emperor of Russia has confiscated more of the Polish estates.

There has been another battle between marshal Clausel and Abdel Kader.

Paris, Feb. 13. It is now suspected at the Tuileries, where the elopement has given much displeasure, that prince Charles of Naples and Miss Smith have sailed for the United States. In their flight the prince has assumed the name of Mr. Richard O'Connor, and his fair companion that of Mrs. O'Connor. There is with him a genuine Mr. O'Connor, whose family has been since desired to quit Naples. A courier, who is also of the party, goes by the name of Mr. Archibald O'Connor. It is said that lady S—, well known in your fashionable circles, has had a prominent share in this love affair, and that Miss Smith must have obtained a mighty sway over his highness of Padua, if she could have prevailed upon him to venture across the Atlantic. [Morning Post.]

Saturday and Sunday's proceedings in the house of representatives are briefly noticed under the congressional head, as being, perhaps, the most disorderly and disgraceful of any that ever happened in that too often uproarious body. The session lasted until half past four on Sunday morning. We promised some further notice of it, and select the following—as affording the best sketches of it that can be obtained; and it is only a sketch, the reality having gone far beyond it. But the history deserves a record—and a one-sided one is all that can be had. It is remarkable, that the main points are agreed in, by the several accounts.

From the National Intelligencer of Monday last—

We need only to direct the reader's attention to the reporter's minutes of the proceedings of the house of representatives on Saturday last. On Saturday, did we say? The sitting extended to more hours on the Sabbath morning than the house usually sits on week-days. And all for what? Why, in a case purely judicial, to prevent one of the parties from taking testimony which he is ready to make oath will indisputably establish his right. Was such a thing ever before heard of? Which may be answered by another question: Did it ever before happen that, on the eve of a presidential election expected to depend upon the house of representatives, the seat of a member was contested, by ousting whom, the vote of an entire state, and by that means possibly the aggregate vote of all the states represented in the house, would be changed?

From the Baltimore Chronicle of Tuesday.

We have, heretofore, intimated, that the members of the house of representatives were spending their time most unprofitably to the nation, if not disreputably to themselves. The scenes which occurred in the house on Saturday night and Sunday morning last, confirm our impressions, and indicate that the greatest service the members could render to their country would be to adjourn.

The North Carolina contested election was the exciting subject on the above occasion. It is a war waged against the sitting member upon party grounds, as, by ejecting him, it is hoped to obtain the vote of North Carolina for Mr. Van Buren, should the election go to the house. * * *

It is an evil that the house is so numerous. A smaller body would act with greater promptness and less quarrelling. But the propensity to make long speeches upon every trivial occasion, is a greater evil. This might possibly be remedied by limiting the sessions of congress—for it is notorious, that, at the long sessions, nearly three-fourths of the time is consumed in the declamation of demagogues, upon subjects foreign to legitimate legislation. Our house of representatives begins to resemble the national assemblies of revolutionary France, in indecent denunciations, abusive epithets, and noise and confusion. The national character is degraded by such proceedings, and they should be condemned by the press and by the people, without distinction of party. Brawling babblers should be silenced, or lashed into respectful deportment, and the business of the nation should be prosecuted. It is with the people to control their representatives, and we hope that the latter will be taught that, to secure public favor they must deserve it by an honest discharge of their duty.

The Washington Telegraph of Tuesday says—

At about twelve, Mr. Lawler moved an adjournment, because it was the Sabbath. Upon this the yeas and noes were ordered, and upon Mr. Adams refusing to vote, Mr. Wise reported him to the chair. Mr. Polk quoted precedents where the house had sat on the Sunday. Mr. Adams said they were not analogous—then great national concerns were before the house, and congress was on the eve of a final adjournment, and the good of the country demanded the departure from the general rule and custom of the house; now it was engaged in a subject that could easily be postponed, and it was improper thus to urge the question upon the Sabbath.

Mr. Beardsley moved that the gentleman from Massachusetts be excused from voting, because of the reasons he had given.

This roused up the eagle of Massachusetts. He was in a terrible rage. He did not want the house to excuse him—he would not vote, unless the house said explicitly that it had control of the consciences of members. "He had a conscience, Mr. Speaker, but he did not appeal to it every day."

Mr. Peyton, of Tennessee, now rose and threw out his grappling irons upon the unfortunate attorney general of N. York. He ridiculed his conscience. That gentleman had on the "last night" of last session voted exactly as Mr. Adams refused to do, and now forsooth he was for spreading the mantle of his conscience over the honorable member from Massachusetts. The attorney seemed conscience-stricken, and looked pale as a winding sheet.

Mr. Bynum, the gentlemen who has been dubbed the champion of the majority, thundered forth in succession to Peyton. He knocked the poor minority about the head until Wise could stand it no longer, and finding a giant employed in boxing the ears of his friends, deemed it expedient to stretch forth his arm and lash the greater body; and he laid on in fine style, I should say. He told them they were not questioning the right of the sitting member, but were only waiting the opportunity to eject him from the house—to turn him out. He gave the party a terrible scoring indeed; so much so, that the target took it all as personally directed to himself; and when Mr. Wise had finished, he (Mr. Bynum) rose in a wrath that shook his sides and beat against his heart, like the lava of Vesuvius against the ribs of its mountainous prison. He brandished his arm and fist attached thereto, high in the air, and proclaimed in a voice like a lion's that the gentleman from Virginia, tho' he was a bully, should not bully him.

Wise rose, and leaning over and looking as if he was seeking for some object of very diminutive size, "I bully that gentleman, Mr. Speaker. Why, sir?" (smiling), "I would as soon think of bullying a fly."

Scoundrel! screamed Bynum, moving from his seat. The house was as still as death, when Wise again rose, calmer than ever, as collected, and looking towards the gentleman from North Carolina, said—"you are a rascal—a pitiful and contemptible puppy."

Here great cries of order rose from the fully awakened members, and when comparative peace was restored, general Mercer of Virginia, rose to explain the circumstances that had gradually led the two gentlemen to their present painful point. He said that the member from North Carolina had mistaken the object of his colleague (Mr. Wise) who, in characterizing the majority of the house, certainly did not mean to level his remarks personally to the gentleman. That he had seen them in social conversation a short time before, and they could not intend deliberately to characterise each other with the epithets used between them.

Several other gentlemen followed Mr. Mercer in his attempt to restore peace and tranquillity between the antagonist parties. And upon motion, the house unanimously imposed upon the two members its solemn injunction to lay their animosity aside, and remember, what they seemed to have forgotten, that they were members of the congress of the United States.

General Thompson, of South Carolina (the brave and the generous, and ever the first to head the quarrels of others), proposed that if neither member objected to this process of the house, it would be a tacit pledge that they would not prosecute the difficulty further, it evidently having arisen from the high and painful excitement of party feelings, without any predisposed intention of insulting each other.

Neither member objected. Then Bynum rose, and said that he certainly had applied the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia as personal; and having found that it was an erroneous impression, he regretted (or some such qualifying word) that he had used offensive language to that gentleman. Mr. Wise spoke upon the subject, and having reviewed the whole affair in a calm and dignified manner, said that an epithet (bully) had been applied to him, which he despised, and which no one should make to him without receiving the proper response. He did not deserve it, and would never, here or elsewhere, permit it to be used. He then made proper and manly explanations.

* * * Never was there such a scene—never one so disgusting in all its details.

A correspondent of the Baltimore Chronicle of Wednesday, has a long letter on this eventful night—we make a few extracts:

But still Mr. Graves, of Kentucky, went on, cutting up the arguments of Bynum, Hawes and Hamer, who preceded him, and lashing the party in general, in capital style. Some of the more respectable of the administration party began to grow tired and disgusted—perhaps too, they felt they had burned their own fingers. General Mason, of Virginia, tried an appeal to the sympathies of his allies. He said the sitting member was indisposed—that he wished to address the house; and therefore he hoped the rules would be suspended so as to make this subject the special order for Monday. He thought his friends would have compassion for a sick man, whose rights were at stake. He was mistaken. The motion was rejected by a clamorous chorus of noes. Graves went on. Several motions were made to adjourn and successively rejected. Graves went on, and evinced a spirit and energy unexhausted and inexhaustible. He bore himself nobly. Some time afterwards, Mr. Garland, of La. repeated the motion made by Mason. It was clamored down! Graves proceeded. He had occasion to refer to a document as an integral part of his argument, and, as is usual, sent it to the chair to be read. The chair said it should be read, if not objected to. Some voices raised a cry of "object!" "object!" The chair—"It is objected to." Graves, with great energy, "let the objector rise in his place." Up sprung Cambreleng, and, "I object, sir."

Graves, with immense vehemence, "I am glad the gentleman has snowed himself; and let the eyes of the house and the country be fixed upon him!" "Order! order!" was here cried out from various parts of the house—but Graves was not to be arrested by this obstacle. He asked a suspension of the rules, and Cambreleng could not get a majority to follow him into the mire of party meanness, into which he had himself plunged, with so much alacrity. Permission was given, and the document was read. Graves went on! The minority were in high spirits—the majority had become fierce and savage, and more determined not to break up without consummating the immolation of their victim. Our glorious little band beat them in their tactics. Graves suddenly and unexpectedly gave way; and before a single man of the party could get up, Mr. Calhoun, of Ky. obtained the floor, and was in full sail on the current of debate. The party were equally enraged and astonished at this feat—so much so, that when Mr. Calhoun yielded temporarily for an adjournment, which motion was negatived, Cushman, of N. H. a P. Q. [previous question] man, contested the floor with Mr. Calhoun, and moved the previous question! The chair declared Calhoun to be in possession of the floor. Cushman adventured so far as even to appeal from the decision—but there were immediately so many murmurs of "too bad! too bad!" from the more respectable of his associates, that he withdrew his appeal.

Mr. Mercer next arose and began an argument against the continuing the sitting on the Sabbath, when he was assailed by those indecent shouts of "order!" "order!" which had been already heard so frequently. Mr. Mercer paused and looked upon the noisy rabble with an expression of infinite disdain. "I am in order! I am about to submit a motion that the gentleman from Massachusetts be not required to vote; and as my remarks are pertinent and proper, I shall not submit to be interrupted thus." He was again interrupted by the noise in the hall. I know no way to indicate it, except by calling it howling. Mr. Mercer raised his voice high above the discordant cries. "I am here to protect a friend from oppression, against most unparalleled and monstrous injustice. I am not for leaving the hall. I will spill my blood on this floor before I will stir an inch, so long as I can be of service in protecting his rights." He then referred to Graham's application for further time, so that he might address the house—his sickness and agitation of mind; spoke severely of this wanton and unprecedented violation of the Sabbath, and concluded with moving to adjourn. This motion was lost of course. Mr. Bynum then took the floor, and commenced to assail the minority in the fiercest manner. He denounced their conduct in opposing the majority so strenuously, as revolting! monstrous! tending to revolution and rebellion!!! He continued in this strain some time, becoming more and more vehement. At last, he wound up with the assertion, that if the minority should persist in their efforts, the majority would be obliged to call in the aid of the military at the disposal of the executive, to support their decrees. So: the last reason of kings is to be among the first with the democratic party of America. Shades of Sidmouth and Castlereagh, hide your diminished heads. We have men calling themselves republicans and democrats, who have it in their breasts to beat your tyranny and bloody proscription quite out of the field.

Can it be wondered at, that after such a declaration from a man speaking the sentiments of the majority, the minority should feel that their rights were not to be trampled under foot, crushed, ridden over by system. Such, doubtless, was the feeling of our gallant and independent band. Their free spirits rose against this monstrous arrogance and injustice. They soon found a voice in one worthy to speak for freemen—Henry

A. Wise. He rose and in his very first sentence, was most forcible and eloquent. He denounced the conduct of the majority for sitting on God's holy day to do an unholy act! "Why," he continued, "are you here after three o'clock in the morning, but to prostrate yourselves at the footstool of power? Why are you here, sir, I will tell you sir! The order has come, you must do your work quick. We do not want you here. Push through your appropriation bills therefore and go home. Some of you speak too many plain truths! Sir, has it not been said in a high quarter, that our chairman of ways and means had better put on petticoats and go back to New York, if he does not get through the appropriation bills more quickly."

The speaker. "Order, the gentleman's remarks are irrelevant."

Mr. Wise. "I will try and be mindful of irrelevancy. I will remember the word to the day of my death. It cannot be disguised, that the work is to be done! And Sabbath is no reason at the palace for not servilely sitting to do that work."

He then proceeded to comment on the language used by Mr. Bynum towards the minority. He repelled that gentleman's charges—reminded the house of the maxim, that majorities may vote and minorities debate—and protested against the terms used towards those who resisted power. Mr. Wise then assumed a still bolder tone. "But," said he, "while you have this unjust, tyrannical, relentless majority, it is also the most imbecile, and most driving majority that ever disgraced this country."

Here Bynum rose and called Mr. Wise to order—and now commenced a personal scene, which it is impossible to think of without pain—but which naturally grew out of the conduct of the majority. Mr. Wise admitted he had indulged in considerable latitude of remark, but since the speaker had allowed the gentleman from North Carolina to go so much out of the question, he thought it extraordinary that so orderly a person should interpose. Here Bynum sprang up in infinite wrath, and again called him to order; proceeding to speak himself with earnestness, and also the incoherence which passion gives to some men. I understood him to say he would not be reflected upon—that he had not alluded to Wise, and he (Wise), might bully others, but should not bully him, that he was ready for him here or elsewhere. All this was said with the most bravado air imaginable.

Now, in order to understand the effect of this upon Mr. Wise, it is proper to mention, that attempts have been made in certain quarters, to produce the impression that Mr. Wise was bold to attack some men, but afraid of others. An article appeared a short time ago in a Virginia paper, directly impugning his courage, and pointing Mr. Bynum as a person who would answer to a call from him at any time. Many of the "party" have repeated it here. I have heard it banded about from one to another. Was it not natural for Wise, in a moment of excitement, to leap at once to the conclusion, that this person had been pushed on to urge him to a quarrel? Such I doubt not was the thought that flashed across his mind. He was roused, too, by the epithet bully—odious to every honorable mind. He replied in a tone of infinite contempt, "The gentleman talks of my bullying him—I would as soon think of bullying a fly!"

Bynum again called him to order: Wise demanded that the words should be taken down. Bynum repeated something like them, but with an abatement of the ebullizony—he did not repeat the contemptuous phrase. Wise denied his version was correct, and repeated the words as I have given them. Bynum grew more angry than before. He actually raved, this time. "Order!" cried the speaker! rap! rap! rap! "order!" "order!" shout the members—but Bynum went on—the uproar and confusion became immense—the speaker vociferating to quell it—but in vain. Bynum talked louder and louder of Wise bullying others but not bullying him—he would not be insulted—the gentleman might call upon him out of the house—all this amidst the yells of "order!" Now, Wise seeing Bynum assume this attitude cut him short at once, by clenching his fist, shaking it directly at him, and saying in a deep forcible tone—"You d—d little rascal!"—those only in the immediate vicinity heard this—Bynum, immediately cried at the top of his voice, clenching his fist—"You d—d scoundrel!" repeating the words two or three times amidst the greatest uproar. Both the members rushed towards each other but were held back by their friends. The speaker—who had endeavored in vain to quell the commotion—said he would call in the aid of the sergeant-at-arms, and threatened to leave the chair. A motion was made to adjourn, and a majority of voices sustained it, but Mr. Mercer implored the house not to adjourn in the present state of feeling.

Most fortunately they did not. Had they adjourned, I fear blood would have been spilt before day-break. Nay, if there had been a general contest terminating in the forcible expulsion of one party from the house, and the breaking up of congress, it would have been quite in character with the monstrous doctrines and practice of the majority during that day.

Mr. Mercer addressed the house, and Bynum and Wise, particularly, in the most feeling and impressive manner, and called upon them to give pledges to the house that they would not pursue this matter farther. Several other members added their solicitations to the same effect. After some further proceedings, Mr. Bynum and Mr. Wise both explained, and the matter was adjusted.

A CARD.

We have seen with regret, that the unpleasant altercation between Messrs. Bynum and Wise has found its way into the newspapers. We will not do any thing that may in any way revive the unpleasant feelings which that controversy excited; we therefore forbear to give any of the details of that unpleasant scene. But as we have been referred to as having had some agency in its amicable adjustment, we take pleasure in expressing our own opinion, and as we believe, the unanimous opinion of the house, that both the gentlemen referred to behaved throughout with the most high spirit, and that it was adjusted to the perfect honor of both parties—more so indeed than if either had attempted to press it farther.

RR. M. JOHNSON,
C. F. MERCER,
WADSWORTH THOMPSON,
FRANCIS THOMAS.

March 31, 1836.

TWENTY-FOURTH CONGRESS—FIRST SESSION. SENATE.

March 25. After other business—

The resolution offered yesterday by Mr. Calhoun was taken up and considered, and a discussion ensued, in which Mr. Calhoun, Mr. Shepley, Mr. Benton, Mr. Clayton and Mr. Walker took part.

Mr. Shepley moved to lay the resolution on the table. Mr. Calhoun asked for the yeas and nays, which were ordered.

The question was then taken on the motion to lay the resolution on the table, and decided as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Cuthbert, Ewing, of Illinois, Hendricks, Hill, Hubbard, King, of Ga. King, of Alab. Linn, Morris, Nicholas, Niles, Rives, Robinson, Shepley, Tallmadge, Walker, Wall, Wright—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Black, Calhoun, Clay, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing, of Ohio, Kent, Knight, Mangum, Moore, Robbins, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson, White—15.

On motion of Mr. Clay, it was ordered that when the senate adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday.

The bill for the relief of the corporations of the District of Columbia having been read the third time,

Mr. Morris asked for the yeas and nays, which were ordered.

The question was then taken on the passage of the bill, and decided as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Clay, Crittenden, Cuthbert, Ewing, of Ill. Ewing, of Ohio, Kent, King, of Alabama, King, of Georgia, Linn, Nicholas, Porter, Preston, Rives, Robbins, Southard, Tallmadge, Walker—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Black, Calhoun, Hill, Hubbard, Morris, Niles, Shepley, Swift, Tomlinson, Wright—10.

So the bill was passed, and sent to the house of representatives for concurrence.

The bill to authorise the Bloomingdale and Leavenworth railroad company to construct a road through the public lands, was taken up, amended, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and the bill was ordered to be printed in its amended form.

On motion of Mr. Ewing, of Ohio, the senate proceeded to consider the bill to extend the time for issuing scrip certificates on U. States military land warrants. After some discussion, Mr. Clay moved a provision, limiting the amount of lands to be granted by this bill to 20,000 acres.

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

After some time spent in consideration of another bill concerning lands, the senate, without concluding, adjourned.

March 28. After the presentation of petitions, &c.

Mr. Morris, pursuant to notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to reduce the price of the public lands, &c.; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading. Mr. Southard offered the following resolution; which lies over, under the rule, for consideration:

Resolved, That the postmaster general be directed to report to the senate whether the cause of the discrepancy of $40,470 91, stated in the report of the accountants to the committee of the senate, dated March 30, 1835, as then existing in the accounts of the treasurer of the general post office, has been discovered, and the said accounts finally adjusted; and if so, further to report the cause of the said discrepancy, and who was the occasion thereof, and whether the balance, if any, has been paid.

Mr. Clayton earnestly called the attention of the senate to the bill on the files to establish a territorial government in Wisconsin, and moved that the senate do now postpone all the previous orders for the purpose of taking up that bill. He proceeded at some length to explain the importance of speedy action on this subject, and in the course of his remarks, urging the action of the senate, he observed that there was now no law to restrain, punish or prevent crime in that part of the territory not embraced in the act of the 20th of January, 1833, to provide for the appointment of an additional judge for the Michigan territory.

The committee on the judiciary had recently received intelligence that, six want of law to punish these murderers, one of them had been a few weeks since deliberately shot down in the public streets of the town of Dubuque, and was dying when the person who communicated this intelligence was writing his letter. [The delegate of the territory, who was standing near, observed that he was since dead.] Mr. C. observed that congress ought not any longer to permit this state of things to exist. One of the largest and most fertile portions of our country was, by the neglect of congress, permitted to remain the scene of lawless violence, where private vengeance was the substitute for public justice. Let us act on this subject, therefore, sir, (said he), promptly, and if we do our duty towards this noble territory, the day is not distant when it will be made to appear, (as the committee which reported this bill has already declared), that it is capable of supporting the population of an empire. Mr. Clayton's motion was then put and carried, and the bill was taken up for consideration.

When Mr. C. concluded, the amendment he offered was adopted by the committee of the whole, and the bill was then ordered to be endorsed for a third reading without a division.

The joint resolution, fixing on the 30th of May as the day for the adjournment of the two houses, was taken up.

Mr. King, of Alabama, moved to lay the resolution on the table, but withdrew his motion.

Mr. Crittenden moved to strike out the 30th, and insert 20th. Mr. Mangum called for the yeas and nays, which were ordered.

After a brief discussion,

Mr. Clayton moved to lay the resolution on the table; which was negative—yeas 11, nays 30.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. Crittenden to strike out "30th," and insert "20th," and decided as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Black, Calhoun, Clay, Crittenden, Ewing, of Ill. Hill, Hubbard, King, of Geo. Knight, Leigh, McKean, Mangum, Moore, Morris, Nicholas, Porter, Prentiss, Preston, Rives, Robinson, Southard, Buchanan, Clayton, Cuthbert, Davis, Ewing, of Ohio, Grundy, Hendricks, Kent, King, of Ala. Niles, Robbins, Ruggles, Shepley, Swift, Tallmadge, Tomlinson, Walker, Wall, White, Wright—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Buchanan, Clayton, Cuthbert, Davis, Ewing, of Ohio, Grundy, Hendricks, Kent, King, of Ala. Niles, Robbins, Ruggles, Shepley, Swift, Tallmadge, Tomlinson, Walker, Wall, White, Wright—21.

The chair gave the casting vote in the negative.

Mr. Clay moved to amend the resolution by striking out 30th, and insert 23d, and asked for the yeas and nays, which were ordered.

The question was then taken on this proposition, and determined as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Black, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing, of Ill. Ewing, of Ohio, Hill, Hubbard, King, of Georgia, Knight, Leigh, McKean, Mangum, Moore, Morris, Nicholas, Porter, Prentiss, Preston, Rives, Robinson, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson, Walker, Wall—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Buchanan, Cuthbert, Grundy, Hendricks, Kent, King, of Ala. Niles, Robbins, Ruggles, Shepley, Tallmadge, White, Wright—14.

So the blank was filled with the words "Monday, the 23d of May."

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to—yeas 34, nays 8. Mr. Clayton stated that as the expunging resolution had been laid on the table at his suggestion, he would now move to take it up for consideration, as the senator from Virginia (Mr. Leigh) was then in his seat.

The motion was agreed to, and the resolution being under consideration,

Mr. Rives addressed the senate at length, in support of the resolution, and in reply to the senator from Louisiana.

Mr. Leigh said he would reply to his colleague; and unless any other gentleman wished to proceed, he would move that the resolution, the discussion of which he had not anticipated as likely to come on during his absence from his seat, should be laid on the table, promising to call it up as soon as he should have had time to examine the authorities.

The resolution was then laid on the table.

Various resolutions and unfavorable reports lying on the table were considered and adopted. And several bills passed.

The bill requiring the government and the post office department to make specie payments where the amount due is under $20, and payments on the spot equivalent to specie, in all cases, was taken up in committee of the whole.

After some debate, in which Messrs. Benton, Wright, Buchanan and Davis participated,

Mr. Buchanan moved to strike out §20, and insert §10.

The discussion was then renewed; and, before any final disposition of the bill,

On motion of Mr. Mangum, the senate adjourned.

March 29. A variety of business was attended to, to-day, and many bills disposed of.

The senate proceeded to consider a bill to establish the northern boundary line of Ohio, and to provide for the admission of the state of Michigan.

This bill produced a discussion, in which Mr. Benton, Mr. Clayton, Mr. Hendricks and Mr. Wright participated. Before the debate had terminated,

Mr. Tipton moved that the senate adjourn, but the motion was withdrawn.

The subject was then postponed until to-morrow; and,

On motion of Mr. Davis, the senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

After remaining some time with closed doors, the senate adjourned.

March 30. Mr. Grundy reported, with some amendments from the committee on the post office and post roads, the bill authorising contracts to be made between the post office department and the rail road companies, and the bill was made the special order for this day week.

Mr. Tomlinson, from the committee on pensions, to whom it was referred to inquire whether under any existing law, the pensions due to individuals could be stopped for the payment of debts due to the United States, reported a bill to prohibit any such construction of the laws in existence—which bill was read and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. Clay reported from the committee on foreign relations, with sundry amendments, a bill from the house to carry into effect the convention between Spain and the United States, and these amendments were ordered to be printed.

Mr. Benton rose to give notice, that he should to-morrow ask leave to introduce a bill making provision for the better supplying of the United States with bullion.

Many bills were passed.

The senate resumed the consideration of the special order, being the bill to establish the northern boundary line of Ohio, and to provide for the admission of Michigan into the union.

Mr. Tipton made some observations against the bill.

Mr. Buchanan at some length, advocated the principles of the bill and defended its details.

Mr. Ewing (of Ohio) replied to Mr. Buchanan and moved to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting words, and inserting a substitute corresponding with the bill to establish the northern boundary line of Ohio, which passed the senate, (introduced by Mr. Ewing), some weeks ago.

Mr. Wright proposed an amendment requiring the ratification of the condition by convention instead of by the legislature of the new state.

March 31. Mr. Morris rose to present a preamble and resolutions adopted by the legislature of Ohio, instructing their senators in congress to vote in favor of the expunging resolution.

On presenting these resolutions, Mr. Morris made some remarks which drew forth a reply from Mr. Ewing, and Mr. Morris and Mr. Ewing having mutually rejoined, the resolutions were laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Linn presented resolutions of a similar character, which had been passed by the legislature of Missouri, which were also laid on the table.

Other business was attended to, which is not immediately interesting.

The bill to admit the territory of Michigan into the union as a state, and for other purposes, was taken up and further considered. The question being on the amendment offered by Mr. Wright, making the admission conditional on the compliance of a convention of delegates, elected by the people of Michigan, with the provisions of the bill.

Mr. Southard addressed the senate at length in opposition to the bill, and gave way to a motion to adjourn; which being withdrawn,

Mr. Hendricks moved two amendments to the bill, which were understood further to prescribe and regulate the action of Michigan and its convention in regard to the preliminaries required for its admission into the union.

The amendments were ordered to be printed; and then, on motion of Mr. Naudain, the senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Friday, March 25. After some preparatory business—

Mr. Hall, of Vermont, from the committee on the post office and post roads, asked leave to make a report on behalf of the minority of that committee, on that part of the president's message relative to incendiary publications.

On rising, Mr. Hall said it was proper he should precede the report he was about to submit with a brief statement. About the first or second week of the session, when the president's message was disseminated by the resolutions of the gentleman from New York (Mr. Beardsley), so much of it as related to the post office department, including the subject of incendiary publications, was referred to the committee on the post office and post roads. The committee took the subject into immediate consideration, and in the course of some two or three weeks came to the conclusion, by a vote of 6 to 3 in favor of the constitutionality and expediency of legislation, to restrain the mail circulation of these publications. The committee then proceeded to discuss various bills proposed by different members of the committee, and continued the discussion from week to week, and time to time, until about three weeks since, when a majority not being able to agree on any mode of legislation, the whole subject was, by vote of the majority, laid on the table of the committee, with the view as he (Mr. H.) understood of waiting the action of the senate, and getting further light on the subject.

Mr. H. said he did not complain of this decision of the committee, and he was ready to accord to the majority the same upright motives which he would claim for himself. They doubtless supposed there was a reasonable probability of their eventually coming to an agreement. But, believing as he did that the more light gentlemen got, the more difficultly they would find in agreeing on a bill, he could not help considering the subject as disposed of for the session. Whether that were the case or not, the minority of the committee, having come to the conclusion that congress possessed no constitutional power to pass any law on the subject, were through with their inquiries, had completed their investigation, and were ready to report. And the nature of their report could not be affected by any future action, or want of action, of the majority. This report of the minority was now, and must continue to be, that congress had no power to act on the subject.

Mr. H. said the position of the minority was very peculiar. The subject referred to the committee was one of great interest. The president, in his message, had recommended legislation to congress; his argument, the argument of the postmaster general, and that of a distinguished senator, the chairman of a committee of another body, all in favor of legislation, had been printed, laid on our tables, and read by every member. In this hall not a word, not a whisper had been heard in opposition to the principles thus promulgated. In the face of this official array of ingenious argument, the minority, acting under the oath they had taken to support the constitution of the United States, had felt it to be their imperative duty to oppose in committee every form of legislation which had been proposed. Under these circumstances, they felt that their position was one of much responsibility; that their course of action, and perhaps their motives, were liable to misapprehension, misconception, possibly to unjust imputation. It was for the purpose of justifying themselves to the house for the course they had felt it their duty to take that he sent to the chair a statement of their views, and would ask permission of the house that it be laid on the table and printed. Mr. H. said he only desired further to say that the report of the minority did not go into an examination of the character of the publications specified in the message, but was an argument to show that, whatever might be their character, congress had no constitutional power over them.

Mr. Connor objected to the reception of the report, as a proceeding before unheard of. The majority of the committee had not doubted the possibility of preparing a proper bill, but had differed as to its details. "They would, he hoped, be able to report a bill in a few days.

Messrs. Speight and Williams also objected to the reception of the report.

Mr. Hall moved a suspension of the rules to enable him to present the report; which motion was not agreed to.

Many other reports were received and disposed of—when the house resumed the consideration of the report of the committee on elections on the subject of the North Carolina contested election.

The question being on the following resolution reported from the committee on elections:

Resolved, That James Graham is not entitled to a seat in this house, and that David Newland is entitled to a seat in this house.

Mr. Graham moved the following amendment: strike out all after the word "Resolved," and insert—

That the depositions which have been communicated to the house by the speaker, and laid on the table, since the report of the committee on elections was made, whenever taken on due notice, may be received by the house as testimony in this case, (concluding with the names of the voters).

And a debate commenced that continued until the adjournment of the house.

Saturday, March 23. The morning business being disposed of—

The house resumed the consideration of the report of the committee on elections on the subject of the North Carolina contested election.

[And thereupon commenced a long and ardent and tumultuous and fiery discussion, which lasted until half past four o'clock on Sunday morning. We cannot follow even the meagre sketches of the proceedings given—nor are they of any use; but have mentioned some of them in another place. The house had "resolved itself" into a "bear garden." It was, perhaps, by far the most disgraceful scene ever exhibited in the house of representatives. The yeas and nays were frequently called, and many questions decided—the object of one party being to force the previous question, and of the other to shove it off. The finale to the proceedings is thus given.]

Mr. Adams said I deny the right of this house to make me vote on the Sabbath day.

Mr. Hawes said he hoped the gentleman from Massachusetts would be excused from voting, and made that motion.

Mr. Adams replied, sir, I do not ask to be excused.

Mr. Hawes withdrew his motion.

Mr. Lawler moved an adjournment, and thereupon the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. J. Q. Adams having been called, and not answering to his name,

Mr. Wise rose, and said: I inform the house that the gentleman from Massachusetts is in his seat, and has not answered to his name. I wish to know whether the house has the right to compel a member to vote, under present circumstances.

The chair replied that there was no power in the chair to compel a member to vote, and he referred to precedents to show that the house had never undertaken to exercise that power.

Mr. Wise said his object was to ascertain whether the house would or would not compel its members to take part in legislative proceedings, against their conscience, on the Sabbath.

The chair said the proper time for raising the question was after the roll had been called through.

The call having been finished, and many members, who were present, having refused to answer to their names, before the result was announced,

Mr. Wise renewed the question.

The chair read the 28th rule, as follows: "Every member who shall be in the house when the question is put, shall give his vote, unless the house, for special reasons, shall excuse him," and remarked that the chair possessed no power to compel members to vote. In the most extraordinary case of this kind that had ever occurred, the subject was discussed by the house, and, after various propositions had been made in reference to the course of the member refusing to vote, the whole subject was finally laid on the table. It was requisite, in the present case, that some specific proposition should be made to the house.

Mr. Beardsley proposed that the gentleman from Massachusetts be excused from voting, on the ground that he has conscientious scruples against taking part in the business of the house on the Sabbath.

Mr. J. Q. Adams said he wished to repeat what he had said. He did not desire to be excused, for he had done nothing which required to be excused. He had refused to answer to his name when called, but he did not put his refusal entirely upon the ground that the gentleman from New York had chosen to take for him. In cases of great public necessity, he was willing to legislate on the Sabbath, but he denied the right of the house to compel its members to take a part in business, upon ordinary occasions, on the Sabbath day. Mr. A. stated and supported his views on this point at length.

After some very earnest remarks from Mr. Peyton, in reference to the course taken by the majority of the house, and some explanations and remarks from Mr. Beardsley, the latter withdrew his motion to excuse the gentleman from Massachusetts from voting.

After various proceedings, and some discussion, in which Messrs. Mercer and Bynum took part,

Mr. Wise moved that the gentleman from Massachusetts be required to vote, for the purpose of testing the sense of the house upon the question whether a member could be compelled to sit here, at three o'clock on the morning of the Sabbath, for the purpose of doing an unholty act of party. Mr. W. extended his remarks in support of this motion to some length.

Mr. Bynum called the gentleman from Virginia to order in the course of his remarks on the conduct of the majority, and some conversation of a personal nature took place between those gentlemen.

There being much confusion and excitement in the house, Mr. Connor moved an adjournment.

Mr. Thomas said he was compelled to call the yeas and nays on this question, and added, the house must not adjourn in this state.

Mr. Mercer. I implore the house not to adjourn. It ought not to adjourn.

The motion to adjourn having been withdrawn,

Mr. Mercer addressed the house in an impressive manner, and at some length, in regard to its duties to the individual members who had been brought into a painful personal collision, and cited precedents from the history of the house of commons, which, in his opinion, ought to govern the conduct of this house on the present occasion. He suggested a course by which the unhappy difficulty would be adjusted in a manner mutually satisfactory and honorable to both parties.

Messrs. Peyton, Thomas, R. M. Johnson, Adams, C. Allan, Patton, Thompson, of S. C. and Howard sustained the appeal of the gentleman from Virginia, with a view to procure a reconciliation between the parties before the house adjourned.

After some further proceedings in the course of which Messrs. Bynum and Wise, having simultaneously risen, made mutual explanation in regard to what had passed,

Mr. Davis rose, and said that, regarding the controversy as having been adjusted, he moved to suspend the rules for the purpose of making the subject of the North Carolina contested election the special order of the day for Monday, after one o'clock, and Tuesday, after twelve o'clock, which was agreed to, and the motion indicated was offered and agreed to.

Mr. Wise withdrew his motion in regard to the course of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

And, at half past four o'clock, A. M. the house adjourned.

Monday, March 28. The resolutions of the legislature of Kentucky, with the motion to commit them, with instructions to report a bill, to the committee of ways and means; and the motion to amend by substituting the committee on public lands, being the first business in order, were then taken up.

Mr. C. Allan, of Kentucky, called for the reading of the instructions; after which, he continued the course of remarks which he began on Monday last.

The morning business being ended—the house proceeded with the special order of the day, and resumed the consideration of the report of the committee on elections on the subject of the North Carolina contested election.

Mr. Calhoun, of Ky. whose remarks were interrupted by a question of order at twelve o'clock on Saturday night, resumed and concluded his remarks on the subject.

Mr. Graham (the sitting member) followed and spoke at great length in support of his claim to the contested seat.

Mr. Newland (the petitioner) obtained the floor, but yielded it to

Mr. Garland, of La. who moved an adjournment, which was agreed to—94 to 29.

The house then adjourned.

Tuesday, March 29. The speaker laid before the house the following communication, viz:

Washington, March 29, 1836.

Sir: I will thank you to communicate to the house of representatives that I have this day forwarded to the governor of the state of New York my resignation as a member of that body.

I have the honor to be, sir, with great respect, your most obedient servant,
S. BEARDSLEY.

To the hon. James K. Polk, speaker, &c.
The said communication was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. Fairfield, from the committee for the District of Columbia, reported a bill to incorporate the Jackson city corporation, in the District of Columbia.

The bill having been read a first time by its title, and the question being on its second reading, objections were made.

Mr. Fairfield said the bill gave no powers to the corporation, except such only as were necessary to enable them to manage the common property of the corporation. It did not grant them a city charter.

Mr. Wardwell remarked that, in his opinion, if there ever was a humbug, this was emphatically one; and he hoped the house would at once reject the bill. What are the facts attending this most singular application? Several gentlemen have purchased a farm at the south end of the long bridge, over the Potomac, in this District. Their ostensible object is to build a city; but in my opinion, the real object is to make money out of it at the expense of the community. Should we incorporate this company, what will be the consequence? The lots will be advertised in New York, and every city in the union. They will be sold at a large price. The company will pocket the money, and those who purchase will lose it. This will be the result of this humbug. He hoped the house would reject the bill at once, and not give countenance to a project so well calculated to deceive the people.

Mr. Speight thought the course proposed, of rejecting the bill, was unusual and disrespectful to the committee which had reported it. He then called for the reading of the bill.

Mr. Vanterpool objected to treating the bill discourteously, though he could not vouch for its expediency. He should like to have it take the regular course, but he would not say he should vote for it finally, though he was one of the committee which reported it. It did not strike him that at first blush it appeared so outrageous as to require its immediate rejection.

Mr. Bond made some general objections to the principle of the bill. If corporations for speculating in land, and such purposes, were to be granted, every body in the District would be asking for similar acts of incorporation. He did not think any action upon the bill necessary, for he did not believe a single man on the floor would vote for it.

Mr. Peyton said he regretted to see to what purposes and uses "the party" were appropriating the president's name. Not content with making use of his name as a matter of political speculation, by which they were attempting to appropriate to themselves all the offices in the government, they were now asking the sanction of this house to use it as a matter of pecuniary speculation. I am opposed to this, Mr. Speaker. I do not wish to see general Jackson's name identified with the bogs and swamps of the Potomac, and bandied about as an article of merchandise. What, and where is Jackson city? It is like the Georgian's land in the western district of Tennessee. He had been out to examine into its situation and value. On his return, his friends were anxious to know if it was productive. He said it certainly was; that he thought the whole 640 acres would, upon an average, produce 60 bushels of frogs to the acre, and alligators enough to fence it. And sir, a few speculators from New York ask us to identify by law these bull-frogs of Jackson city with the name of the president, that they may the more easily impose upon the credulous. They ask us to aid them in selling them out at a thousand dollars apiece, in the name of gen. Jackson. Sir, is it not enough that they should appropriate his military fame, those laurels which he won in the field, his vast popularity and political influence, to their political purposes? Shall they incorporate and sell his name throughout the country in market as a city? I am opposed to their applying gen. Jackson's name to all sorts of uses.

Mr. Fairfield advocated the bill, and remarked that, notwithstanding the fastidiousness of the gentleman (Mr. Peyton) to the use of gen. Jackson's name, he would be glad to see him and his whole party swamped. He stated that when the first draught of the bill was presented to the committee it contained enough to make a volume, and gave powers nearly equivalent to the charter of a city. He had, however, cut it down to a simple act to incorporate a company for the management of property; and he did not think, upon examination, any good objection would be made to its passage.

The bill was laid upon the table—yeas 80, nays 64.

At 12 o'clock, in pursuance of the special order for this day, the house resumed the consideration of the report of the committee on elections on the subject of the North Carolina contested election, and the following resolution with which the report concludes:

Resolved, That James Graham is not entitled to a seat in this house, and that David Newland is entitled to a seat in this house.

The question being on the resolutions moved by Mr. Rencher, on Saturday, as a substitute for the above,

Mr. Newland (the petitioner) took the floor and spoke at some length in support of his claims to the seat, and in reply to the argument of the sitting member (Mr. Graham).

Then followed a wide and long debate—in which many members took part. Decisions of the chair were frequently appealed from—but confirmed. At last,

Mr. Williams, of N. C. moved a call of the house, which was ordered, and the clerk proceeded to call the house.

The call of the names having been made, the doors were closed, and absentees called upon for excuses, but soon after, on motion of Mr. Williams, of North Carolina, the proceedings were suspended, 190 members having answered to their names.

The question then recurred upon the demand for the previous question, which, having been seconded by the house, was ordered to be taken by yeas and nays, and decided in the affirmative—yeas 112, nays 87.

The house adopted the first branch of the resolution—yeas 114, nays 87; and rejected the second branch—yeas 99, nays 100; and then passed a resolution referring the election back to the people. Adjourned.

Wednesday, March 30. Mr. Hawkins, by consent of the house, offered a resolution directing the clerk of the house to pay to David Newland, esq. the full amount of pay and mileage which would be due to him as a member of the house, from the day when he presented his petition, to the 29th instant, inclusive.

Mr. Rencher suggested that when the bill for the compensation of Messrs. Moore and Letcher was taken up, the gentleman could move this as an amendment.

The resolution, on motion of Mr. Mercer, was so modified as to instruct the committee on elections to inquire into the expediency of making the proposed allowance.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. W. B. Shepard, from the committee on the District of Columbia, reported a resolution setting apart the 27th and 28th of April, for the consideration of business relative to the District of Columbia; which, after some consideration, was laid on the table.

Mr. Cambreleng moved to amend the resolution so as to strike out the 27th and 28th, and insert the 29th and 30th, viz: Friday and Saturday. It would be necessary (he said) hereafter, to give more than one day a week to the consideration of the public business. It would indeed, he thought, be necessary, by the time proposed, to suspend the rules appropriating Friday and Saturday to private business.

Mr. Whittlesey hoped the motion would not prevail. It would be an abandonment of decisions upon private claims. Many important bills had been reported which ought to receive the action of the house; and he would ask, if petitioners with just claims should be compelled to come up year after year, without having their rights examined by the house. There was no necessity for the course proposed. If gentlemen wished to speak upon the appropriation bills at length, there would be ample time, without trenching upon the time allotted to the consideration of private bills.

Mr. Briggs moved to amend the resolution so as to set apart the 28th and 29th for the purpose.

Mr. Cambreleng said he had no objection to this course, and withdrew his motion.

The motion to amend was not agreed to.

Mr. Parker moved to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. Wm. B. Shepard called for the yeas and nays, which were refused.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to, by a vote of 70 to 54.

The house proceeded, at one o'clock, to the special order of the day, and resumed in committee of the whole on the state of the union, the consideration of the "bill making appropriations for the naval service of the United States for the year 1836."

Mr. Garland, of Va. who was entitled to the floor, addressed the committee at great length, in reply to the remarks of the gentlemen from Maine, (Mr. Evans), from South Carolina, (Mr. Thompson), and from Tennessee, (Mr. Bell), heretofore made on this subject.

Adjourned.

Thursday, March 31. Various petitions, and other ordinary business being attended to—

Mr. Hawkins, from the committee on elections, reported a resolution, directing the clerk of the house to pay to David Newland, esq. the same amount of pay and mileage, as is allowed to members of congress, to be computed from the day of presenting his petition to the house, contesting the election of James Graham, esq. to the 29th inst. inclusive.

Mr. Underwood dissented from the proposition of Mr. Hawkins, and gave his reasons at considerable length. A debate followed; but, finally, the resolution was adopted—124 to 54.

The naval service bill came up in course, the debate proceeded, and Mr. Garland, of Va. finished his speech, Mr. Jarvis obtained the floor, the committee rose, and the house adjourned.

BALTIMORE AND OHIO RAIL ROAD.

CITY COUNCIL—FIRST BRANCH.

Wednesday, March 23.

Mr. Barnes, from the joint committee appointed to witness experiments upon the power of the locomotive engines, at the inclined planes, submitted the following report:

The joint committee of the city council of Baltimore, appointed to witness the experiments upon the power of the locomotive engines of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road, at the inclined planes, respectfully report:

That your committee left Baltimore on the morning of Tuesday last, accompanied by a committee of the board of directors of the company, a committee of the board of trade, and other individuals, in all amounting to forty-two persons. The train consisted, besides the engine and its tender, of a double eight wheeled passenger car, constructed to accommodate forty-four persons; and three four wheeled passenger cars, capable of containing seventeen each. After some delay, occasioned by coming in contact with the leaders of a burden team, who, being alarmed, sprang before the engine from off the adjoining track, the train arrived at the foot of plane number 1, at the distance of forty-two miles from Baltimore. The instructions given to the engineer had been, as your committee are informed, to stop here, and, disengaging the double car, to attach the three single cars to the engine, and to ascend the planes with them, and with fifty passengers, this being a demonstration of the power of the engine, which, it was believed, would satisfactorily prove its efficiency for use, where the elevation was at the rate of two hundred feet per mile. Confident, however, in the power of the engine, the engineer, without stopping at the foot of the plane, commenced its ascent, with the train that had left Baltimore. The impetus acquired on the level was lost in the first three hundred feet of the ascent, after which, the engine drew its load steadily to the summit of the first plane, at the rate of from four to five miles an hour, accumulating speed as it approached the top. This plane is 2,150 feet in length; 2,050 feet of which ascend at the rate of 197 feet per mile; and 100 feet at the rate of 201 feet per mile. From the first plane the train proceeded to the second, which is 3,000 feet in length—2,890 feet of which ascend at the rate of 170 feet per mile—100 feet at the rate of 237 feet per mile, and 100 feet at the summit, at the rate of 234 feet per mile. The engine and its train ascended at the rate of from 5 to 6 miles per hour, to within thirty feet of the summit of this plane, when, while on the grade of 264 feet to the mile, it stopped. The three small cars weighing five ton one hundred weight, were then cast loose, when the engine starting, without assistance, on this grade, drew the double car and passengers to the summit with the greatest apparent ease. The steam escaped in volumes from the safety-valve as well when the engine reached the summit of the planes as when it left the foot of them. The weight drawn up the planes was as follows, according to actual weighing:

Patterson.....	1.	10.	2.	0.
Patapsco.....	1.	15.	2.	0.
Carroll.....	1.	15.	0.	0.
Double car.....	4.	17.	0.	0.
45 passengers.....	3.	0.	0.	0.
Tender.....	4.	7.	0.	0.

Tons.....	17.	5.	0.	0.

This weight of 25 tons 15 cwt. was drawn up the grades before mentioned, the steepest of which was 237 feet per mile, with much ease, and by the inherent power of the engine, without the assistance of the impetus of previous high speed—and the weight of 20 ton 15 cwt. deducting from the above the weight of the three cars cast off on plane number 2, was drawn with equal ease up a grade of 264 feet to the mile—the engine starting the train from rest on this grade. At the summit two car loads of pig iron weighing each four tons, were attached to the train, and the whole, weighing then 33 tons 15 cwt. was made to descend the plane, on the return to Baltimore, by the action of the engine alone, and without the assistance of a brake, at such speed as the engineer pleased, and was several times stopped, on the way down, to show the command in which the engine was held.

With such results as the above, it is unnecessary to add, that your committee are equally gratified and surprised; and from what they themselves witnessed, they have no hesitation in expressing their conviction, that the engines of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road, are capable of drawing with ease, at least fifty passengers, up ascents of any length, of from 200 to 220 feet per mile.

From the account thus given, it will be at once seen, that the performances of the best engines in England have been far surpassed; and although your committee are aware, that calculation was competent to prove the practicability of ascending grades like those at the planes, with engines of the weight and power used on this occasion, and with similar loads, yet it was reserved for the company in question to prove that machines of such giant power could be constructed, combining with their great strength, the important qualities of speed, durability, facility of repair, and capability to use anthracite as their fuel.

Your committee are glad to have an opportunity of expressing their sense of the obligations, which the efforts of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company have conferred upon the rail road system generally, and more especially in reference to it, as connected with the city of Baltimore. It is now a matter of common parlance, to assert, that the Alleghenies can be passed by locomotive engines by the Potomac route, without the use of stationary power; and your committee entertain no doubt of the fact. It is this, which gives to Baltimore, the vantage ground in the competition with her sister cities, for the western trade; and yet this is owing, not more to the geographical depressions of the mountain range, than to the engines perfected by the company just named. Excepting the engines manufactured by them, there is probably not one in the United States; although some of the best ever made in England have been imported, which is capable of ascending the grades and passing the curves for any profitable purpose, which must occur among the mountains on the road in question. While nature, therefore, has done much to facilitate the intercourse of Baltimore with the west, the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company has not done less.

Your committee make these remarks as an act of justice; and they do it with the more pleasure, because it enables them to bestow a deserved complement upon the American mechanics, who have so well illustrated their capacity and skill in the manufacture of the engines in question: proving, satisfactorily, that in this, as well as in the other departments of human industry, their inventive genius is capable of the most elevated and useful flights. It is now but a few years, since the universal voice called upon the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company to follow the example of their neighbors and import their engines; and their perseverance in refusing to do so, although founded upon the very best and truest appreciation of circumstances, was stigmatized as folly or obstinacy. The result has fully justified their course, and showed that their confidence in the skill of the artisans of this country to produce a more perfect machine than had yet been manufactured in England and better adapted to the road from Baltimore to the Ohio, was fully warranted.

The capacity of a locomotive engine when employed in heavy drafts depends upon three things:—1st. Its weight, which gives it the adhesion on the rails that is requisite. 2d. The capacity of its cylinders to use the adhesion to its utmost limit.—3. The ability of the boiler to supply the cylinders with steam equal to their capacity. Where the power is applied to but one pair of wheels but half the adhesion is used, supposing the weight to rest equally on the four wheels. Where the power is applied to both pair, the weight of the whole engine is made effective to produce adhesion. The English engines generally have but one pair of wheels geared. The engines of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company have both pair geared. The weight of the engines, therefore, being equal, and there being enough steam to overcome the adhesion of both pair of wheels, the Baltimore engine must be double the effective power of the English engine. The larger the cylinders, in stroke and diameter, there being steam enough to supply them, the greater the power they afford—and the cylinders of the Baltimore engines being twelve and an half inches in diameter, and twenty-two inches stroke, while the English engines rarely exceed ten or eleven inches in diameter, by seventeen or eighteen inches stroke, the former are, of course, the most effective, since the daily experience of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company shows the ample supply of steam, which the peculiar construction of the boiler affords at all times. At the end of nine months of constant use, the tubes of the Baltimore boiler have been found on examination as perfect as when they were inserted, while in the English engine, the renewal of tubes is a constant source of expense and vexation. The number of tubes in the Baltimore engine is four hundred, while in the English engine it rarely exceeds 120, causing a proportionate difference in the fire surface, or capacity for generating steam, the heat applied in the furnace being the same.

Your committee state these facts, which are of easy comprehension, to show that the superiority of the Baltimore engine over the English one of the same weight, is not a matter of accident only, or about which there can be any mistake, but an inevitable consequence of well known philosophical and mechanical principles.

The engines of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company are manufactured by Messrs. Gillingham and Winans, at the company's shop. Both of these gentlemen were, for many years, in the service of the company, in the department of machinery, before they became contractors; and to them, together with the late Phineas Davis, the former contractor, is to be attributed the perfection of the present locomotive. Their establishment is a large one, employing upwards of an hundred workmen, and of itself is of great benefit through the employment that it gives, and the money which, necessarily, it is the means of circulating. The company has a prior claim to the services of the contractors, paying a stipulative price for the engines, ($5,000) and the machinery which are obtained from them, and paying for repairs by the time which they consume. The expenses of the shops are borne by the contractors, who build and manufacture for others as well as the company. The shops and permanent machinery have cost the company about $10,000—which sum has been already returned to it in the reduced price for which the contractors build the engines, in consideration of the advantages of the use of the shops, the proximity to the road, and the opportunities of working for other companies.

In the annual reports of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company, the power of their engines has frequently been mentioned; and the authority and character of these reports have been quite sufficient to authenticate the facts therein stated. Your committee are aware however, that the incredulous as to the ascent of the planes at Parr's Spring Ridge, have not been low, and, perhaps, the very importance of the results stated, so far exceeding all previous experience, has been the cause of doubt; or in other words, "the news was held to be too good to be true." Your committee however are witnesses, with many others, to the surprising efforts and efficiency of the engines in question, and they are glad that an opportunity has been afforded them, to add their testimony in corroboration of that which reflects so much credit upon the mechanics of our country, and to express their approbation of the persevering and patriotic individuals who, in the management of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road, have called our native talent into play, and done so much to develop and increase the efficiency of the rail road system. All of which is respectfully submitted,

BALTIMORE AND OHIO RAIL ROAD.

At a large meeting of the friends of internal improvement, held at the court house in Uniontown, Pa. on the 16th March, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas the Baltimore and Ohio rail road, presenting as it does the nearest and best connexion between the Atlantic seaboard and the western states, is an object of the highest national importance, whether considered in reference to the mail, military or commercial operations of our country:

At a time, therefore, when the national treasury is full to overflowing, this great national undertaking, already carried, by the patriotic efforts of individual enterprise more than one hundred miles from the seat of the federal government, towards the west, (being nearly one-third of its entire extent), ought not to be suffered by congress to fail or falter for want of the means of its speedy and vigorous prosecution, and the more especially since it is ascertained, beyond all doubt, that the mountain can be overcome by this route without the use of stationary power or inclined planes any where exceeding 50 feet of ascent in the mile, thus securing the transportation of mails and munitions of war in 24 hours, from Washington city and Baltimore, to Pittsburgh and Wheeling, on the Ohio river:

And as the government of the United States will be obliged to avail itself (at any expense) of rail roads as the swiftest conveyance for its mails—Therefore, in the opinion of this meeting, the government ought to adopt a general system, at once, by contracting with the companies incorporated for the purpose of constructing such roads to transport the mails, troops, military stores, or other property of the United States, forever, free of charge, in consideration of a stipulated sum to be paid as the work progresses. Under such a system, the mails and military operations of this country would soon be carried on, not only free of expense but with a celerity and efficiency unprecedented in the annals of the world.

Regarded as a system of military defence merely, unconnected with its other uses, how superior to any system of fortifications would be a system of rail roads traversing our extensive seaboard from Maine through Florida to New Orleans, with branches penetrating the interior in every direction, and enabling the government to concentrate, at any time, and at any point on our maritime frontier, in a few hours, and at a trifling expense, 100,000 citizen soldiers upon whom, this country must always rely for its defence—a system equally available for the repulsion of invaders from abroad, and the suppression of insurrections at home. The superiority of this system for national defence will be manifest from the statement of the ascertained fact, that the Baltimore rail road company have now, before its work is half completed, 1,350 cars, in which they can transport 54,000 men from Baltimore to Washington city, in less than three hours, and deliver them, as fresh and ready for action, as at the moment of their departure; this alone would have saved the country from the mortification and disgrace of having its capital destroyed by hostile hands during the late war. Thus by uniting Boston, New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore, by similar roads, each having cars sufficient to carry 50,000 troops, 250,000 men might, in a few hours, be concentrated in any of those cities. In point of economy and utility how stands the comparison?

In peace as well as in war, forts and fortifications are a heavy and constant burden of expense to the treasury, while rail roads, instead of burdens would confer benefits beyond their cost, not only in reference to mail and military operations, but also in the facilities they would at all times afford to internal commerce and intercourse, and in their immense value as bonds of social and political union among the states.

As to the constitutional power of congress over the subject in this form, there can be no question. The money is appropriated for the express purpose of carrying the mails and munitions of war, both of which powers, are, by the constitution, expressly granted to congress. The duty of providing for the national defence is imposed on congress, and the selection of the means appropriate to this end was unavoidably left by the constitution to their sound discretion. If then rail roads are found to be as efficient for national defence as forts and fortifications, congress has unquestionably the same right to adopt them.

But if, while they are equally valuable for national defence, they will also serve to carry into effect other powers confided to congress, viz: the transportation of the mails and the "regulation of commerce among the several states," then they would seem to be even more clearly within the constitutional competency of congress than forts, arsenals, &c. which are adapted to but a single constitutional end.

Therefore, resolved, as the unanimous sense of this meeting, that our senators in congress and the representative of this district, be respectfully requested to use their endeavors to procure the passage of a law granting an appropriation to the Baltimore and Ohio rail road, on the terms indicated in the foregoing report.

Resolved, That the foregoing preamble and resolutions be communicated by Andrew Stewart, chairman of the committee who reported them, to our said senators and representatives, and to direct their publication.

MR. GRUNDY'S BILL,

IN RELATION TO CARRYING THE MAILS ON RAIL ROADS.

Mr. Grundy, according to notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce the following bill:

A bill to authorise contracts for carrying the mail and public property of the United States upon rail roads.

Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled, That, for the purpose of obtaining for and securing to the United States the use, as hereinafter specified, of the rail roads which have been or may be completed within the states or territories thereof, for the transportation of the mail, and for other public purposes, the postmaster general be, and he is hereby, authorised to receive from the states, corporation, and companies owning the rail roads which are now completed, or which are now or may hereafter be in a state of progress towards completion, and of which any section may have been completed between points important in the transportation of the mail, propositions specifying the same which the said states, corporations and companies ask to be paid by the United States for the use as aforesaid of the said roads, and for which the proposers will respectively agree to carry the mail of the United States, and the persons having charge thereof, as often and at such hours as the postmaster general may direct, in preference to any other thing or person carried or to be carried on the said roads, and in the most rapid mode of transportation used or to be used on the said roads; provided that the postmaster general shall not be authorised to require the mail to be carried on any of the said roads more frequently than once in each day, unless more than one separate car or train of cars shall be run on each day of the transportation of persons or things, in which case if required, a mail shall be carried in any such additional separate car or train. Also, to carry upon the said roads the agents of the post office department, travelling upon the business of the said department, under the orders of the postmaster general, and the officers of the army and navy of the United States, travelling under orders. Also, to carry upon the said roads, in preference to any other thing, the public property of the United States, timber and stone excepted, and the persons having charge thereof, and the troops, seamen and mariners of the U. States, when and as often as the transportation of the said public property, troops, seamen or mariners shall be required by the president or any other officer of the United States having authority to order the same. And the post master general is authorised to make contracts, in the name of the United States, for the use of such of the said roads as the interests of the public may require, having regard to the duration of the charters of the said corporations; which contracts shall secure to the United States the free use, in manner aforesaid, of the said roads, and shall distinctly provide for the services to be performed by the contractors, and shall specify the sum or sums to be paid by the United States immediately after the approval of the contracts by congress, as herein provided, if the roads be completed, or by instalments proportionate to the sections of the said roads which are then or may thereafter be completed, payable when and as often as the said sections shall be finished and brought into use.

Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, That all the contracts which may be made, pursuant to the provisions of this act, shall be forthwith submitted to congress, if in session; if not, then at the commencement of the next session; and if sanctioned by resolution thereof, approved by the president, the money agreed to be paid by the United States shall be paid out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, upon the certificate of the postmaster general that the same is due according to the terms of said contract.

Sec. 3. Be it further enacted, That every contract made pursuant to this act shall, for the purpose of securing the due performance of the services for which it stipulates, be deemed to create a specific lien or charge in behalf of the United States for the amount of money paid thereon, upon the road for use of which it is made, and the land upon which the said road is constructed, or appurtenant thereto; and all the fixtures pertaining to the said road, and the said lien or charge shall bind the said road, land and fixtures, in whose hands soever they may be, in preference to any other title, claim or demand whatever, either of the owners, part owners or stockholders of the said road, or any other person, body politic or corporate, claiming the same, or any interest in, or part of, the value or proceeds thereof, by any act of law, or by any contract, sale, mortgage, deed of conveyance, forfeiture, escheat, grant, judgment, decree or execution, except specific liens existing at the passage of this act. And if, by reason of the forfeiture, repeal, annulment, or surrender of the charter of any corporation, or of the dissolution of any company, contracting as herein provided, or from any other cause, the services stipulated to be rendered in any contract made pursuant to this act shall remain unperformed without the assent of the United States, the president of the United States shall cause proper legal proceedings, founded upon the lien created by the contract, to be instituted for the recovery of the money paid by the United States, without interest, but such proceedings shall, in no case, be instituted so long as the United States continue to receive the services provided by the contract.

The bill was read twice, and referred to the committee on the post office and post roads.

SURPLUS REVENUE—RAIL ROADS—MR. GRUNDY'S BILL.

From the Washington Globe of Saturday.

Among the projects for disposing of parts of the surplus revenue, there is none which promises more public utility than the proposition to contract for the freedom of the rail roads for all government purposes. In a practical point of view, the following advantages are to be anticipated:

1. It will give conveyance to the mails, without charge, on the routes where it is heaviest and most expensive, enabling the government to reduce the rates of postage, or largely to increase mail facilities to the interior of the country.
2. The mails on these routes will be conveyed more frequently, more rapidly and more safely.
3. It will incalculably diminish the expenses attending the means of public defence in peace and in war.

By enabling the government rapidly to concentrate the public force, it will render it unnecessary to keep up so great a standing army as might otherwise be required. With rail roads at the service of the government along the whole seaboard, and on the principal routes, of interior communication, the effective power of our present army would be more than doubled.

By affording on those routes free transportation for officers, men, stores and other public property, it would lessen the expenses of the government in time of peace, and obviate one of the heaviest items of charge in time of war, thereby diminishing the necessity of taxation or loans, in a degree proportioned to the perils and efforts of the country.

4. It will incalculably increase the power of the country to defend itself in cases of invasion or insurrection. City can rush to the defence of city in a few hours, and states to the defence of states in a few days. Before a hostile fleet could approach and land its forces near one of our great maritime cities, the whole power of several of her sisters would be at hand to defend her. Before an attack could be planned and executed, the interior country would send down its thousands and tens of thousands by every rail road. Forts are useful in certain positions, but the surest defence of a country is an invincible array of armed men. To avoid invasion, we have but to have the means of concentrating at every important point for defence, a more formidable force than our enemy can bring to the assault.

As auxiliary to the public defence, therefore, this project deserves the most favorable consideration.

5. All the benefits of free roads will be secured to the government, at the cheapest possible rate, and without touching any of those constitutional questions, involved in a system of internal improvements by the general government. It will be a mere matter of contract. The original power of making contracts for the general government, invested in congress. That body has delegated to the heads of departments, the power to make contracts for limited periods, and has generally prohibited advances of money until the articles be delivered, or the service performed. But that body can make, or authorize to be made, unlimited contracts, and pay the whole consideration in advance. Whether they will do so, is a question of expediency only.

It is not proposed to advance money to any company, for the purpose of enabling them to make a road. The money is to be paid only when the road is completed, and the public service has commenced upon it. Sections of a road, however, may be contracted for, and the consideration paid separately. Thus, the road from Washington to Baltimore, is a part or branch of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road. The use of that section may be immediately contracted for, and the consideration paid; so of the section from Baltimore to Frederick, &c. Nor does it effect the principle, if the company avow that their purposes is to finish other sections of the road with the funds so procured. The government does not pay them for that purpose, but to obtain the free use of the sections already made. It matters not whether the company make other sections or other roads with those funds. The government will pay the consideration for the use of those other sections, or other roads, only when they may be completed.

Finally, This project, if adopted, will put at rest, forever, all questions as to the power of congress to make roads within the states, by receiving all the benefits of the power without exercising or usurping it. The government will have throughout the country, for its own purposes, free rail roads, at an expense immeasurably short of the cost of making them, without assuming any jurisdiction over the soil; without affecting any states rights; without exercising a power in the least doubtful. Even in case the owners of the road fail to perform the contract service, it is not proposed to give to the government any power to keep the road in operation, or to exercise any authority over it, other than to sell it as they now do private property, for the payment of debts to the public.

It is, we think, no small recommendation of this project, that it promises to put an end forever, and that speedily, to the distracting questions as to the power of the government to make roads and canals within the states.

How delightful is the prospect presented in another aspect! Other governments are saddling posterity with debts which generations will be unable to extinguish. We propose so to apply our present abundance as to lessen the legitimate demands on posterity. We propose to pay in advance for the conveyance of their mails, the transportation of their public property and their armies—some of the heaviest items of expense in all their wars, and considerable charges upon them in times of peace. How beautiful the contrast with all other governments of the world, ancient or modern! It will be the first example—we hope it will not be the last.

Why then should not a liberal portion of the surplus revenue be devoted to this object? Give enough to the navy—enough to forts—enough to the preparation of the munitions of war—and we shall have enough left for this great purpose.

The vetoes of the president have temporarily checked the spirits of federal encroachments upon the roads of the states; this measure, if carried into effect, will extinguish it forever, crowning his hazardous exercise of power in defence of the constitution, with complete success, as lasting as it will be beneficial and glorious.

LATER FROM FLORIDA.

We are indebted to our attentive correspondent of the Savannah Georgian; for a slip containing the following interesting information from gen. Gaines's army.

From the Georgian, extra, March 20.

FROM FLORIDA.

The steam packet Edwain, captain Sassard, arrived yesterday afternoon from Jacksonville, brought us a slip from the offices of the Jacksonville Courier, which contains the following interesting intelligence from gen. Gaines's army. For the want of provisions, they have been obliged to retire to Fort Drane, where the gallant Gaines yielded the command to the no less gallant Clinch, and set out for the west.

We are of opinion that gen. Gaines has left the forces at Fort Drane, not because, as others think, the war is at an end, but because his orders compelled him so to do, and, as gen. Clinch is an experienced officer, he did not feel authorised to violate those orders, one of the first duties of the soldier being to render cheerful obedience to his superiors. Besides the brave Scott, entrusted with the chief command in Florida was, we presume, known to be approaching Fort Drane. What necessarily, then, for Gaines to remain when such reasons urged his withdrawal.

We are more inclined to look upon the advances of Ocoola as a deep stratagem laid by the wily savage, than any serious disposition for peace. His character, the character of his followers, as evinced on the blood stained fields of Florida, forbid the idea that the revengeful savage—the violator of treaties—the murderer of Charley Omatilla—of the gray-headed Thompson—and the companion of the destroyers of Dade and his martyred associates, can, from any desire to spare the blood of our countrymen, pause in that career of carnage, to pursue which he has bathed his hands in innocent blood, trod upon the prostrate bodies of the noble and the brave, and nurtured, for a propitious moment wherein to gratify them, the revengeful feelings of the savage breast. We trust that no faith may henceforth be placed in the faith of Ocoola. Unlike the sun in his noon-day brightness, he blesses neither his own nor people of other climes. Unlike the same brilliant luminary in his morning brightness, he throws no smile of promise over a favored world, but resembling him only when veiled by the clouds of heaven, or declining in blood beneath the western horizon, he throws to our acceptance a day of gloom or a night of sorrow. May it be the fortune of our gallant army to view him as the setting sun—but not increasing in his blood-stained color, as he sinks from their sight. But may his disk when viewed, be shorn of those bright rays which distinguish the sun even in his evening journey.

From the Jacksonville Courier, March 17.

GENERAL GAINES AND OCOOLA HAD AN INTERVIEW.

The news from the camp of gen. Gaines continues to be of great importance. In our last we stated gen. Clinch, with the Alachua militia, had joined him. We were then unable to state correctly the particulars. The following extract of a letter to the editor will show the force which accompanied the provisions.

"The force, which went to the relief of gen. Gaines under the command of gen. Clinch, consisting of four companies of mounted volunteers from Alachua county, commanded by captains Williams, Carter, Hern and Lieut. Dell, one company from Hamilton county, under capt. Martin, the Richmond blues, about seventy friendly Indians, and some regulars, in all about seven hundred men. Verbal reports state that the Indians are getting short of lead.

"With this force gen. Clinch went to the relief of gen. Gaines. The night before his arrival, Ocoela sent a negro to the camp of gen. Gaines, requesting an interview, and promising to stop killing white men if he would stop killing Indians. This proposition was agreed to, and Ocoela was told to come next day with a white flag, when they would have a talk with him. The next day, in company with another chief, he came to within about a hundred yards of the fort, waved his white flag around three times, and sat down upon a log. Three officers from the camp went to meet them.

"Ocoela informed them that gen. Clinch was on his way to join them with a large number of horsemen. He expressed his willingness that hostilities cease, and to give up his arms. The officers required him to sign articles of agreement by which he bound himself to proceed immediately to Tampa Bay, and there embark for the Mississippi. Some say that Ocoela objected to this mode of removing, and wished to go by land. Others that he would not promise to go at all, but wished to live on the other side of the Wythlacoochee and to have that for the boundary line between them and the whites. Their discussion was interrupted by the arrival of gen. Clinch. During the course of it, Ocoela inquired how they were off for provisions. They told him they had a plenty. He said he knew they had not, and if they would come over the river, he would give them two beeves and a bottle of brandy.

"As gen. Clinch approached, the friendly Indians discovering the hostile Indians about three hundred yards from the camp of gen. Gaines, raised the whoop, which was immediately followed by one from the hostile Indians. The men immediately formed and fired a platoon. The Indians fled and were closely pursued. A runner then came from gen. Gaines ordering them to stop, and informing them that Ocoela was treating with them. At first those in pursuit could not be restrained; but the cry of 'treaty,' 'treaty,' soon checked them. Gen. Clinch then formed and proceeded to camp."

The following extract of a letter, written after their arrival, contains some interesting particulars:—

*Head quarters, Camp Izard, Florida,
On the Wythlacoochee, March 8, at night.*

We arrived at this post on the evening of the 6th, and found gen. Gaines' army in a state of starvation, eating horses, dogs, &c. Less than a gill of corn was issued for a day's rations. We brought but a small quantity of provisions with us, and I believe there are but few men in camp who are not hungry at this time. We found plenty of fresh Indian signs two miles above this on the river, and some of us wanted to pursue it, but the general directed otherwise. When we came in sight of the camp, the spy guard reported Indians (500) in battle array. The war whoop commenced, and all who heard it expected, and, I believe, were prepared, ready and willing for it. I was at the head of captains Martin and Carter's companies, the left flank, when we discovered a considerable body of Indians on our left and gave them a fire; two only returned it, (and one of the balls struck near me), they instantly fled into the hammock; it is said we killed one and wounded two; to-day the spot has been visited, and a considerable quantity of hides, some rice, &c. were found, so I guess they left in a hurry. They have had gen. Gaines completely surrounded for several days previous to our arrival; they had fought him all the day before without much execution on either side.

Hearing the attack of gen. Clinch, the officers in conversation with Ocoela advised him to retire into the hammock, while they went to the camp.

On reaching the camp, gen. Clinch found its inmates in great distress. They were literally in a state of starvation. They had killed and eaten several horses and dogs. One soldier having stolen a dog and killed it, sold one of the quarters for five dollars. For this act of stealing, killing or selling, or all together, he received a severe flogging. One man gave six dollars for a piece of horse's entrails about a foot long. Five dollars were given for a biscuit and the same for a quart of corn. We forbore to mention many other acts, showing what hunger will compel one to do, which are related of these patriotic men, thus surrounded and suffering in a savage wilderness. Yet there was perfect subordination, and every man was prompt in the discharge of his duty. The Alachua volunteers cheerfully distributed their biscuit and corn, reserving none for themselves. It was affecting to witness the greediness and thankfulness with which they received a whole or a half biscuit from their deliverers.

The evening of the day on which their interview was interrupted by the arrival of general Clinch, Ocoela sent word to gen. Gaines, that if he would send away the horsemen, (Alachua militia), they would come and surrender their arms. We know not whether from suspicion or otherwise, the horsemen were not sent away. After waiting three days to hear more of Ocoela, and not having provisions to remain longer, general Gaines returned to Fort Drane at which place Ocoela was to have met him, Monday or Tuesday last. After reaching this fort, he transferred the command to gen. Clinch, and left for New Orleans by the way of Tallahassee. During some of the engagements, he received a wound; the ball, passing through his hip, knocked out two of his teeth, but its force being nearly spent, it did him no further injury.

This movement of Ocoela in requesting an interview, when, gen. Gaines had been entirely surrounded by his followers for several days, is inexplicable, and seems to have taken all by surprise. Whether it was an artifice devised on learning of the approach of a reinforcement, to give time to make a safe retreat; or a stratagem by which, after introducing five hundred Indians within the breast work under the pretence of surrendering their arms, he intended to make an attack with his main force, and, taking advantage of the confusion, to massacre the whole before general Clinch could render them any assistance; or, as he says, he is really tired of murdering white men, general Clinch's arrival sooner than was anticipated, prevents us from determining, and time alone can now decide.

Though Ocoela has courage and cunning to plan and execute almost any bloody movement, we sincerely hope he has seen the hopelessness of further resistance, and that the Indians will now surrender their arms, and prepare to abide by the stipulations of the treaty for their removal. Should this be the case, gen. Gaines will receive a nation's thanks and a valiant general's fame.

To the manner in which he has conducted his part of the campaign, much credit is due. His alacrity in bringing to the theatre of action so large a force, his march from Tampa Bay, and the burial of the unfortunate major Dade and his companions, entitle him to the gratitude of the citizens of Florida, at whose cry of distress he so promptly came, and of the afflicted relatives and friends of the unfortunate men, whose bodies were strewn over the plain, and upon which the vultures were fattening.

From the Savannah Georgian.

The following extract of a letter received in this city, in a great measure confirms the accounts published yesterday from the Jacksonville Courier.

Picolata, March 15, 1836.

An express from Fort Drane last evening, states that general Scott is there; that general Gaines had retired to Fort Drane, and left the command before Scott arrived—that whilst at the Wythlacoochee, Powell, Jumper and Abel were in camp suing for peace—that they were tired of fighting. Whilst negotiating, general Clinch's detachment came up, and knowing nothing of what was going on, rushed upon the Indians who fled, and Powell and the rest hearing the alarm started like fury, but promised to return the next day—that on account of Clinch's men they were afraid to come into camp, but stood on the other side with a flag, and stated that they had sent to the governor, Micanopy, to know his ideas, and, as the old man has always been considered in reality favorable to removal, we are all in hopes that the war will soon be terminated.

They have removed their women and children about 40 miles from the late battle ground. Gen. Scott has had the offer of from 800 to 1,000 Creek Indians, which he had accepted. They are to be there in 20 days.

A new war seems about to happen with the Indians of the south. The Tuscaloosa (Ala.) Flag of 12th inst. says: It is rumored that the Creek Indians design commencing hostilities very soon; and it is believed by the citizens of the counties where the Cherokees are settled, that the Ross party, which is opposed to a treaty without reservations, will unite with them, in case such a treaty should be made. A letter from Tuskegee, Cherokee county, to a gentleman in this place, says: an old Cherokee, friendly to the whites, told me the Creeks would begin war, when the trees budded out. They are, generally, well armed and amply supplied with ammunition.

Montgomery, Ala. March 15.

On Wednesday and Thursday last, the village of Vernon on the Alabama river, exhibited quite a military appearance. All the companies except the one from Morgan county, had arrived at their place of rendezvous, and when we left that was hourly expected. Among them are some of the most respectable citizens of the state, and several members of our last legislature.

Through some cause unknown to either major general King, or Mr. Withers, the governor's private secretary, captain Harding of the United States army, failed to meet them at the appointed time, the consequence of which was, that upwards of 700 men as late as Friday were collected together, without provisions, arms, or any regular officer, to muster them into the service of the United States. They however, were not permitted to suffer for want of subsistence. The patriotic gentlemen of the neighborhood came promptly to their assistance and made a free will offering of the contents of their corn cribs and smoke houses.

We understand that his excellency governor Clay has most fully complied with the requisition of the commanding officer in Florida, and for fear that some irregularity might take place to the detriment of the soldiers, sent as many as three communications to Mount Vernon, addressed to captain Harding notifying that officer, of the time and place where the troops could be received. Had not governor Clay been taken sick on the road, it was his intention to have met the men, his countrymen, in arms and to have furnished them with all the aid that lay within his power.

Whether captain Harding has yet reached Vernon we know not. If he has, and brought with him the necessary equipments for the campaign, the troops will soon proceed to our eastern frontier. If he has not come, there is a strong probability that upon the return of the express to the governor, they will be disbanded and permitted to go to their homes.

To say the least of the matter, it is truly unfortunate that there was no United States officer to take charge of the companies. To call 700 mounted men into service and make no arrangements to furnish them with "provisions, arms and ammunition," is no small circumstance. We trust that the matter will be sifted to the bottom; and that all the facts connected with the failure, will be speedily brought to light. The honor and high standing of the parties concerned, require that the explanation should be ample.

P. S. Since writing the above we learn that the troops have been dismissed and returned to their homes, and the expedition failed.

Tallahassee, March 17.

We understand that there have been arrivals in town late this evening, from the seat of war in the east. We are enabled to furnish the following items of information which are now in possession of some of the citizens so far as we can ascertain, the facts disclosed may be confidently relied on. It appears that gen. Gaines has resigned the command of the detachment which he lately led so chivalrously against the common enemies of our territory, to gen. Clinch—who has moved back since towards Fort Drane, the present head quarters of gen. Scott. In his campaign against the Indians, he has had much to contend against. The amount of provisions obtained for his troops at Forts King and Drane proving insufficient, he was necessitated to take up the line of march back toward Tampa Bay, and on his route was attacked near the Wythlaoochee on the 27th ult. by a band of Seminoles, amounting, it is supposed, to from 12 to 1,500 men; losing in a half hour's battle one man killed and eight wounded. The 28th and 29th seem to have been marked by marchings, preparing defences, and in skirmishes, in which last lieutenant Izard received a mortal wound. He was afterwards buried near the Wythlaoochee. The breastworks, temporarily thrown up, were fired upon at intervals during the 2d, 3rd, 4th and 5th, inst. our troops at this time being reduced to great scarcity of provisions. On the 6th Powell or Ocoela, Juniper, and several other chiefs, protected by a flag of truce, held a talk with some certain officers of the staff, charged for this purpose; to the effect that for themselves they wished for peace, but that as they only spoke for themselves, they wished a present cessation of hostilities, in order to consult their principal chief Micanopy, who was then absent. They were suffered to depart, and in the morning following were not to be met with. Their loss, as far as ascertained, is about 30 men—that of the whites, 4 killed and 38 wounded.

We have just seen an order of gen. Scott authorising general Woodward and majors Watson and Flournoy, to receive into service for the Seminole campaign, 500 friendly Creek Indians. To this end the United States agents are required to co-operate with those officers.

The "National Intelligencer" of Wednesday last says—

From Florida, authentic accounts were received, by the mail of yesterday evening, confirming the main facts, heretofore reported, of the return of the troops from Wythlaoochee to Fort Drane, and gen. Gaines' departure for New Orleans. There appears, however, to be no foundation for the rumor that the war is ended. On the contrary, every preparation was making, under the orders of gen. Scott, to carry it on with vigor.

Fort Drane, March 16. There is every reason to believe that Powell (Ocoela) remains with his people in the same neighborhood. This is most fortunate for Scott's operations. On the 25th, Eustis with 1,700 men, would be at Pelaklehaha, on the road from Tampa to Fort King; and col. Lindsay had been expected to be at Chichuchaty, nearer to Tampa, with about 800 men. But there is too much reason to fear that the dispersion of the 700 troops from Alabama would embarrass this part of the arrangement. Gen. Scott could not, by the 16th, have heard of this unfortunate contre-temps. Clinch on the same day, (the 25th), would be back on the Wythlaoochee, with about 1,800 men. About 400 of Clinch's wing had been left by gen. Scott on the St. John's, but they would be up in time. Whilst Scott attacks them in front, on the one side, Eustis and Lindsay was to close in the rear—not only to aid in the engagement, but to prevent the escape to the south east. If the Indians remain in their present position, and every body believed that they would, the great stroke was expected to be given about the 25th (yesterday)—and some smaller bodies would then remain to be picked up. The delay till the 25th was to make it certain that Eustis and Lindsay were in position, and to enable Clinch to receive from Picolata and Gary's ferry the necessary subsistence. All the wagons had gone to those places. The army was in fine spirits, and Gaines's troops recovering fast from their recent sufferings. If gen. Scott should succeed in his operations, he expected to be at Tampa Bay by the 7th April.

How far the disappointment in receiving the Alabama volunteers will embarrass the operations of the campaign, it is impossible for us to determine. We have every confidence, however, in the genius and resources of gen. Scott.

The agreement made by gen. Gaines with the Indians with terms of which we are furnished by capt. Marks, is to the following effect—that the Indians and their chiefs should retire beyond the Wythlaoochee, and there remain peaceably until the wishes of the government are known—that commissioners would be sent them by the proper authorities to express those wishes, and that the chiefs should assemble at any time and place, when and where they should be required.

Ocoela, Juniper, Albert Hajo (Crazy Alligator) all Indians, with Abram principal adviser of Micanopy, and Cesar, both Indian negroes, were present at the interview on the part of the Indians; and the officers who, at the request of general Gaines, were present, were captain Hitchcock, of 1st regiment infantry, captain Marks, of the Louisiana volunteers, and adjutant Barrow, of the same.

If the Indians do not comply with the terms of the treaty, it is gen. Scott's intention to make them do so, peaceably if they will, or forcibly, if necessary.

The general impression when these officers left Fort Drane was that the war was at an end. No hostile Indians have been seen by our army since gen. Gaines left the Wythlaoochee. Most of the friendly Indians with Black Dirt, their chief, have returned to Tampa, deeming their services no longer necessary.

We understand that in consequence of some misunderstanding between col. Twigs and the commanding general, respecting brevet rank in the field, that col. Twigs will forthwith repair to New Orleans and resume his duties as commandant of that station.

FROM TEXAS.

We have a copy of the Texas Register, published at San Felipe de Austin, of the 23th of February, containing the following:

TO THE PEOPLE OF TEXAS.

Council hall, San Felipe de Austin, Feb. 13, 1836.

War with its most terrific attendants and consequences is rolling its horrors upon us! The enemy with great force is within our borders; and Texas sleeping amidst surrounding dangers. The arch enemy of liberty—Santa Anna, prompted by vindictive fury, leads the onset—death, violation and extermination are determined against us. The following letters speak a language not to be misunderstood, and clearly show the alarming situation of the country and the necessity for prompt and efficient action. If we would save our country from the threatened destruction, our wives and daughters from the vilest pollution, and our families and ourselves from general massacre, FREEMEN OF TEXAS—now is the hour!—let no consideration prevent you from coming boldly forth to the rescue! Our brethren from the United States are, by hundreds, in the field, leading the vanguard for our defence; and shall we look to others alone, for that protection from dangers so alarming? NO TEXIANS! shoulder your rifles, join our PATRIOTIC FRIENDS, and by one united and well-directed effort, teach the tyrant of Mexico and his hirplings, that the sons of the BRAVE PATRIOTS OF '76 are invincible in the cause of FREEDOM AND THE RIGHTS OF MAN.

JOHN MALONE.

JOHN S. LANE.

San Patricio, Feb. 6th, 1836.

DEAR SIR: Don Placido Benavides has just arrived, and brings disagreeable intelligence. Gonzales' command is entirely dispersed, and twenty-two men taken prisoners. Three hundred cavalry and three hundred infantry have arrived at Matamoros, which in addition to the garrison makes the effective force now there 1,000 men, and more are expected shortly. Cos and all his officers from Bejar are raising troops to march on Texas. One thousand men are already on the Rio Frio. One thousand more on the march to the Rio Grand, destined for some point of Texas; and forces are gathering rapidly in all directions for the same object. It is believed that an attack is intended on Goliad and Bejar simultaneously.

Roderigus has broken his parole since 5 o'clock this evening, and as I have but 18 effective men here and no horses, I could not pursue him.

The inhabitants of Tamaulipas are generally in favor of (1834), but are so much oppressed by the military, that many of the principal men having been arrested, they are completely fettered. Santa Anna caused a report to be set afloat that he was with the troops at Matamoros, but it is ascertained beyond all doubt that he is on the way to the Rio Grande for the purpose of pushing on those forces.

Don Placido deems it of the utmost importance that troops be sent to Bejar as well as others retained in this direction and also assures me that Santa Anna wishes to draw the troops of Texas out of Matamoros, in hopes to throw a strong force in their rear, while he makes his attack on the upper part of the colonies. This information he received from the first alcalde of Matamoros. He has been within 20 leagues of the town and corresponded with him.

The people of Tamaulipas as well as those of the Rio Grande complain much of Dimitt's proclamation, and would have acted with more decision were it not for that act, but they fear it is now almost impossible; but are still anxious for the cause. The cavalry are the choice troops from the interior, they are armed, every one, with lance, musket, pistols and sword, and Santa Anna has sworn to TAKE TEXAS OR LOSE MEXICO.

Doctor Grant has been out two days with thirty men. I feel very anxious about him. I intended to have sent you more wagons to-morrow morning early, and in fact had the oxen yoked to start before day-light, but shall now await your further orders.

Cos is actually with Seizima and also Ugartchiers. They have 1,000 spare horses and a large number of pack mules.

It is with regret, but I am absolutely obliged to give doctor Hott your horse to carry him with this. Yours most sincerely,
ROBERT MORRIS.

P. S. To raise funds and provisions, Cos causes each man to give an inventory of all he possesses with valuation of each article, on which he demands one per cent. every twenty days, he then sends two men to make the appraisement over, and if he finds that they make a return higher than the owners, he demands three per cent. in lieu of one; and each family has to furnish a fanega of corn also, every twenty days, and even causes the women to grind it, without respect to station. His soldiers have assassinated many of the most influential citizens, and the wives and daughters are prostituted—the whole country is given up to the troops to induce them forward. R. M.

ADVANCE OF THE MEXICAN ARMY AND RE-CAPTURE OF SAN ANTONIO.

The New Orleans-Bee of the 15th ultimo, states that it was currently reported that the town of San Antonio had fallen into the hands of Santa Anna and his army—about 4,000 in number. By forced marches, Santa Anna took the citizens by surprise; and they were obliged to surrender or fly into the garrison. There were about 200 in the fort, well prepared and furnished with provisions. When Santa Anna sent them orders for an immediate and unconditional surrender, they replied that he should first attest their strength; and that they were capable of holding out against any force of his, even if it contained 5,000 men.

There were 700 Texans encamped some miles distant. These immediately hastened to the camp, resolved to cut off the retreat and supplies of the invading army. San Antonio may therefore be the grave of Santa Anna; not only the triumph of Texas independence but of Mexican liberty.

A deplorable apathy has recently manifested itself in the Texian army, all were anxious not to be garrisoned in San Antonio; and hence perhaps the capture. The journals of San Felipe greatly complained of this spirit, and say that those who were determined to capture the town formerly were solicitous to leave it to its present fate.

The Texian commissioners are beating up for recruits and loans in Kentucky and Tennessee. Cols. Archer and Wharton arrived in Louisville on the 3d inst. and col. Wm. H. Wharton, lately wrote ourselves an encouraging letter from Nashville.

*Since writing the above, we have been informed on creditable authority that our statement is correct in general. Col. Prayers is in command of the garrison at San Antonio; and is determined to act with rigor. But our informant states that the force gone to the relief of the town amounts to 1,200 men, well equiped, prepared and provided. He also believes that general Cos and not Santa Anna has surprised the town; and that the number of the besiegers is not greater than 1,000; who advanced stealthily by forced marches through unfrequented ways. The main body of the Mexican army—either from fear of the Texian rifles, or from disaffection to the cause of Santa Anna—did not and will not enter Texas. Cos has advanced to retrieve his character—but also to ruin it, as he passed his parole d'honneur not to fight against the Texans. He will now receive condign punishment; and find his grave where he lost his fame.

From the New Orleans Bee.

Yesterday we reported the capture of San Antonio, as rumored; but we have not yet received any corroboration of that statement, although we believe it correct. To-day we are enabled to present an official account of the first skirmish between the Mexicans and Texans, published in the Mercurio or Matamoros of the 7th inst. It was transmitted for publication to general F. V. Fernandez, by the writer general Urrea as sent to Santa Anna; and furnishes a ludicrous specimen of the Bombastes Furioso style:

Army of operations—Division of Goliad. Sir, according to information received after my leaving Matamoros, I learnt that the insurgent forces stationed here had sent their cavalry towards Goliad, for the purpose of making incursions. I therefore made an effort; I vanquished all difficulties, and forcing a march during three days and nights, I arrived here at the dawn of day—not having with me more than 100 cavalry men. I attacked the enemy, who defended himself with firmness in the houses that served for barracks. But even there he left 16 dead; and 21 taken prisoners or wounded—among whom were some officers—There are 5 Mexicans among the prisoners. All the arms with 100 horses are in my possession.

I have the pleasure to inform you of this triumph obtained by the Mexican arms; and however feeble it may be, it will suffice to prove to our proud and scornful enemy what the valor and courage of Mexican soldiers can effect: for in short those with me rushed into the midst of the affray like lions; and in a moment they hewed the rebels in pieces, none of whom escaped from this city.

I have however to lament the death of a brave dragoon, who was slain; and also three other dragoons and a sergeant wounded.

I am now in search of doctor Grant, who (according to the information that I received) is now in the neighborhood of Mier, with 50 riflemen; and I know, not what number of Mexicans.

I shall hereafter give you a more detailed account of the affair, and conclude in assuring you that all the soldiers composing this division are fraught with enthusiasm; and burn to distinguish themselves in defence of the sacred rights of the nation.

I am, &c. JOSE URREA.

God and liberty! San Patricio, 27th Feb. 1836.
To his excell. the president, D. Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna, general in chief of the army of operations.

Another document dated 7th March, from San Patricio, gives an account of another victory in similar terms.

To col. D. Jose M. Guerra.

My very respectable chief,—yesterday at 3 p. m. we commenced an attack on the rebel columns, below the habitation of Agua dulce. The surprise occasioned them by our ambuscade was such that they did not perceive us till they were in our power. They fired a few pistol shots; but so very badly directed that they only wounded one horse. We charged them in the plain for the distance of two leagues and a half; and pursued them as if they were savage horses (mestanos). They forgot they carried muskets and pistols, with which they had learned to direct their fires. Thirty-two dead were found on the field of battle; and we took 4 prisoners. Among the slain were col. Grant, major-general Morris, a captain and a lieutenant of artillery. The fact is that our troops pursued them with poised lance which was sufficient to achieve all. I am &c.

NICOLAS RODRIGUES.

From the same.

Important from Texas.—By the arrival of a vessel at New Orleans, in seven days from Matagorda, the New Orleans Bee has obtained the following particulars of the late siege by the Mexicans of San Antonio de Behar.

The besieging army was commanded by generals Sesma and Cos. It consisted of 40 companies of infantry, numbering at an average of 60 or 70 men each; and of about 1,500 cavalry under Folisalos—with 500 mules and baggage of all kinds. These were seen and numbered by captain Derrit of the Texian army, previous to the engagement. The Texans in the fort were infantry and some cavalry for foraging expeditions under the command of colonels Bowie and Travers—numbering about 200.

The assault on the fort of Alamo in the town of San Antonio commenced about 3 p. m. on the 28th of February, the Mexican army hoisting a black flag aloft as indicating no quarters. The garrison being well supplied with 18 pounders planted on the fort, made them ply with dreadful effect, sweeping companies of the assailants before the shot. The Mexicans surrounded the fort on all sides, but on all sides were they saluted with its artillery. This continued till 7 p. m. when the Mexicans thought proper to evacuate the town, and retire to an encampment within in two miles—after leaving 500 of their comrades slain before the fort.

The provisional government of Texas being informed of the contest, an immediate draft of one-third of all Texans capable of bearing arms were ordered by the acting governor. But so eager were the Texans in general for their prompt and certain triumph, that when the order reached Matagorda, not one-third only but all able bodied citizens volunteered. Numerous companies were immediately on the march to San Antonio, to drive the Mexicans beyond Rio Grande, or leave them on the field of battle. They will act on the offensive in their future operations.

Doctor Grant is not killed: he, colonel Johnson and another were saved. It appears that Grant and some 20 or 30 others had gone on a scouting party, and had approached too near the invading army. They were immediately attacked by a column of the enemy, and only three escaped—Grant among the number, exhausted and almost naked, as he was closely pursued by the Mexican cavalry.

The Mexicans have abandoned Copano, and fortified Labadie or Goliad, higher up. There are now 700 men stationed there, well prepared with artillery and ammunition, and disposed to play checkmate with the wing of the Mexican army, under general Urrea, lately encamped at San Patricio.

From the Matamoros Mercurio of March 4th.

The president pro. tem. of the Mexican republic, has ordered the ports of Matagorda, la Boca, San Luis, Galveston, Brazoria, Harrisburg, Goliad, Anahuac, Copano, and all the intermediate ports on the coast of Texas from long. 94 50, to 101 W. of London, to be closed against all foreign commerce.

This law will be in force in 30 days after its promulgation in this city, for all foreign vessels in the Mexican waters, and 90 for those from foreign ports, and will continue in force till further disposition of the government.

Signed, TONNELL, commandant general of Nuevo Leon and Tamaulipas.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman residing in Texas to his friend in New Orleans:—

“By the latest information, Santa Anna was upon the frontiers, with from 6 to 8,000 men, and was determined upon the extermination, or expulsion of the whole population of Texas. In his first essay to effect this object, his vanguard commanded by Cos, made an assault upon the Alamo (the citadel) of Bexar, and was repulsed—accounts say, with the loss of 500 men; but if we make due allowances for exaggerations, the Mexican loss will probably turn out to be some fifty men.

"The contest will doubtless be bloody, and if the Texian army should be defeated on the frontiers, they will be compelled to retreat to the Colorado, as there is no line of defence to the west of that river, that can effectually be defended although they may make a temporary stand at the Guadalupe, until the population in their rear can flee across the Colorado.

MAJOR DADE'S DETACHMENT.

The army under general Gaines, on its march from Tampa visited the scene of the massacre of the 28th of December, and buried the remains of major Dade and his ill-fated companions. The appearance of the battle field is represented as being melancholy beyond description. The victims lay just as they fell in that bloody contest. The officers and many of the soldiers were recognised. Major Dade lay between the head of the column and the advance guard. Captain Frazer was near him and was identified by the breastpin in his bosom. Lieutenant Mudge lay by a tree, two soldiers near him. He had a ring on his finger, and four gold pieces in his pocket and wore an officer's cap. Captain Gardener, lieutenants Gassinger, Henderson and Keias lay inside the breast work of logs which was thrown up after the first attack. Dr. Catlin was outside, and was identified by his stock. The breastwork appeared to have been enfiladed in every direction. Thousands of rifle balls were lodged in the INSIDE of the breastwork, and appeared to have been directed over the opposite side of the defences.

Major Dade's uniform coat was not found. With this exception, not one of these brave but unfortunate men, had been plundered. Silver, gold, jewelry and watches were untouched—nothing seems to have been taken but arms and ammunition. "To what are we to ascribe conduct so singular? It was not the effect of hurry and fear of an attack by a stronger party, for they buried their own dead, as was ascertained, before leaving the field of battle. Was it forbearance, and magnanimity in the savages, or was it intended to show that it was blood alone they sought, and that in the game of life! Oceola, they were playing, they had no use for such baubles! Oceola is a master spirit, and must have acquired a wonderful influence over the minds of his followers, to induce them to forego the opportunity of gaining possession of articles of which they are notoriously fond. Our men were struck with awe and astonishment at the circumstance, and we fear that many a tragic event must be recorded, before the close of this war with an enemy capable of such determination and such self control.

THE ABOLITION QUESTION.

We have perused with great, with unmingled satisfaction, the report and resolves of the joint committee of the legislature of this commonwealth, of which Mr. Lunt is chairman, on the important and all engrossing subject of abolition. A strain of manly and forcible eloquence runs through the whole of them, rendering them worthy of the times, and creditable alike to the committee, the legislature, and the commonwealth. We this day publish the resolutions, thinking the wider such sentiments are diffused, the sooner the great the unexampled excitement existing among our brethren of the south, will be allayed, and harmony restored. God grant that this may be the result.

This is no party question. On this momentous subject, let every feeling of this description be hushed—former animosities, if any exist, be forgotten—and let every man who loves his country, and hopes to see the blessed constitution under which we live perpetuated, vote for the acceptance of the report, and the passage of the resolutions, the latter of which we subjoin. [Boston paper.]

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

In the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six.

Whereas, the legislatures of our sister states of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Alabama, have transmitted to the legislature of this commonwealth, certain memorials and resolutions, relating to the subject of domestic slavery within their limits; which state that the proceedings of certain persons, therein styled abolitionists, are dangerous to the public peace, are calculated to excite the slave to insurrection and revolt, and to render not only the property but the lives of our southern brethren insecure; and whereas, they call upon us by the most interesting and solemn motives, to aid them in arresting the progress of this evil; and whereas, in our opinion, the institution of domestic slavery is one in which, as it is settled by the constitution of these United States, we have no title to interfere, especially against the consent of those whose interests may be most deeply affected by such a course; and whereas, it is our highest political duty to endeavor to maintain the most friendly and intimate relations with all the states of this great and happy union, and to discountenance every thing which may tend to its disturbance and dissolution; therefore,

Be it resolved, by the senate and house of representatives, in general court assembled, and by the authority of the same, that this legislature, regarding the constitution of these United States as the most sacred and inestimable political inheritance which could have been transmitted to us by our ancestors, looks indignantly upon every thing calculated to impair its permanency; and that we deem it our high duty to maintain the union, which it secures, at every hazard, and by every sacrifice, not inconsistent with our known duties as men, citizens and Christians.

Resolved, That this legislature distinctly disavows any right whatever in itself, or in the citizens of this commonwealth, to interfere in the institution of domestic slavery in the southern states; it having existed therein before the establishment of the constitution; it having been recognised by that instrument; and it being strictly within their own keeping.

Resolved, That this legislature, regarding the agitation of the question of domestic slavery as having already interrupted the friendly relations which ought to exist between the several states of this union; and as tending permanently to injure, if not altogether to subvert, the principles of the union itself; and believing that the good expected by those who excite its discussion in the non-slaveholding states, is, under the circumstances of the case, altogether visionary, while the immediate and future evil is great and certain; does hereby express its entire disapprobation of the doctrines upon this subject avowed, and the general measures pursued by such as agitate the question; and does earnestly recommend to them carefully to abstain from all such discussion, and all such measures, as may tend to disturb and irritate the public mind.

Resolved, That this legislature entirely disapproves of all those tumultuous and riotous proceedings everywhere, which have arisen from the agitation of this question; and believing that the good citizens of this commonwealth entertain a sacred regard for the authority of the laws, and for the preservation of the public peace, this legislature earnestly recommends and demands that, by their influence and example, and by their quiet and peaceable demeanor, they will do all in their power to prevent the recurrence of such scenes; and it enjoins upon all magistrates and civil officers, the firm and faithful discharge of the duties entrusted to them, to maintain order and decorum, and to uphold the dignity of the commonwealth.

Resolved, That his excellency the governor be requested to transmit copies of this report and these resolves to the executive of each of those states which have addressed us upon the subject.

MR. STEVENSON'S APPOINTMENT.

We have already stated that the senate had confirmed the nomination of Mr. Stevenson as minister to England. It appears by the vote that greater opposition was made to his nomination than to any of the previous nominations at this session. In the absence of Mr. Leigh, Mr. Webster and Mr. Kent, all opposed to the nomination, there were still nineteen senators voting against it. The injunction of secrecy having been taken off from the vote, and the report of the committee on foreign relations; we publish the latter in our paper to-day, to show the grounds on which the minority are presumed to have voted.

In senate, March 3, 1836.

Mr. Clay, from the committee on foreign relations, submitted the following report:

The committee on foreign relations, to whom was referred the nomination of Andrew Stevenson, of Virginia, as minister plenipotentiary and envoy extraordinary to Great Britain, have, according to order, had the same under consideration, and now beg leave to report:

That, on the 30th May, 1834, Andrew Stevenson was nominated for the same office, and on the 24th of the succeeding month he was rejected by the senate; that Martin Van Buren, of New York, had been previously nominated for the same office, and on the 25th of January, 1833, had been rejected by the senate; that it remained vacant from this period until the nomination of Mr. Stevenson, and it has continued vacant from the time of his rejection. This office has, therefore, been unoccupied during a term of more than four years.

When Mr. Stevenson was first nominated, he was speaker of the house of representatives of the United States, which office he resigned on the — day of June, 1834. Whilst that nomination was under consideration, it appeared to the senate that the secretary of state had, on the 15th day of March, 1833, addressed an official note to Mr. Stevenson, in which the secretary said: "I am directed by the president to inform you, confidentially, that as soon as advices shall be received that the British government consent to open negotiations with this, which are daily expected, it is his intention to offer you the place of minister plenipotentiary to the court of St. James; and he requests that, should this appointment be agreeable to you, you would hold yourself in readiness to embark in the course of the summer. I congratulate you, sir, on this mark of the president's confidence." This note was received by Mr. Stevenson; but, if he returned a direct answer, it did not appear to the senate.

Subsequent to the receipt of this note, in April, 1833, Mr. Stevenson was elected member of the house of representatives from the state of Virginia, took his seat at the commencement of the session of congress in the December following, was elected speaker of the house, and continued to discharge the duties of that office until he resigned it, as hereinbefore stated.

It appears further to the senate that, shortly after Mr. Stevenson received the note of the secretary of state before mentioned, he had an interview and consultation with Mr. Thomas Ritchie, his friend and neighbor, and the editor of a leading newspaper supporting the administration, published at Richmond, in Virginia, on the subject of the contents of that note. In that interview, Mr. Ritchie, in a letter addressed to Mr. Stevenson, in June, 1834, says, it struck him that the president might appoint Mr. Stevenson, in case the contingency happened during the recess, and not send him, but Mr. Livingston, to France. "I suggested (says he) that these appointments ought not, and could not be made, according to the spirit of the constitution, during the recess of the senate. You (Mr. Stevenson) promptly and cordially concurred in this view of the subject, and I then determined to write to a friend in Washington, for the purpose of laying this view before the president himself. You approved of my doing so; and, in fact, we agreed perfectly in the course to be taken. We determined to take no notice of Mr. Livingston's letter, to act yourself as if no such letter had been written; that it would be best not to offer to accept the appointment if made in the summer, and to wait the action of the senate," &c.

In pursuance of the plan thus arranged between Mr. Stevenson and Mr. Ritchie, the latter, in March, 1833, addressed two letters to Mr. W. B. Lewis, at the city of Washington, who was the friend and enjoyed the confidence of the president, and held the office of auditor. Extracts of these letters were furnished by Mr. Lewis, and presented to the senate on the occasion of the first nomination of Mr. Stevenson. Mr. Ritchie says to Mr. Lewis: "I am about to address you on a subject that has caused much speculation among our friends, and great uneasiness in my bosom. I speak to you as a friend, and without the slightest reserve. The papers have recently spoke of a batch of appointments, which the president is about to make, embracing the two highest missions to European courts, and the two highest seats in his cabinet. I have conversed freely with our friend Stevenson upon them, and I have this day communicated to him my intention to write to you, and to lay before you my views of the matter.

"We have the utmost confidence in the virtue of gen. Jackson. We have no idea that he would arrogate to himself new powers, at the expense of the other departments of the government. His generous ambition has been fully satisfied! He has nothing more to ask of his country than a verdict of approbation when he lays down the high and difficult office with which he is intrusted! We all know it, and every candid individual admits it! We believe that the course he may pursue will be with a single eye to the public interest. But whilst we dismiss all apprehensions that he will designedly abuse his authority, we wish, at the same time, that he should do no act that may be plead, hereafter, by an unworthy successor, in justification of his acts. In this last term of his administration, we wish to see no precedent set, which may be perverted in future times; we desire it on our own account as well as that of our country. We wish to see his administration set in glory; and we wish to see our country benefited, in all time to come, by his pure example. But this cannot be, if any error should be committed against principle, even from the best of motives; if any authority should be assumed which does not fairly belong to him, or even if any doubtful power should be exercised upon any delicate branch of the constitution; high popularity would only make it more current. One of the powers which attaches to the executive is that of appointment; over its exercise is accordingly thrown, and wisely thrown, the check of concurrence by the senate. Now, sir, doubts do exist whether the vacancy in the missions to London and Paris did not occur during the recess of the senate. Secondly, whether the vacancy does not still exist; and thirdly, whether it ought now to be filled without a consultation with the senate."

The letters from which these extracts were taken, having been written expressly with a view of being laid before the president, there can be no doubt that it was done. Their main object, that of preventing the appointment of Mr. Stevenson in the vacation of the senate, was secured. The president forbore to make it, and waited until the senate assembled at the ensuing session before the nomination was made.

It is stated by the president, in his message of the 13th June, 1834, communicating the note of the secretary of state to Mr. Stevenson, that the negotiations to which it refers were commenced early in April, 1833, in the city of Washington, instead of London, and as they have been since conducted here, no further communication was made to Mr. Stevenson. What these negotiations were has not been stated. Whatever they might have been, the residence of a minister of the U. States at London, at all times, is obviously proper; and that the appointment of Mr. Stevenson did not depend upon any particular negotiations, is manifest from the fact of his having been finally nominated to the office. If the president had abandoned all intention of sending him to England, inasmuch as he had been requested to hold himself in readiness to go, during the summer of 1833, and had not declined the offer, he would probably have been notified of the change in the views of the president.

The senate saw, therefore, that a promise of the mission to Great Britain had been communicated to Mr. Stevenson on the 5th March, 1833. They saw an indirect intervention, with Mr. Stevenson's knowledge and acquiescence, to prevail on the president not to make the appointment in the vacation of the senate, in accommodation to the views of Mr. Stevenson and his friend Mr. Ritchie. They saw that the president did forbear to make the appointment in the vacation of the senate. And they saw the final execution of the promise, as far as it depended upon the executive, by his nomination on the 30th May, 1834. During this long interval, he had been elected by the people of a congressional district in Virginia as their representative, ignorant of his having possession of such an official promise; he had been elected, under like ignorance, by the house of representatives, as their speaker; and, in that station, had performed all the highly important duties incident to it. That office, at all times one of great influence, possessed more than ordinary weight in the session of 1833-4. The president, sometime before its commencement, had directed the public deposits to be withdrawn from the bank of the United States, and placed in the local banks. That measure excited deep and general sensation throughout the country; divided the people; divided the constitutional advisers of the president; divided congress, and became a subject of warm and animated discussion in both houses. It was at this extraordinary period, that the speaker of the house of representatives, invested with the power of appointing and arranging the committees of the house, and wielding a great influence, secretly held a written official promise of the most important mission abroad, every body being ignorant of the fact except himself, the president, the secretary of state, and a few confidential friends.

It was under these circumstances that his nomination came up for consideration in the senate. It is a fundamental principle of free governments that, in order to preserve the purity of their administration, each of the three departments into which, according to all safe maxims, they are divided, should be kept independent of and without influence of the others. But, if the head of one of those departments may, at a critical period, confidentially present, and for a long period of time hold up to the presiding officer of the popular branch of another, the powerful inducement of a splendid foreign mission, is there not imminent danger of undue subservience? of a failure of that presiding officer faithfully and independently to discharge the high duties of his exalted station.

The senate thought there was, and withheld its advice and consent to the nomination of Mr. Stevenson as minister to Great Britain. And now, after a lapse of near two years, with all the circumstances by which his original nomination was attended remaining in full force, but with considerable individual variations in the composition of the senate, the same individual is again nominated by the president for the same office. Doubtless a place, more than any other foreign appointment, important to be constantly occupied, has not been kept vacant with a view to, or in expectation of, any such variations. Doubtless, in the ample field for selection which the intelligence and patriotism of near fifteen millions of people offer, some individual equally well qualified with, and less exceptionable than Mr. Stevenson, might be designated to represent the United States at the court of St. James. Doubtless no personal feelings or wishes to achieve a triumph over the senate, can have prompted the renewal of this nomination.

Whatever may have been its motives, the committee neither know nor have any thing to do with them. They are not themselves aware of any peculiar fitness in Mr. Stevenson, or any absolute necessity of deputed him, and only him, as the minister of the United States to Great Britain. In ordinary times, the fact of his being unacceptable to a large portion of the senate, even if that did not constitute an actual majority, would be regarded as deserving of consideration. In a free government it should be the aim of those who administer it to promote harmony in the public counsels, and satisfaction among the people.

The senate of the United States is supposed, by the theory of the constitution, to be as free and independent in the exercise of its judgment on nominations, submitted to its consideration, as the president is in proposing them. Each of the two components of the appointing power acts upon its own sense of duty, and upon its own responsibility. The senate has no right to require the president to nominate any particular individual, and the president has no right to require the senate to confirm any particular nomination. When the senate has once decided upon a nomination, there ought to be an end of the matter.

Prior to the present administration, instances of renomination were rare, and are believed to have occurred only when some indication was given from the senate of a desire that it should take place. It has of late become much more frequent. The practice is liable to great abuses. A president disposed to advance favorites to public offices, and finding a senate disagreeing with him as to their fitness, may forbear for a long time, to the detriment of the public service, to nominate any person to fill them, until from those changes, of individual members to which all collective bodies are liable, a senate happens to be found more yielding and complying. When a nomination is once rejected, the exact state of the votes of the senate is known to the president; and if the practice of renomination is indulged, in process of time there will be danger of the existence or the imputation of corruption. The committee think that the practice ought to be resisted; that, when the senate has once rejected an individual nomination, the decision ought to be held as final and conclusive; and that it ought not to confirm the nomination of the same person when again made for the same without strong special cause. In the present case, such cause is not alleged or known to exist; whilst all the considerations which formerly opposed the confirmation of Mr. Stevenson continue in unabated strength. The committee, therefore, recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the senate do not advise and consent to the appointment of Andrew Stevenson as minister plenipotentiary and envoy extraordinary to Great Britain.

NILES' WEEKLY REGISTER.

FOURTH SERIES. NO. 6—VOL. XIV.] BALTIMORE, APRIL 9, 1836. [VOL. L. WHOLE NO. 1,281

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY H. NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

An extra half sheet accompanies the present—and yet as much matter for insertion remains as there was before!—the most of which is very interesting for record.

The undersigned, for a long time past, has been without an assistant in his editorial business; and forced to give a daily, and almost hourly, attention to the duties that belong to the patrons of this old and much favored establishment; and oftentimes under the most irksome or painful circumstances: for, “he is not so young as he was,” and an injury received in October last, incapacitates him, except in a small and very laborious degree, for his formerly favorite occupation—writing; and also of the facility of handling and overhauling papers, as heretofore. And thus, as the means are diminished, the amount of patience and employment to perform is increased—to the manifest injury of his health, through the want of wholesome exercise and needful relaxation. Indeed, it would seem that almost all the business of his place depended upon “force-work.” As an instance, he has been compelled to give up his numerous and important, endeared and honored private correspondents; not being oftentimes able to write in a manner that is comprehensible to any one, imperfectly acquainted with the character of his letters or signs, uncertainly and confusedly drawn by him, to express ideas.

It will be recollected, by some, that attending the fair of the AMERICAN INSTITUTE, at New York, about four months ago, he had the great misfortune, when in the act of descending from an “Omnibus,” to fall in the street, (as has happened to hundreds of others),* in consequence of a sudden starting of the horses at the rate of nine or ten miles an hour, and at the moment when he was in the act of stepping on the pavement—which consequently and necessarily threw him on his back; and, in putting out his hand to save himself, the two bones of his lower left arm, were broken short off, and the muscles severely strained, or, possibly, also broken. The bones healed speedily—say in about three weeks, but the muscles remain nearly as they were—though much has been attempted to improve them: but the “misery” does not stop here—the pain, soreness and stiffness that belongs to the left arm, by the “power of sympathy,” or some unknown cause, (and especially in damp weather), extends also to the right, and renders that nearly as incompetent to its accustomed employments as is the left. It may be sufficient to say, that, since the accident, he has been unable either to dress or undress himself, or to cut up his meat at the table. It is impossible for him to perform these “operations” though he hopes that the injury received has been, in some small degree, abated.†

Under such circumstances, the undersigned desires to obtain an assistant—a gentleman of respectable talent, indefatigable industry and application, courteous deportment, and a willingness to perform all things belonging to the place—of undoubted integrity, sobriety, &c. and qualified, by his means or credit, speedily to take a permanent interest, such as may be agreed upon, in this old, but still prosperous establishment—all the circumstances of which will be candidly stated, or may be ascertained by personal observation or inspection—which latter, probably, will be the best. It will afford a decent income, and may be increased. It is unnecessary to say more, except that the qualifications set forth are indispensable. The opportunity for such a person to put himself into a reasonably profitable, and highly respectable situation, rarely occurs. A literary fop, or catcher of words, is not desired; but a modicum of common sense with a due application of it, is required by the generally sober and sedate readers of the Register. Address

The Susquehanna canal bill has passed both branches of the legislature of Maryland, and is now a law.

This is to be very important to the future trade of Baltimore.

We learn from Richmond, under date of April 2, that the resignation of governor Tazewell has actually taken place, and the executive duties are now performed by lieutenant gov. Robertson. Governor T. has left this city for his residence in Norfolk.

The bill which has been for some time before the legislature of Massachusetts, proposing to create a bank with a capital of ten millions, was indefinitely postponed on Thursday last week, by a vote of 261 to 59.

It is said that schemes for rail roads are before the British parliament, involving an expenditure of upwards of two hundred millions of dollars.

A law has passed the legislature of Pennsylvania indemnifying Mr. Robb for injury done to his property, in Moyamensing, during the election riots in 1834.

When the public arsenal at Frankfort, Ky. blew up and all its arms supposed to be destroyed, it was found, on digging among the rubbish, that a brass field piece had remained uninjured. The history of this piece is interesting. It was in the first place, captured from Burgoyne at Saratoga, afterwards surrendered to the British by gen. Hull—retaken by the army under gen. Harrison, at the battle of the Thames, presented by congress to gov. Shelby, and by him to the state of Kentucky.

Land is selling at Dunkirk, about 30 miles west of Buffalo, on Lake Erie, at $4,000 an acre for lots only half a mile out of the town. Dunkirk has one of the finest harbors on the lake, and is just within the line dividing New York from Pennsylvania.

Captain J. B. Nicholson, a distinguished officer of the U. S. navy, has presented to the corporation of Richmond, his native city, portraits of Columbus and Americus Vesputius, copied from original paintings at Naples.

Such is the anxiety to increase the culture of silk in New England, that the seed of the white mulberry sells at $7 50 per lb. Some persons who were sagacious enough last summer to foresee this, will realize no mean fortunes.

We are gratified to observe, says the New Jersey State Gazette, an increasing attention to the culture of silk. Five companies were incorporated by our legislature to prosecute this business, one of which is located in Trenton.

There are 28 banks at Boston, with an aggregate capital of $18,150,000; on which an average dividend, was made, for the last six months, of rather less than 3 per cent—in all 543,000 dollars.

The New Orleans papers state that J. B. Pervault, esq. has been appointed cashier of the citizens bank of New Orleans, with a salary of ten thousand dollars per annum, a house to reside in, et cetera.

*As an evidence of this, the editor, on his return home, met, in the steamboat, no less than four other persons, (strangers to him), who had received serious injuries from the recklessness of the “Omnibus” drivers—how many more there were among the passengers, he knows not; but probably a dozen that had been thrown down, or “spilt” in the street, as one of them said.

†This is rather an “illiad of woes”—but he thinks it right to speak of “things as they are.”

The surplus revenue has increased, is increasing, and must be diminished. The amount of public moneys in the deposite banks, by the returns to (or nearest to) the 1st of March, had increased to thirty-three million and seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars!

A meeting was held in Philadelphia on Thursday week, on the subject of the "system of gambling in stocks," now extensively practised in that city. One of the resolutions passed sets forth that the tendency of the practice is to affect, injuriously, commerce and general business, by causing frequent and serious agitations in the money market, and to blunt the moral feeling of young men, who are looked to as the future hope of commercial and manufacturing enterprise. A committee was appointed to recommend such remedies at a future meeting as would correct the evils.

The governor of Pennsylvania is in the full tide of "reformation." "Few die and none resign."

It is stated in the Newburg Gazette, that hundreds of cattle are dying in Orange county, New York, from the want of food and the unexampled severity of the winter and spring. It is estimated that one-tenth of all the cattle and sheep of Orange county, had perished previous to the deep snow of Tuesday, which must greatly increase the distress of the farmers. The average depth of snow and ice is now stated [say 10 days ago], to be about three feet over the whole county, and there can be no prospect of any grazing until May. In the mean time, the stock of hay and grain has been distributed until few farmers have retained sufficient to last until the middle of April.

James Buchanan, esq. his Britanic majesty's consul at New York, has presented to the United States naval lyceum, in that city, a full length portrait of his majesty, king William the fourth.

Five hundred thousand dollars worth of whips are annually made in the town of Westfield, Massachusetts. Many persons are employed—especially females, in weaving and plaiting.

A screw manufacturing company has been formed at Schenectady, which it is expected, will turn off five hundred gross per day of wood screws of all sizes, from a half an inch to three inches.

The nomination of Upton S. Heath, to be U. States judge for the district of Maryland, to supply the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of judge Glenn, was, on Monday last, confirmed by the senate of the U. States.

APPOINTMENTS BY THE PRESIDENT,

By and with the advice and consent of the senate.

Jesse L. Holman, to be judge for the district of Indiana.

James P. Grundy, to be attorney for the western district of Tennessee.

John Wells, jr. Robert Getty, Nathaniel Luffborough, C. H. W. Warton and John Holtzman, to be justices of the peace for Washington county, in the District of Columbia; and Jonathan Shillaber, George W. P. Custis, George W. Wise, George Brent, William C. Gardner, Robert Brockett, and Tench Ringold, to be justices of the peace for Alexandria county, in said district.

A French paper calls attention to the fact that in the month of August next, the city of Rome will number 2,584 years since its foundation, ab urbe condita.

The Mobile Register says—

Accounts from New Orleans represent the money market in that city as somewhat embarrassed. From the collision between Mexico and Texas, the usual receipts of specie from Mexico have been diminished the present season, several millions of dollars; and the demand for specie in New Orleans has occasioned a reduction in bank facilities, and brought down exchange on New York to 2½ per cent. discount for the best sixty days bills. Constant and heavy drafts made on the banks for specie have rendered it necessary for them to take this course, and in the exercise of a prudent discretion, to place themselves in a condition to meet any emergency. The effect of it is to be seen in a check to business operations generally.

There are causes of another character that have contributed to this embarrassment. The high prices of produce in Havana, coupled with the abundance of the crops of the Island of Cuba, have changed the usual balance of trade, and the amount drawn and to be drawn, against shipments to countries requiring their sugars, coffee, &c. is largely increased. That to the United States is particularly so, owing to the great deficiency in the sugar crop of Louisiana, which has rendered large importations of that article indispensable. The consequence has been that exchange on the United States, hitherto ranging from 1 to 3 per cent. discount, has now fallen to 8 and 9. Formerly, sterling bills bore a higher premium in Havana than in the United States,—now they are quoted at 4 per centum there, while in this country the command 9 per centum readily. Under these circumstances remittances cannot be made to Havana in bills without inevitable loss, and they are consequently made in specie.—Hence another cause for large drafts of coin on New Orleans.

The sensitiveness of the money market is well understood by merchants. Touched at an important point, it is instantly felt through all the ramifications of trade. Mobile is intimately connected in business with New Orleans, and whatever causes affect the moneyed interests there, are certain of their operation here. Independently of those considerations, it is known that large drafts of specie have been made upon the banks in this city, for objects unconnected with regular business, and we regret to add that they are continued from day to day.

Hudson tunnel. Our readers are aware that a project is on foot for constructing a tunnel under the Hudson river at Albany, where it is more than half a mile wide. The Albany Advertiser says—"this project is no jest. It is believed the stock will be immediately taken up, and that the work can be done for about $300,000.

According to a table furnished to the New York Transcript by Mr. Sickels, the city inspector, the number of buildings erected in that city in 1834 was 877, and in the following year 1,259, showing an increase in a single year of 382. In a single ward, the 12th, 274 buildings were put up in 1835. In the same year twelve new churches were built.

The officers of the marine corps have presented col. Archibald Henderson, the commandant, with a splendid sword-cane, made from a piece of the original timber of the old Cyane, which has recently been broken up at Philadelphia. It appears that the colonel commanded the main guard on board the frigate Constitution, with the gallant Stewart, when he captured the Cyane and Levant.

On the 2d instant, the Hudson was opened to navigation only so far as West Point. It was thought that Newburg would be reached by steamboats on Monday the 4th.

The New York Journal of Commerce states that a new steamboat, of great length and power, has been put upon the line between that city and New Haven. She made an experimental trip, and accomplished the distance (usually stated at 84 miles by water), in four hours and a half, or at the rate of about eighteen miles per hour.

The Pennsylvania canal is filled with water on the main line from Columbia to Pittsburgh, and burthen and passenger boats are now running on it. The canal business is opening with unusual activity and bustle.

Auction sales of real estate were made in New Orleans about a fortnight ago, to the amount of $322,000 in two days. The principal purchaser was Mr. Achille Murat, on account of Joseph Bonaparte.

The militia of the United States amounts to about one million and a half of men, of which Pennsylvania and New York have 200,000, Ohio 130,000, and Virginia 100,000.

A Washington letter writer states that all the signatures to the abolition memorials presented to congress at its present session, do not exceed 27,000, and that of these, nearly 10,000 are females, and perhaps 2,000 or 3,000 are boys.

Mehemet Ali, the civilizer of Egypt and conqueror of the Arabs, is evidently backed by Russia. He derives 35 millions of francs tribute annually from the oppressed Syrians, over whom his son Ibrahim holds a rod of iron.

The steamboat "Old Dominion" arrived at Baltimore, from Norfolk, with specie for Nicholas Biddle—said to be 500,000 dollars.

The assembly of Upper Canada have appropriated $200,000 for the improvement of the roads in that province.

Naval force in the Mediterranean. The Russians have 6 ships of the line in the Levant, the Turks 8, the Egyptians 9, and the English 10.

PENNSYLVANIA. The legislature of this state closed its annual session on Friday last. The Harrisburgh Intelligencer says:

"There has not been, for many years, a legislature which has done so much for the commonwealth. They found the state under a system of taxation, her public works unfinished, her treasury empty; and absolute necessity, if some new course was not adopted, of increasing the public debt, of continuing and increasing the taxes, or stopping the completion of the public works. What has been done? Let this question be asked by every Pennsylvanian, and he will find an answer in the repeal of the tax laws—in the progress of the public works without an increase of the public debt, and a full treasury. Is this not worthy of commendation? Let the same policy be continued, and we shall soon have our improvements completed—the trade of the west secured to Pennsylvania—a sinking fund established for the extinction of the public debt, and a tide of prosperity rolling into our commonwealth which will make her the pride and glory of the republic."

Extract of a letter from captain Barr, of the Louisiana volunteers, to the editor of the New Orleans Bulletin, dated Fort Brooke, Tampa Bay, February 17th:

"On the morning after our arrival an Indian prisoner was killed in an attempt to escape; he was taken in a manner which might grace even the romantic days of chivalry. A fine noble looking Indian, asked in marriage the daughter of Black Dirt, a friendly chieftain; the old man declared that none but a warrior need pretend to his daughter, and desired young Yellow Hair, if he wished to prove himself one, to go into the woods and make prisoners of three hostile Seminoles. Yellow Hair accordingly brought in three of the enemy; whether he surrounded them, (as the Irishman did), or not, I do not pretend to say, but two of the prisoners are now chained in the fort, and the other was killed in the manner I mentioned. Yellow Hair of course married his black haired damsel, and set out on the 13th, at the head of a party of his countrymen, to act as a scout to the main army, who have marched in quest of the enemy."

The receipts and expenditures of Massachusetts are stated as follows:

The revenue of the commonwealth of Massachusetts, for the year 1835, was derived from the following sources—

Bank tax,.....	$305,000
Auction tax,.....	55 0/0
Principal and interest for eastern lands,.....	45,000
Interest on deposits city bank.....	3,000
Cash on hand January 1st, 1836.....	73,501 71

The expenditures of the government for the same year were $536,661 43, of which $120,000 went to pay the members of the multitudinous legislature. The bank tax may seem a very cheap way of raising revenue, but it may possibly turn out in reality to be very dear.

The estimate of the expenditure of the commonwealth for the present year is $538,661. The pay of the legislature is $120,000. Salary officers $67,000. For militia services $30,000. Pensions and gratuities to old soldiers $6,000. The deaf and dumb $5,500. The blind $6,000. Lunatic hospital $18,000. Agricultural societies $4,500. American institute of instruction $300. Boston society of natural history $300. Bounty for the reeling of silk and destruction of wild cats, &c. $18,000.

The revenue is derived from the bank tax, $305,000. Auction tax, $55,000. Notes for eastern lands, falling due, $45,000. Interests on deposits in City bank, 3,000. Cash in treasury January 1st, $73,700.

NEW YORK, MARCH 30. The last of the ruins. The massy walls of the late exchange building have been under the process of demolition for a few days past.

Yesterday afternoon, by means of iron cables, the marble front, which had hitherto stood a prince over the ruins, and one of the most beautiful and interesting objects which any country has exhibited among the ravages of time or the elements, was levelled to the ground, with a tremendous crash, which brought vividly to mind the scenes of the night of 16th December, when hundreds of walls, by the mere agency of fire, tumbled to the earth in a similar manner. All the marble columns in front were broken by the fall. They were, however, of little value, large slabs having been sealed off from them by the heat of the conflagration.

NAVAL. The U. S. sloop of war St. Louis sailed on Monday last for the Balize. It is intended to carry her up to New Orleans. Some of the newspapers of that city gave out, a short time ago, that there was to be found on the bar, at the entrance into the Mississippi, only eleven feet of water. We had supposed the depth to be thirteen feet. The St. Louis, it is said draws fifteen feet. [Pensacola Gazette.

PROMPT DESPATCH. Under this head the editors of the Norfolk Beacon mention that they despatched a letter to Baltimore on the afternoon of the 27th, for certain articles wanted in their establishment, and received those articles before breakfast on the morning of the 29th. "This (adds the Beacon) was the result of no particular despatch, but the ordinary course of things. Baltimore is but a stone's throw from Norfolk."

BEET-ROOT SUGAR. Several gentlemen have associated for the purpose of cultivating the beet, and introducing the manufacture of the beet root sugar. They have sent a person to France for the purpose of obtaining information in relation to the manufacture. [Boston Daily Adv.

MASSACHUSETTS. The proposition to incorporate a new bank, with a large capital, (five millions of dollars), has, after much consideration, been negatived in the legislature of this state.—It might have been passed by a bare majority; but, upon finding that the vote, in the house of representatives, upon a vital question concerning the bill, was as close as 242 to 241, Mr. Lawrence, of Boston, rose, and said his only object in supporting the bill was the public good, and he was not willing to push it through with a bare majority of one, but would prefer to leave the whole subject open to the deliberation of the people, and for that purpose he would move the indefinite postponement of the bill. In his course he was sustained by a number of the friends of the bill, and the indefinite postponement was carried by 261 votes against 69.

CONNECTICUT ELECTION. This election took place on Monday last, and the Journal of Commerce says—

By the steamboat Splendid, captain Stone, from New Haven, we have a slip from the office of the Columbian Register, (Jackson paper) of that city, dated 9 o'clock last evening, which gives returns from 48 towns out of 132 in the state. To these we have added two others. The result is 7,091 votes for Tomlinson, the wing candidate for governor, and 8,447 for Edwards (Jackson) the present incumbent. This is a Jackson gain as compared with last year, and makes it probable that the state has gone in that direction by an increased majority. Forty-nine towns have elected 28 whig representatives to the legislature, and 48 Jackson. William W. Ellsworth (whig) is elected to the senate from the 1st district, comprising Hartford and vicinity, where last year the Jackson candidate succeeded. On the contrary, a Jackson senator is elected, in the 15th district, comprising Litchfield and vicinity, which was last year represented by a whig. The Jackson men are anxious to secure two-thirds of the legislature, that they may be able to effect certain changes in the constitution. There are also two senators to congress to be elected by this legislature,—one to supply the vacancy occasioned by the death of Nathan Smith, now temporarily filled by Judge Niles, and the other to supply the place of Gideon Tomlinson, whose term of service expires on the 4th of March next.

Humiliating apology. A young man in Bradford, in this state, lately sent a letter to the editor of the Essex Banner, inclosing an advertisement, purporting to come from a young lady of Bradford, who was anxious to enter the estate of matrimony. Some pitiable feeling towards the young woman induced the letter; but the sequel must have been like vinegar to the author of it. He was ferreted out, and obliged, by the friends of the lady, to make a public confession in the following lowly manner. He gives himself a beautiful character:

"Whereas an unauthorised, false and malicious advertisement, purporting to be subscribed by Hannah Hull, was inserted in the Essex Banner of last week, I, Nathaniel Holmes, jun. of Bradford, hereby confess that I was the author of it, and that I have thereby wronged Miss Hull most cruelly, and without the least provocation or reason. I therefore penitently ask her pardon, and also take this method of informing the public, that there has never been any impropriety of any kind on her part, which could justify said advertisement, but on the contrary, that her conversation and conduct have been at all times correct, virtuous and inoffensive, and that in causing said advertisement to be sent to Mr. Farnsworth, through the post office, in a letter, inclosing two dollars for its insertion, I was actuated by a blind infatuation, and a reckless disregard for principle, honor and humanity. I therefore beg leave to express my sorrow for my barbarous insult upon Miss Hull, and to solicit her, and Mr. Farnsworth, the editor of the Essex Banner, and the public generally to forgive me. NATHANIEL HOLMES, JR."

Bradford, March 9th, 1836.

INCREASE OF THE ARMY. General Macomb has submitted to the senate, in obedience to a resolution of that body, a plan for the increase of the army to ten thousand men, without adding to the number of officers. The opinion seems to be unanimous among men of all parties, that our present force is entirely inadequate to the public defence. Had it been in the power of the general government to send a full and efficient force to Florida on the first breaking out of hostilities, that war would ere this time have been over, and a heavy loss of lives and property would have been saved. Our immense frontier is but half protected. General Macomb proposes that there shall be eight regiments of artillery, each comprising five companies of 100 men; nine regiments of infantry, each comprising eight companies of 72 men; and one regiment of dragoons comprising 715. The aggregate, including the non-commissioned staff, will be 9,955 men.

INDICTMENT FOR CONSPIRACY. The grand jury of Philadelphia on Friday last week, presented an indictment against sundry journeymen tailors for a conspiracy. It contains four counts, charging the defendants with having formed themselves into an unlawful club or combination, and adopted certain arbitrary by-laws, rules or regulations injurious to trade and commerce, and unjust and oppressive towards employers and journeymen who are not members of the society. Among these rules are the following, in substance, viz: That no member of the society should work for any employer, who employed a man that was not a member of the society. That no member should work for an employer who employed a man at a less price than that established by the society. That no member should work for any employer who refused to keep a slate to be hung up in a public part of his store, upon which should be entered the name of every journeyman taking a job from the store, and that no journeyman should take a job out of his turn. Also that during the time of a strike, a certain number should be selected from the members each day, to watch the shops; and that any one selected, on refusing to watch, should be fined five dollars.

The Yankees outdone. The Georgia Constitutionalist, a daily paper printed at Augusta, Georgia, states, that in the subscription to the stock of a certain corporation, six persons continued to subscribe for about a thousand shares, although by law only twenty shares could be subscribed by each individual. Their plan of operations was this—each individual subscribed for his twenty shares—then, by conjunction of their six names as firms of two and three partners each, and transposing the names a sufficient number of times, they formed forty-eight firms and subscribed in the names of these firms to four hundred thousand dollars worth of stock. The commissioners for distributing the stock objected to taking the subscriptions, but the gentlemen insisted, and being all lawyers, took out a precept from court to compel the commissioners to accede to their demands. The judge, before whom the case was examined, decided that—notwithstanding a regular copartnership of each firm was proved, and the articles exhibited to him—there was an evident evasion of the law in the case, and the six individuals could only take the twenty shares each, as stated in the act of incorporation.

This is equal to the best story ever related of a Yankee, although its birth-place was Georgia.

AMERICAN ENERGY. A London paper gives, as an instance of American energy, the story of a merchant from New York, who was at the London coffee house, in Ludgate Hill, when the news of the great fire which lately occurred in that city arrived. His premises were totally consumed, and he found himself, in a moment, a ruined man. His plan was instantly formed. In fifteen minutes from the time his eyes had rested on the paper, a chaise and four was at the door, in which he hurried to Dover. Arriving in the night, he hired a steamboat for 75 guineas, which soon landed him at Calais. Thence he hastened, with all possible expedition, to Lyons. He reached that city eight hours before the news of the fire, and employed his time in purchasing silk goods, to such an extent, and on such terms, as to secure a profit of at least £25,000, the destruction being principally of French silks, and to so large an amount, as to require more than all the existing stock in Lyons to make it good.

COTTON TRADE OF SCOTLAND. The cotton trade of Scotland continues to increase every year. Last year the increase was more than 3,800 bags. Total consumption nearly 100,000 bags. 32,000,000 lbs. at 9d. £1,200,000; charges and profits on spinning at 7d. £930,000; of this sum, about a half, would be for wages, and a half for tear and wear, profit, &c. Value of yarn, £2,130,000; exported (about a fourth), £530,000. Left for manufacturing £1,600,000; an expense and profit of manufacturing £1,200,000. Value of manufactured goods, £2,800,000.

TWENTY-FOURTH CONGRESS—FIRST SESSION.

SENATE.

April 1. After some minor business—

The senate proceeded to consider the bill to establish the northern boundary line of Ohio, and to provide for the admission of the state of Michigan.

The question being on the motion of Mr. Wright, to admit the state as soon as the assent of delegates appointed by the people of Michigan for that purpose to a line should be obtained.

Mr. Southard resumed the observations he had commenced on the preceding day, and spoke at much length.

Mr. Hendricks then explained the amendments which he laid on the table yesterday, and which he proposed to offer at a proper time.

Mr. Wright, Mr. Benton, Mr. Clayton, Mr. Ewing, Mr. Buchanan and Mr. Clay, severally addressed the senate.

After which, Mr. Ewing moved that the senate adjourn; which motion was decided in the negative—yeas 21, nays 24.

The debate was then resumed by Mr. Clay, Mr. Buchanan and Mr. Walker.

Mr. Clayton moved an adjournment; which was decided in the negative—yeas 21, nays 23.

Mr. Ewing of Ohio, moved that the senate should adjourn.—Determined as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Black, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing, of Ohio, Kent, Knight, Leigh, McKean, Mangum, Moore, Naudair, Porter, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Cuthbert, Ewing, of Illinois, Grundy, Hendricks, Hill, Hubbard, King, of Alabama, King, of Georgia, Linn, Morris, Niles, Nicholas, Ruggles, Robinson, Rives, Shepley, Tallmadge, Tipton, Walker, White, Wright—24.

Several other adjournments were moved, with very near similar results.

An amendment moved by Mr. Wright was carried unanimously.

Mr. Southard moved to amend the bill in the part which provides that the senators and representatives already elected shall take their seats without delay. He denied that the senate had any right by law to determine that point, without either the senate or house having looked into the qualifications of the persons so elected. He moved to strike out that clause, and called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. Benton opposed the motion.

Mr. Clay said it was not necessary to declare what the constitution already declared, that the states would have a right to send senators and representatives as soon as admitted.

The question was then taken on Mr. Southard's motion to amend, and decided as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Black, Clay, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing, of Ohio, Leigh, Naudair, Porter, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson, White—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Cuthbert, Ewing, of Ill. Grundy, Hendricks, Hill, Hubbard, King, of Alabama, King, of Georgia, Linn, Morris, Nicholas, Niles, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Shepley, Tallmadge, Tipton, Walker, Wright—22.

Mr. Calhoun (half past seven) said he would make one more effort to obtain time to look into the amendments, many of which were new, and required to be examined. He moved that the senate now adjourn; which was negative—yeas 12, nays 24.

Mr. Benton moved to reconsider the motion by which the senate had determined to adjourn over until Monday.

Mr. Benton having been counted among the nays, could not make the motion, and it was renewed by Mr. Tallmadge.

The question being taken on reconsideration, there appeared; yeas 19, nays 3.

The yeas and nays being called, the question was again taken, when there appeared—yeas 20, nays 5.

The motion to adjourn until Monday was then put, and decided in the negative.

Mr. White, (at quarter before eight) moved that the senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

The senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business, and, after some time, adjourned.

[The yeas and nays were frequently called this day.]

April 2. A communication was received from the post office department, in reply to a resolution (offered by Mr. Southard) making inquiry as to the cause of a mistake which was discovered in the accounts of the treasurer of the department.

The following is a copy of the communication:

Post office department, April 1, 1836.

SIR: In obedience to the resolution of the senate, adopted on the 29th ult. and communicated to me on the 30th, requiring me "to report to the senate whether the cause of the discrepancy of forty thousand four hundred and seventy dollars and ninety-one cents, stated in the report of the accountants to the committee of the senate, dated 3d March, 1835, as then existing in the accounts of the treasurer of the general post office, has been discovered, and the said accounts finally adjusted; and, if so, further to report the cause of said discrepancy, and who was the occasion thereof, and whether the balance, if any, has been paid," I have the honor to submit the following statement, viz:

The "account of the treasurer of the general post office," alluded to in the resolution, is presumed to be the general cash account of the department, as no account with the treasurer, as such, was ever kept.

The cash account of the department, before the first day of July last, is known to be deranged in a high degree. It is believed that many months of labor would be required to ascertain the causes and extent of that derangement. So entirely has the force of the department, employed on accounts since the first of May last, been occupied in the current business; and in examining and adjusting individual accounts of long standing, that no attempt has been made to solve the difficulties in the cash account, and no additional light has been cast upon it, except incidentally in a few of its items.

"The report of the accountants to the committee of the senate, dated 3d March, 1835," does not appear to have been officially communicated to the department; forms no part of its books or papers, and has not been thought of as a basis of official action, however useful it may be as information.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obt^d serv^t,
AMOS KENDALL.

Hon. Martin Van Buren, president of the senate.

Mr. Grundy said that it was very desirable for the department to be put in possession of the statements which had been made out by the two accountants employed by the committee during the investigation of the situation of the department under the preceding administration. If these accounts could be furnished to the department, there would be much time saved in arriving at the cause of the error, and the department was very anxious to have possession of these materials. He wished the gentleman from New Jersey to make some disposition of the communication.

Mr. Southard said he did not clearly see what particular disposition he could make of this document. If the senator from Tennessee would propose any course, he would make no objection to it. There appeared to be an important error, and the treasurer of the department had not been able to make his account with the office clear within $40,000. It had been supposed that the present head of the department, who had been so much landed for his economy and management and general efficiency, would have lost no time in instituting a rigid investigation of the accounts of the treasurer. It appeared, however, that he had been so busily occupied in settling the old accounts, which were left in a state of confusion almost inexplicable, that he could not find time for this examination. It would seem to be reasonable that the treasurer himself, under the eye of this vigilant head, would himself have labored to dispel the mystery which involved the affair. I (said Mr. S.) am possibly wrong in my views of this subject, as I have generally been in all my conjectures respecting the management of the post office, but I am certainly right in my convictions that there has been a lamentable want of regularity and system, since we have now the declaration of the postmaster general himself to this effect. He declares that it has occupied all his time to extricate the affairs of the department from the disorder into which they have been plunged. I hope then that I shall hear no more of the denunciations which have been so liberally poured forth against those who have said that the department had been in a state of utter confusion and disorder. He concluded with saying that, at present, he would only move for the printing of the document.

Mr. Grundy said he did not wish to go into any discussion of the ancient affairs of the department. That there existed a great discrepancy in the accounts, he presumed no one would pretend to dispute. He concurred with the senator from New Jersey in the opinion that the causes of this discrepancy ought to be ascertained. Perhaps the best course would be to refer the communication to the committee on the post office and post roads; and as that committee would meet on Monday, some course might then be determined on, which it would be best to pursue.

He moved to refer the communication to that committee and to print it; and the motion was agreed to.

The bill to establish the northern boundary of Ohio, and to provide for the admission of the state of Michigan into the U. States was read a third time.

On the question of its passage,

Mr. Porter stated some objections which he had to the bill, and moved to recommit it.

A wide and general debate followed—

Mr. Calhoun moved that the bill be recommitted; and the question being taken by yeas and nays, was decided as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing, of Ohio, Kent, Knight, Leigh, Mangum, Naudair, Porter, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson, White—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Cuthbert, Ewing, of Illinois, Grundy, Hendricks, Hill, Hubbard, King, of Alab. King, of Geo. Linn, McKean, McKean, Nicholas, Niles, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Shepley, Tallmadge, Tipton, Walker, Wright—24.

[Similar motions were decided by the same numbers. The majority were resolved to pass the bill.]

On motion of Mr. Preston that the senate adjourn, it was decided in the negative—yeas 20, nays 23.

The question was then taken on the passage of the bill, and decided in the affirmative; 23 to 8, many of the senators having left the chamber.

The bill was then passed in the following form:

A bill to establish the northern boundary line of the state of Ohio, and to provide for the admission of the state of Michigan into the union upon the conditions therein expressed.

Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled, That the northern boundary line of the state of Ohio shall be established at, and shall be a direct line drawn from the southern extremity of Lake Michigan, to the most northerly cape of the Maumee (Miami) bay, after that line, so drawn, shall intersect the eastern boundary line of the state of Indiana; and from the said north cape of the said bay, north east to the boundary line between the United States and the province of Upper Canada, in Lake Erie; and thence with the said last mentioned line, to its intersection with the western line of the state of Pennsylvania.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the constitution and state government which the people of Michigan have formed for themselves be, and the same is hereby, accepted, ratified and confirmed; and that the said state of Michigan shall be, and is hereby, declared to be one of the United States of America, and is hereby admitted into the union upon an equal footing with the original states, in all respects whatever: Provided always, and this admission is upon the express condition, That the said state shall consist of and have jurisdiction over all the territory included within the following boundaries and over none other, to wit: Beginning at the point where the above described northern boundary of the state of Ohio intersects the eastern boundary of the state of Indiana, and running thence with the said boundary line of Ohio, as described in the first section of this act, until it intersects the boundary line between the United States and Canada, in Lake Erie; thence with the said boundary line between the U. States and Canada, through the Detroit river, Lake Huron, and Lake Superior, to a point where the said line last touches Lake Superior; thence, in a direct line through Lake Superior to the mouth of the Montreal river; thence, through the middle of the main channel of the said river Montreal, to the middle of the lake of the Desert; thence, in a direct line, to the nearest head water of the Menomonic river; thence, through the middle of that fork of the said river first touched by the said line, to the main channel of the said Menomonic river; thence down the centre of the main channel of the same, to the centre of the most usual ship channel of the Green Bay of Lake Michigan; thence, through the centre of the most usual ship channel of the said bay, to the middle of Lake Michigan; thence through the middle of Lake Michigan, to the northern boundary of the state of Indiana, as that line was established by the act of congress of the nineteenth of April, eighteen hundred and sixteen; thence, due east, with the north boundary line of the said state of Indiana, to the north east corner thereof; and thence, south, with the east boundary line of Indiana, to the place of beginning.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That, as a compliance with the fundamental condition of admission contained in the last preceding section of this act, the boundaries of the said state of Michigan, as in that section described, declared and established, shall receive the assent of a convention of delegates elected by the people of the said state, for the sole purpose of giving the assent herein required; and as soon as the assent herein required shall be given, the president of the U. States shall announce the same by proclamation, and thereupon, and without any further proceeding on the part of congress, the admission of the said state into the union, as one of the United States of America, on an equal footing with the original states in all respects whatever, shall be considered as complete, and the senators and representatives who have been elected by the said state as its representatives in the congress of the United States shall be entitled to take their seats in the senate and house of representatives respectively, without further delay.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That nothing in this act contained, or in the admission of the said state into the union as one of the United States of America upon an equal footing with the original states in all respects whatever, shall be so construed or understood as to confer upon the people, legislature or other authorities of the said state of Michigan, any authority or right to interfere with the sale by the United States, and under their authority, of the vacant and unsold lands within the limits of the said state, but that the subject of the public lands, and the interest which may be given to the said state therein, shall be regulated by future action between congress, on the part of the United States, and the said state, or the authorities thereof. And the said state of Michigan shall in no case, and under no pretence whatsoever, impose any tax, assessment, or imposition of any description, upon any of the lands of the United States within its limits.

The bill for the admission of the territory of Arkansas as a state into the union, was then, on motion of Mr. Wright, taken up and read; and before any action was had upon it,

A motion to adjourn was made and lost—says 27.

Mr. White then moved to amend the bill as follows:

Strike out from the word "river," in the 15th line of the 1st section, to the word "Arkansas" inclusive, in the 17th line, and insert the following words: "the lines described in the first article of the treaty made between the United States and the Cherokee nation of Indians west of the Mississippi, on the 26th day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-eight."

After some remarks from Messrs. Calhoun, Southard and Buchanan,

Mr. King, of Alabama, moved that the senate adjourn; which was negative—yeas, 16, nays 18.

The amendment of Mr. White was then unanimously adopted.

After some observations from Mr. Crittenden and Mr. Calhoun, touching the qualifications of voters, and a few words in explanation from Mr. Buchanan, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and then, on motion of Mr. Mangum, the senate adjourned.

April 4. Mr. Grundy, from the committee on the post office and post roads, to whom was referred the communication from the postmaster general, reported the following resolution, which was considered and agreed to:

Resolved, That the report of the accountants employed by the committee on the post office and post roads, at the last session of congress, be printed, and a copy thereof be furnished to the postmaster general, and the postmaster general is directed to report to the senate whether the cause of the discrepancy of $40,090 91, stated in the report of the accountants to the committee of the senate, dated March 3, 1833, as then existing in the accounts of the general post office, has been discovered; and further to report the cause of said discrepancy, and who was the occasion thereof, and whether the balance, if any, has been paid.

The bill for the admission of the state of Arkansas being read a third time, and the question being on its passage,

Messrs. Benton, Swift, Buchanan, Prentiss, Porter, Morris and Ewing, of Ohio, made a few observations, when the question was taken by yeas and nays, and decided as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Buchanan, Calhoun, Clayton, Cuthbert, Ewing, of Ill. Ewing, of Ohio, Grundy, Hendricks, Hill, Hubbard, King, of Alabama, King, of Geo. Linn, McKean, Mangum, Moore, Morris, Nicholas, Niles, Preston, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Shepley, Tallmadge, Tipton, Walker, White, Wright—31.

NAYS—Messrs. Clay, Knight, Porter, Prentiss, Robbins, Swift—6.

On motion of Mr. Leigh, the expunging resolution offered by Mr. Benton was taken up for consideration.

Mr. Leigh then addressed the senate at length in opposition to the resolution.

About 20 minutes before 4 o'clock, Mr. Leigh gave way and Mr. Mangum moved to adjourn, but withdrew the motion; and the subject being informally laid on the table,

The senate, on motion of Mr. White, proceeded to the consideration of executive business; and, after remaining for some time with closed doors, the senate adjourned.

April 5. Mr. Hendricks presented the petition of sundry citizens of Carroll county, in the state of Indiana, representing the town of Delphi as the head of steamboat navigation of the Wabash river, and praying that a port of entry may be established at that place. Referred to the committee on commerce.

Mr. Benton asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to provide for the more effectual supply of bullion to the United States mint.

After a few words from Mr. Benton in explanation of the bill, from which it was gathered that the object is to supply the mint with bullion out of the public money in the deposit banks, at the rate (at present) of a million per month, he referred to letters from the director of the mint, giving the necessary statements as to the supply which the mint could consume.

The bill was read twice, and referred to the committee on finance.

Several bills were passed to a third reading, &c.

A bill was received from the house, amendatory of the act for the relief of the sufferers by fire in New York.

Mr. Davis stated that it was necessary to pass this bill at once, owing to a misconstruction of the bill which had been previously passed by the collector, who had construed it as extending its benefits to all bonds up to the day of the passage of the bill.

The bill was then, without opposition, read a first and second time, considered as in committee of the whole, read a third time, and passed.

After Mr. Leigh had concluded his speech on the "expunging" resolution, it was, on the motion of Mr. Benton, laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

A good deal of other business was attended to—but nothing important or decisive happened. Adjourned.

April 6. The morning business being disposed of, the special order of the day, "The bill to prevent the circulation of incendiary publications and pictures through the mail" was taken up and considered.

And, after some remarks by Mr. Calhoun and Mr. Davis, was postponed until to-morrow.

The bill concerning the payment of revolutionary and other pensioners was considered—and on an amendment being offered by Mr. Wright.

Mr. Niles moved to amend the amendment by making specie payments to sums under ten dollars for the present year, and under twenty dollars after the 3d of March, 1837.

After a few remarks from Messrs. Benton and White, the question was taken on the amendment of Mr. Niles, by yeas and nays, and decided as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Calhoun, Grundy, Hendricks, Hill, Hubbard, King, of Alab. Leigh, Linn, McKean, Morris, Nicholas, Niles, Porter, Robinson, Ruggles, Shepley, Tomlinson, Walker, White, Wright—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Black, Clay, Davis, Ewing, of Ohio, Kent, King, of Georgia, Knight, Mangum, Moore, Naudain, Prentiss, Robbins, Swift—13.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Other amendments being made—the bill was ordered to a third reading.

Mr. Wright laid on the table an amendment which he proposed to move to the bill to regulate the public depositories, whenever that bill shall be called up. If the senator from South Carolina did not call up that bill, (as he had intimated that he should not), he, (Mr. W.) would call it up at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Calhoun expressed his gratification that the gentleman from New York and the senator from Missouri had taken this bill under their protection. They had the power to carry it through, and he was glad that they had it in their charge.

The amendments were ordered to be printed.

The senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business; and after remaining some time in secret session, adjourned.

April 7. Mr. Grundy, from the committee on the post office and post roads, made a report on the subject of the bill to authorize contracts with the rail road companies; which he read from the table.

Mr. Ewing, of Ohio, stated that the report contained much important matter which it was proper to lay before the public, and he accordingly moved that there be 5,000 extra copies printed.

Mr. Grundy suggested that there should be appended to the report the bill of the committee, as it was proposed to be amended.

Mr. Calhoun suggested some difficulties that he apprehended was in the bill—Mr. Knight, one of the post office committee, acquiesced in the report—Mr. Ewing, of Ohio, desired time to consider it—and the motion to print, &c. was agreed to.

After other minor business, and the passage of sundry bills—

The senate proceeded to consider the bill prohibiting deputy postmasters from receiving or transmitting through the mail, to any state, territory or district, certain papers therein mentioned, the circulation of which, by the laws of said state, territory or district, may be prohibited, and for other purposes.

Mr. Davis made some observations in opposition to the bill; after which,

On motion of Mr. Calhoun, the senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Friday, April 1. Mr. Wm. B. Shepard, after some remarks, offered the following resolution—

Resolved, That Thursday and Friday, the 5th and 6th days of May next, be assigned for the exclusive consideration of bills relating to the District of Columbia.

The resolution was adopted by a vote of 88 to 42.

Mr. J. Y. Mason, by consent of the house, presented a memorial from certain clerks in the employ of the government, praying an increase of their compensation; which was referred to the committee of ways and means, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Lawrence, by leave, presented a memorial of importing merchants of the city of Boston, representing that much inconvenience is frequently experienced by them in consequence of unavoidable delays in passing their importations through the custom house, arising wholly from the insufficiency in the number of officers allotted to the business of the customs in that city. And further, that the public warehouses are too circumscribed and ill suited for the purpose for which they are designed, and soliciting an enlargement of the public stores, and an increase of the number of clerks, by which means greater facilities will be afforded to the appraisers for the more speedy and correct discharge of their duties, which the memorialists represent have greatly increased during the present year; which memorial was referred to the committee on commerce.

Mr. Wm. B. Shepard, from the committee for the District of Columbia, reported the senate bill for the relief of the corporate cities of the District, without amendment; which bill was read twice and committed.

After some other business which will sufficiently appear in its progress—

On motion of Mr. Whittlesey, the house proceeded to the orders of the day for Friday, which were private bills.

Sundry bills were passed to a third reading, and the house adjourned.

Saturday, April 2. The chair presented a letter from the hon. John Banks, resigning his seat in the house of representatives of the United States.

On motion of Mr. Speight, the letter was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Patton asked the house to take up the bill for the establishment of the territorial government of Wisconsin.

Mr. Jones, of Michigan, said he was about to make the same request of the house. He had information showing that there was imminent danger of an Indian war on that frontier, and it was necessary that the militia should be organized; which could not be done without the establishment of a territorial government. The country was, at present, destitute of any form of government.

Mr. Storer said he felt bound to object to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. Patton moved to suspend the rules for one hour for the purpose of taking up and considering the bill; which was agreed to.

The house then went into committee of the whole on the state of the union (Mr. Speight in the chair) upon the bill for the establishment of the territorial government of Wisconsin.

Mr. Storer wished to ask the gentleman who represented Michigan territory for some explanation. He understood that a government, sufficient for all practical purposes, was organized already over this district; and he wished to know what was the number of the population.

Mr. Jones, of Michigan, replied that he did not know precisely. No census had been taken by the general government; but a census taken by the people themselves, for their own gratification, showed in one particular district about twelve thousand, and in the whole territory about thirty thousand.

Mr. Storer said he was not opposed to the bill, but he wanted to know the reason why it was attempted to be passed in so unusual a mode. The house would pardon him for making some remarks, because of the peculiar situation of the state he represented, in regard to this matter and the territory of Michigan. The state of Ohio was not contiguous to this territory, but was immediately connected in interest with the settlement of this question. There was a bill before the house to determine the northern boundary line of Ohio, which it was much more important should be immediately passed, and he wanted to know why that had been postponed to give way for this. He again said he was not opposed to this bill, but should vote for it. But what had produced the state of facts that made such a bill necessary? One year ago this territory was under the supervision of judges appointed by the executive of the United States. The laws of the United States were in operation then. How is it we are told now there is no organization, and that the doors of justice are closed? It was not the fault of the people of this territory. Is it the fault of the house? If so, he would leave it be explained by others. There was, however, a territory which had cut loose this district, had caused the confusion complained of, and raised this whirlwind, which has now come in claiming to be a state of this union, without waiting for the forms of legislation, and has compelled this section to ask to be erected into a territory. He could not let this bill go by without expressing his opinions of this proceeding on the part of Michigan, and attempting to put down this most dangerous attempt to become a state without the proper enactment. It was not three years since this hall echoed, as it were, with one voice, upon the doctrines of the South in regard to the rights of states. He thought the south was wrong then, and thought so now; but here is practical nullification of a most dangerous tendency. Michigan has now a governor, legislature and judges, in the form of a state government, and by this act, the territory of Wisconsin is deprived of the usual forms of territorial government. He could not prevent this course; he must be swept along with the current, but he felt bound to enter his protest against such proceedings.

Mr. Patton thought the gentleman might have found some more proper time to offer his remarks. The committee had studiously avoided dragging into the bill any thing touching the boundary dispute between Michigan and Ohio. The difficulty which had called for this bill had not grown out of that dispute, but had arisen from an omission in the act establishing the territory of Michigan, in not extending the jurisdiction of the laws over this territory. This bill had nothing to do with the boundary in dispute, and he hoped it would not be drawn into the discussion.

A good deal of conversation followed as to the boundaries—but the hour having been past—

Mr. Whittlesey moved that the committee rise, which motion prevailed.

Mr. Sutherland, from the committee on commerce, reported a bill for making appropriations for the improvement of certain harbors of the United States for the year 1836. Read twice, and committed to the committee of the whole on the state of the union.

A great number of private bills were passed, or ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time. Adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Mercer, on Friday last, it was Resolved, That a select committee, consisting of a member from each state, be appointed to consider the expediency of providing general rules for conducting the proceedings in contested elections, and that they have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

The following gentlemen were appointed a committee; in pursuance of the above resolution:

Messrs. Mercer, of Virginia; Evans, of Maine; Burns, of New Hampshire; Cushing, of Massachusetts; Ingham, of Connecticut; Sprague, of Rhode Island; Hall, of Vermont; Wardwell, of New York; Parker, of New Jersey; Buchanan, of Pennsylvania; Milligan, of Delaware; Howard, of Maryland; Hawkins, of North Carolina; Griffin, of South Carolina; Jackson, of Georgia; Boyd, of Kentucky; Maury, of Tennessee; Kilgore, of Ohio; Garland, of Louisiana; Davis, of Indiana; Claiborne, of Mississippi; Casey, of Illinois; Martin, of Alabama; Ashley, of Missouri.

The following is the committee to which was referred the bill from the senate, entitled "an act to purchase the right to use the apparatus invented and patented by Boyd Reilly, for applying gas or vapor to the human body, in the naval and military service, in the hospitals, and in the penitentiary of the United States."

Mr. Reed, Mr. Thomson, of Ohio, Mr. Mason, of Maine, Mr. Taliaferro, Mr. Schenck, Mr. Williams, of Kentucky, Mr. Joshua Lee.

Monday, April 2. After the morning business—

Mr. Wise rose (he said) to offer a resolution on an important subject, which would, he hoped, be adopted without debate.—The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee be appointed, with power to send for persons and papers, to inquire into the agency or mode of selecting the banks of deposit for the public money, and into the contracts with the treasury department, by which they are regulated, and into the manner in which, and the persons by whom, such contracts are made; and to inquire whether any, and, if any, what connexion or relation, official or unofficial, exists or has existed between a certain Renben M. Whitney and the treasury department of the United States, or between him and the banks of deposit of the public money, and into the extent of his agency generally, in keeping and controlling the public money, and into the amount of his compensation, whether the same be paid out of the public treasury or by the deposit banks; and that said committee have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

Objections being made,

Mr. Wise moved the suspension of the rules; to enable him to offer the resolution; and thereupon he asked the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

The question being taken, it was decided in the negative—yeas 84, nays 90.

Mr. Peyton asked the consent of the house to offer the following resolution; which was read.

Resolved, That the bill reported by the committee of ways and means, entitled, "a bill regulating the deposit of the money of the United States in certain local banks," together with any amendments which may be offered to the same, be made the special order of the day, and that it have precedence over all other business of the house, from the hour of twelve o'clock on the second Monday in May next, and on each succeeding day, from the same hour, Fridays and Saturdays excepted, until the same shall be finally disposed of.

Mr. Cambreleng said he would pledge himself to call up that bill at the earliest possible day; but he hoped the gentleman would not press the motion to make it the special order of the day until the appropriation bills were passed; he hoped there would be no more special orders.

Mr. J. Q. Adams asked whether the resolution was consistent with the resolution of the house making the appropriation bills the special order of the day.

The chair said that the resolution referred to by the gentleman would, of course, be rescinded by a subsequent order of the house.

Objections being made,

Mr. Peyton moved that the rules be suspended in order to enable him to offer the resolution indicated; and upon this motion, he asked the yeas and nays, which were ordered.

The question being taken, it was decided in the negative—yeas 67, nays 99.

Mr. Peyton gave notice that he should renew this motion at a suitable time, thinking it highly important that the subject should be considered during the present session.

Mr. Evans moved that the rules be suspended for the purpose of calling the states for petitions; which motion was not agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Cambreleng, the house went into committee of the whole, (Mr. Hamer in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill "making appropriations for the naval service of the United States for the year 1836."

The question being on the motion of Mr. Bell to strike out the following clause: "for repairs and improvements of the navy yard at Portsmouth, $67,000."

Mr. Jarvis, being entitled to the floor, spoke at length upon the subject, until near the hour of adjournment.

Mr. Robertson took the floor, but the hour being late, gave way for a motion that the committee rise, which was carried. The house then adjourned.

Tuesday, April 5. Mr. Whittlescy, for the committee on claims, reported a number of bills. Many others were reported from the same and other committees.

Mr. Smith, from the committee of ways and means, reported a bill amendatory of an act for the relief of the sufferers by the late fire in New York; which was read a third time, and passed.

[The object of this bill is to limit the operation of the act to which it is an addition, and which extends the bonds of sufferers by the late fire to such bonds only as were actually given before the fire on the 16th of December last. Some debate arose on the character of the bill, and the manner in which it should be disposed of, in which Messrs. Smith, Adams, Cambreleng, Briggs, Mercer, Cushing, Speight, Everett and C. Johnson participated.]

Mr. Wise asked permission to offer the resolution presented by him yesterday. Objections being made to suspend the rules—the question was taken by yeas and nays, and decided against the proposition; for it 89, against it 94.

The naval appropriation bill again came up—

Mr. Robertson, being entitled to the floor, went on to examine the acts of the government in relation to the expenditure of money; and in reply to the arguments of Mr. Garland and Mr. Jarvis, at length.

Mr. Robertson gave way, at the usual hour of adjournment, for a motion made by Mr. Storer that the committee rise.

Mr. Cambreleng rose to say that he and many others were anxious to be heard upon this question; but the debate upon general subjects had continued so long upon this bill, that not only was the public interest suffering greatly, but in a few days not a dollar would be left in the treasury for the support and pay of the navy. He had determined to waive his right, which he wished to exercise, from personal considerations, to speak upon this bill; and he hoped it would be immediately passed; in which case, he would pledge himself to bring in a bill to make a million appropriation for the increase of the army, which would open all the subjects connected with the conduct of the administration. Such a bill would be reported by the committee of ways and means.

Mr. Peyton asked if the gentleman was authorised by his party to bring in such a bill for the express purpose of opening a debate upon the merits of the administration, or whether he acted from personal considerations.

Mr. Cambreleng said he acted as the organ of the committee of ways and means, which comprised individuals of both parties; but if the gentleman from Tennessee belonged to the party which wished to stop appropriations, he did not think there was any member of that party on the committee.

Mr. Storer insisted on his motion.

Mr. Cambreleng said he was instructed by the committee of ways and means to say that, if, to-morrow, when the gentleman from Virginia shall have concluded, if the question could not be taken, and the debate upon the bill stopped, he should ask the house to discharge the committee of the whole, with a view to expedite the public business.

Mr. Storer again insisted that his motion should be put; and having been put, the committee rose.

The house, however, did not then adjourn, but passed a number of private bills about which there was no dispute.

Wednesday, April 6. Mr. Sutherland, from the committee on commerce, reported the following joint resolution:

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the U. States of America in congress assembled, That so much of the third section of the act entitled "an act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of government for the year 1835," as provides that the whole number of custom house officers in the United States on the 1st of January, 1834, shall not be increased until otherwise allowed by congress, be, and the same is hereby, suspended until the further action of congress.

Mr. Harper opposed the resolution, on the ground of information which he had that there were now in Philadelphia more custom house officers than were needed. He thought the limitation of power to appoint was a proper one.

Mr. Lawrence said it might be there were officers of the customs sufficient for the service in Philadelphia, but he knew that in New York and Boston there was great delay and much inconvenience occasioned to the merchants by the deficiency of a proper number of custom house officers. He said he had received many letters making serious complaints, and he thought the resolution ought to be passed immediately, and without debate. He gave also a statement of the increase in the commerce of Boston for the last six years, during which time no addition had been made to the number of officers. The number of entries had increased fifty per cent, and the revenue had more than doubled since 1830. This would show, he thought, to the satisfaction of the house, either that the officers were too numerous in 1830, or there should be more appointed now; and he thought the latter proposition the correct one.

Mr. Cambreleng confirmed Mr. Lawrence's remark in relation to New York; and stated that, owing to the extraordinary influx of business, and the insufficiency of officers, the collector was obliged to assign one inspector to three ships.

Some other desultory debate took place; when

Mr. Whittlescy suggested that it might not be competent to the house to suspend the operation of a law by resolution, but that it should be done by a bill.

Mr. Adams supported this view.

Mr. Sutherland then moved to amend the resolution by striking out the word "Resolved," and inserting the words "Be it enacted, &c." so as to make it a bill; and also to strike out the words "until the further action of congress," and insert "until the end of this session of congress."

Both these amendments were adopted, and the resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and the bill was subsequently passed.

After some other business—Mr. Wise said he had somewhat modified the resolution which he had heretofore indicated in relation to the deposit banks, and he again asked leave of the house to offer that resolution.

The resolution being read, Mr. Wise rose, he said, to assure the house, on the part of himself and his friends, that there was no desire nor intention to discuss the subject at present. There were no data for discussion, and could be none, until the inquiry proposed had been made. He hoped that the house would give their unanimous assent to the motion.

Objections being made.

Mr. Cambreleng said he would merely suggest that the opposition to the introduction of this resolution was not made for the purpose of stifling inquiry, but from an apprehension that it would provoke a discussion. As that apprehension was now removed, he should cheerfully vote for the resolution.

Mr. Wise moved that the rules be suspended in order to enable him to offer the resolution, and thereupon he asked the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

The question being taken, it was decided in the negative—yeas 96, nays 87.

Two-thirds being required to carry a motion to suspend the rules, the house again by this vote refused to allow Mr. Wise to make his motion.

Mr. Wise now rose, he said, to retract the notice which he had heretofore given of his intention to press this motion. He should not offer it again, being now convinced that the house was opposed to any inquiry for the purpose of resolving what was a reasonable doubt in relation to the connexion between the government and the deposit banks.

Mr. Rencher asked whether, when the graduation bill came up, it would be in order to move to substitute for it the bill commonly called Mr. Clay's land bill.

The chair said the gentleman was aware that any amendments which were in order, might be offered to any bill before the house.

Mr. Peyton made an attempt to suspend the rules, by which he might offer his resolution—decided in the negative 108 to 95. Other motions, not important, were variously disposed of.

On motion of Mr. Cambreleng, the house then resolved itself into a committee of the whole on the state of the union, for the further consideration of the bill "making appropriations for the naval service of the United States for the year 1836."

The question being on the motion of Mr. Bell to strike out the appropriation for the navy yard at Portsmouth, Mr. Vanderpoet having concluded,

Mr. Storer took the floor, but gave way, as the hour was late, to a motion from

Mr. Jenifer, who moved that the committee rise; which motion was negatived—yeas 49, nays 77.

Mr. Storer then proceeded with his remarks.

Thursday, April 7. Mr. Harrison, of Missouri, from the committee on public lands, reported the following joint resolution:

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the U. States of America in congress assembled, That the secretary of war be, and he is hereby, directed to cause to be surveyed, by sufficient number of competent engineers, the inundated lands on the Mississippi river, the Missouri, the St. Francis, the Arkansas and Red rivers, and that he report to congress as the same is done the practicability of reclaiming the same, and removing the obstructions from said rivers; the best mode of doing the same; the amount of money which it will cost to accomplish it; the quantity and estimated value of the lands that may be so reclaimed; and the effects which such works may have upon the health and prosperity of the country.

Mr. Harrison stated that the committee had estimated the quantity of inundated land at twenty millions of acres; but to avoid any exaggeration, they had called it ten millions, which, at five dollars per acre, would amount to fifty millions of dollars. The expenses of reclaiming these lands the committee had estimated at two or three millions of dollars; but, in their calculation they had allowed double that sum. There was not a doubt that the United States would realize nearly fifty millions of dollars from these lands, if they were reclaimed.

The joint resolution was then read twice, and committed.

Several other resolutions being disposed of—

Mr. Patton asked the house to go into the committee of the whole on the state of the union upon the bill for the establishment of the Wisconsin territory, for the space of one hour.

The house did so, and the bill was finally reported to the house, by the committee.

The bill making appropriations for the naval service of the United States for the year 1836 was taken up.

The amendments agreed to in committee of the whole were concurred in.

Mr. White, of Florida, renewed his motion to increase the appropriation for the navy yard at Pensacola, and asked for the yeas and nays on his motion, which were ordered.

A long and desultory debate followed, and the motion was negatived—151 to 26—and the bill finally ordered to a third reading and passed. And, at 6 o'clock the house adjourned.

BALTIMORE AND OHIO RAIL ROAD.

At a meeting of the president and directors of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company, held on Wednesday, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

Whereas the city of Baltimore has recently tendered a subscription of three millions of dollars in aid of the completion of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road, in accordance with the original plan of the work; and whereas a liberal subscription has likewise been tendered by the city of Wheeling in furtherance of the same object, and considerable aid may also be expected from the city of Pittsburgh, and other places in the west; and whereas this board relies with full confidence upon the patriotism and enlightened public spirit which characterise the legislature of Maryland, for a further subscription to the stock of this company, on the part of the state, sufficient, with the other available means that are expected to be at the disposal of the board, to complete the road to the points of its ultimate destination at Wheeling and Pittsburgh; and whereas the public interest requires that the most strenuous efforts should be made to accomplish this important object with all possible diligence and expedition:

Therefore, Resolved, That this board will forthwith proceed to commence the necessary surveys with a view to the entire location of the road as soon as practicable.

Resolved, That the president instruct the chief engineer to organize the requisite number of surveying parties for the purpose of making the necessary preliminary surveys, beginning at or near to Harper's Ferry, or at such other point as he may deem most expedient, in order that the board may be prepared, in the first instance, to effect the location of the road from that place to the summit of the Alleghany mountain, as early as the same can be accomplished.

AFFAIRS IN FLORIDA.

From the Savannah papers of the 24th we learn that, by a steam packet from the St. John's, which arrived on the preceding evening, came passengers col. Twiggs, of the 4th regiment infantry, maj. Mountfort, of the 2d regiment artillery, and maj. Lear, of the 4th infantry, with capt. Marks, of the Louisiana volunteers. These officers left Fort Drane on the 19th. Gen. Scott was still there with the forces under his command. The whole army was in fine health and spirits, and in excellent discipline, and would be prepared to leave Fort Drane on or about the 25th, for the banks of the Wythlacoochee, (gen. Gaines' battle ground). There generals Scott and Eustis, and col. Lindsay, with their immediate commands, were to unite—gen. Eustis having moved on the 18th from Volusia, and col. Lindsay being on his way from Tampa.

The Floridians, not in the field, are generally returning to their homes in the vicinity of Micanopy and elsewhere, as they have been assured that the Indians will comply with their agreement with gen. Gaines.

Gen. Gaines and gen. Scott met at Fort Drane and passed one day together—sitting at the same table, and showing as much courtesy to each other, the Jacksonville Courier says, as two men can, who take no notice of each other.

The subjoined general order, issued by gen. Gaines upon giving up the command of his troops to general Clinch, before their return to Fort Drane, is published in the Savannah papers.

The National Intelligencer says:—"We are sorry to see in this general order the manner in which general Scott, placed in command of the campaign by the executive, is alluded to. So far from peace with the Indians being certain, we apprehended much blood will yet be shed before they are subdued, or before general Scott's diplomatic powers will come into play. We presume, that after what has passed, that his orders require the subjugation of the Indians, and their removal beyond the Mississippi, as the indispensable condition of peace for them.

Head quarters, western department, Fort Izard, on the Wythlacoochee, Florida, March 9, 1836.

I. Called to East Florida by the savage massacres and confiscations of the 28th December, and the following month, the commanding general hastily collected, in Louisiana, the forces which accompanied him from that patriotic state. These troops, in the short space of thirty-six days, have marched by land and water, nearly eight hundred miles—one hundred and forty through the country occupied by the enemy, whose principal force they have met, beaten and forced to sue for peace.

II. These important objects of the campaign having been accomplished with the hearty and cordial co-operation of brig. gen. Clinch, (to whose sound judgment the defence of this frontier had been wisely confided, and by whose gallantry the enemy had been chastised on the 31st December, and since held in check as far as his limited means would allow), the troops from Louisiana are placed under his command, in order to guard against the known faithlessness of the enemy, until the arrival of the forces under the officer charged with the diplomatic arrangements of the war department. Whenever, and as soon as that officer shall mature his plan of operations, and accomplish the duties assigned him, the forces from Louisiana will return to New Orleans.

III. The commanding general cannot consistently with his views of propriety take leave of the troops by whom he has been so manfully sustained, without tendering them his grateful acknowledgements for the constancy and courage with which they have performed every duty, and borne privations, the recital of which would not fail to command the admiration of the virtuous and wise of every section of the republic. The officers and soldiers of the whole of these forces, (including the artillery from Tampa Bay, acting as a light brigade, under command of lieutenant col. Twiggs of the 4th infantry) have performed their duty so much to the satisfaction of the general, that he cannot discriminate between the relative claims of corps, of officers, or other individuals, without the risk of invidious distinction. All did their duty cheerfully and gallantly, and when it became necessary to meet the question, whether to eat the meat of their own horses, or to abandon an important position, all cheerfully preferred this unpleasant subsistence to any movement that would endanger the frontier. The horse meat was accordingly eaten by horses and men until the enemy was beaten and sued for peace. A timely supply of provisions arrived, escorted by the brave Georgians, Floridians and regnars, under gen. Clinch, at the moment the pacific propositions of the enemy were in the act of being answered. The Indians were fired on by the general's light troops before he could be notified of the object of their being near the camp; they have since disappeared.

IV. The general deeply regrets the fall of the 1st lieutenant J. F. Izard, of the dragoons, acting brigade major, and in command of the advance guard. He fell at the head of his corps, and, though mortally wounded, had the heroic presence of mind to order, "keep your positions, men, lie close." 2d lieutenant Duncan, 2d artillery, was slightly wounded. Captain Sanders, commanding the friendly Indians, was severely wounded. Captain Armstrong of the U. S. transport schooner Motto, was slightly wounded. The two last named officers were in the advance, where their services have been highly useful during the march. This officer, and twenty-nine N. C. officers and soldiers of other companies of the regiment, evinced their gallantry by their good conduct, as well as by their honorable wounds. The general is convinced that he never commanded a finer corps—its chief would do honor to any service.

The officers of the medical department merit the approbation of the general, for the attentive and skilful manner in which their duties were discharged.

List of killed and wounded:

Killed—1st lieutenant J. F. Izard, dragoons.

Sergeant F. Dunn, 2d artillery.

Private F. Bolie, La. volunteers.

Do V. Beck, do do.

Do H. Butler, do do.

Total—5.

Wounded—officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates:

By command of major general Gaines:

GEORGE A. McCALL,
A. D. C. acting ass. adj. general.

Extracts of letters received in Charleston, dated Indian Key, March 17.

"It is now ascertained without a doubt, that there is a large number of hostile Indians embodied near Cape Sable, within 30 miles of us, and the inhabitants of this island are hourly in imminent danger of an attack. What we always apprehended has turned out to be the case, that as they were driven from the north eastern part of the interior, they would retreat to the southern point and the keys. One canoe came to this island yesterday with only one Spaniard in it, under the pretence to trade, suspicions however arose that he did not come alone, and we concluded to keep him here—in the course of the day we obliged him to tell that two Indians came with him, and that he left them on an island about one mile distant. A boat was immediately despatched with a number of men in search of them, and after some difficulty, they were found and brought to this island, where I think they will be kept safe for the present; we have every reason to believe they were spies; they have already acknowledged that there is a large number of Indians near Cape Sable.

From the Charleston Courier.

A letter from an officer under gen. Clinch, dated Fort Drane, 13th March, gives a detail of the occurrences which took place with general Gaines' army. In speaking of the succor given him by gen. Clinch, he says:

"Gen. Clinch procured all the transportation he could possibly get, and, with 60 head of beef cattle, took up the line of march on the 5th. We reached gen. Gaines' camp the next day, about 4 o'clock in the afternoon; and of all the sufferings that have, or will be borne during this war, that of the forces under gen. G. was the most severe. They were living on horse flesh which was starved to death, and the dogs in the camp; one dog's leg sold for $5. Not a particle of bread had been seen there for many days, and the Indians kept up a regular fire, night and day, for eight days, on the entrenchment. After giving the troops all the supplies we carried down, gen. Gaines turned over the command to gen. Clinch, who put the whole in line of march for this place on the 10th, and we arrived on the 11th pretty well fatigued. It is truly fortunate that general Clinch had it in his power to relieve Gaines, otherwise his whole army must have been cut off, as disease had begun to make its appearance in his camp, and he had no possible means of carrying off his wounded men. The Indians are on the same river, but a little back from Gaines' camp, in an impenetrable swamp of cypress, which has many islands in it. The Indians say they are willing to quit fighting, but they will not leave the country—they will die first."

The following extract from the "Tallahassee Floridian," is of interest:

"Captain Watson, of Columbus, Ga. passed through this place on his way to Fort King. He goes, we understand, for the purpose of tendering to gen. Scott, the services of two hundred warriors of the Euchee tribe. The Euchees are the hereditary foes of the Creeks and Seminoles. Their bravery and cunning has long rendered them a terror to their enemies, though comparatively few in number. They have been restrained many years by the United States from open hostilities, yet they have uniformly kept aloof from all intercourse with their old enemies—refusing to participate in any of the national festivals, such as corn dances and ball playing; and continued to brood over the wrongs of their ancestors, which have been transmitted from age to age, as an inheritance of revenge. This tribe once possessed sovereign power over a vast extent of country, but by their perpetual wars, they have been reduced to their present limited numbers. Their language is spoken by no other tribe, and has never been learned in a solitary instance by a white person. It is not an articulate language, it consists entirely of guttural sounds so similar that none but a native ear can distinguish them. They understand the Creek language, and it is through that they communicate with the whites. Their physiognomy is as distinct as their language. It would be a curious subject of inquiry, to trace out the origin of this fierce and untamable race of men. They reside in Alabama and Florida. Captain Watson's offer, we have no doubt, will be accepted. He is a brave officer, and distinguished himself a short time ago in an encounter with a very superior number of Creeks on the Chatthaohocchee."

The Columbia (S. C.) Times and State Gazette, on the 25th inst. says: Drs. Caldwell and Cabell, of gen. Scott's staff, passed through this town on Wednesday morning last for Washington city. The former gentleman stated, at the stage office that he was the bearer of a treaty for the president's approbation, and that hostilities had ceased.

From the Savannah Georgian, March 30.

The steam packet Etiwan, captain Sassard, arrived last evening from Picolata, via Jacksonville and St. Mary's, having left the former place on Thursday afternoon last. The E. remained half a day at Jacksonville, and was detained two days at St. John's bar, having left the latter on Monday morning last.

The intelligence brought by the E. is, in our view, important, for we thereby learn not only the destruction of more of our brave soldiers, who have yielded the comforts of home for the honor of sustaining their country's flag, but we perceive in it that hostile disposition on the part of our savage enemy to regard no dictates but the promptings of their revengeful bosoms.

A gentleman who left Fort Drane on Thursday last, states that gen. Scott was to cross the Wythlacochee on Saturday last. From a letter written by an officer at that post, we learn that our gallant army expect a desperate contest before the war is terminated. We publish all the information we can collect. We regret that we are not able to relieve the anxieties of our Carolina brethren, who have friends in the army, by publishing the names of those slain at Volusia.

No paper, we learn, had been published at Jacksonville last week when the E. left.

Extract of a letter dated Picolata, March 24, 1836.

"Yesterday morning, while gen. Eustis (at Volusia) was transferring his command to the west side of the St. John's capt. Ashley's company, which had crossed over, was fired upon by about fifty Indians; three men killed instantly, and six more wounded; the fire was immediately returned, and the troops sent in pursuit, but they were off. Only one Indian negro was killed."

Extract of another letter dated Picolata, March 25, 1836.

"They are fighting away at Volusia; last accounts, four of the South Carolina volunteers were killed and several wounded; the Indians crept up, and shot the four sentinels down the first fire; wounded several others. We expect the boat down to-night, and will hear more news."

Extract of another letter.

"Since gen. Gaines left Wythlacochee nothing new has transpired in the army. On the 23d or 24th the Indians attacked a part of gen. Eustis' army, after crossing the river St. John's at Volusia, and killed two and wounded six, four of which are supposed to be mortally. It was said that gen. Scott would take up his line of march on the 25th."

Gen. Macmah, with his aid-de-camp, capt. Cooper, left Savannah on the 29th ult. for Florida, in the steam packet Dolphin.

Despatches from major general Scott's head quarters in Florida, Fort Drane, dated 20th of March, have been received at Washington. They communicate no new event of importance. General Scott was still waiting with his command, in order to give general Eustis and colonel Lindsay time to gain their allotted positions, and that other necessary arrangements might be made. These various objects, it was supposed, would be gained by the 26th or 27th March, when the plan of the campaign would be carried into active operation. The great body of the hostile Indians were believed to be encamped in the swamp of the Wythlacochee, about 25 miles from Fort Drane.

TEXAS.

The Texas convention has declared the state independent of Mexico.

A letter to the editor of the New York Courier says—

In despite of all the troubles created by the late war, the country is prospering and will continue to do so, while we have such a hardy fearless race to populate and protect it. Lands are rising in value; and in a few years will not be far behind those in Mississippi and Louisiana in price—they are so productive and the climate is so fine. There has been but few attempts made to cultivate sugar cane yet—wherever it has been attempted it has succeeded well. Cotton is the staple of the country; the crop was very fine last year, and preparations are making for a large one of the present year. There has been some dissension and discord between the governor and council of Texas. The governor has shamefully committed himself. His intemperate message to the council will serve much to lessen confidence abroad, and have a very unfortunate effect it is feared.

From the New Orleans "True American."

Natchitoches, 15th March, 1836.

Editor of the True American.

SIR: I send the copy of a letter received this morning by express from Texas. In haste, &c.

Committee room, Washington, Texas, March 6th, 1836.

DEAR WIFE: I am well and we are getting along very well. We have three or four committees who are preparing a constitution, and we will soon have it ready. I shall be at home in ten or fifteen days, we have alarming news continually from the west; Frank Johnson's division is all killed, but five, it is supposed. We saw two shot begging for quarters. Dr. Grant with a company of men is supposed to be all slain.

Travis' last express states San Antonio was strongly besieged; it is much feared that Travis and company are all massacred, as despatches have been due from that place three days and none have arrived here yet. The frontiers are breaking up, Gonzales must be sacked, and its inhabitants murdered and defiled unless they get immediate aid. The last accounts, the Mexicans were to a considerable number between Gonzales and San Antonio. Fanning is at La Bada with about 500 men, and is in daily expectation of a visit from Santa Anna. Texas has been declared free and independent, but unless we have a general turn out and every man lay his helping hand too, we are lost. Santa Anna and his vassals are now on our borders, and the declaration of our freedom, unless it is sealed with blood, is of no force. I say again that nothing will save Texas but a general turn out. You all know my views with regard to our condition; I have given you facts, judge for yourselves. I wish a copy of this letter sent immediately to capt. Bailly Anderson and col. S. A. Lublett, and publicly read in San Augustine. Travis closes his last expresses with these words—"Help O my country."

MARTIN PALMER.

To the committee of vigilance and safety, San Augustine, Texas.

A gentleman from Nacogdoches, in Texas, informs us, that, whilst there, he dined in public with col. Crockett, who had just arrived from Tennessee. The old bear-hunter, on being toasted, made a speech to the Texans, replete with his usual dry humor. He began nearly in this style: "I am told, gentlemen, that, when a stranger, like myself, arrives among you, the first inquiry is—what brought you here? To satisfy your curiosity at once as to myself, I will tell you all about it. I was, for some years, a member of congress. In my last canvass, I told the people of my district, that, if they saw fit to reelect me, I would serve them as faithfully as I had done; but, if not, they might go to h—, and I would go to Texas. I was beaten, gentlemen, and here I am." The roar of applause was like a thunder-burst.

Washington, Texas, March 5.

ARMY ORDERS.

War is raging on the frontiers. Bejar is besieged by two thousand of the enemy, under the command of gen. Sizma. Reinforcements are on their march to unite with the besieging army. By the last report, our force in Bejar, was only 150 strong. The citizens of Texas must rally to the aid of our army, or it will perish. Let the citizens of the east march to the combat. The enemy must be driven from our soil—or desolation will accompany their march upon us. INDEPENDENCE IS DECLARED—It must be maintained. Immediate action, united with valor alone, can achieve the great work. The services of all are forthwith required in the field.

SAM. HOUSTON, commander-in-chief of the army.

Gen. Stephen F. Austin, Wm. H. Wharton, esq. and doctor B. F. Archer, have arrived at Barnum's City hotel, Baltimore, last week, from TEXAS. These gentlemen have been appointed commissioners by the provisional government to procure assistance to aid them in their struggle against the acts of the government of Santa Anna.

DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.

The unanimous declaration of independence, made by the delegates of the people of Texas, as in general convention, made at the town of Washington, on the 2d day of March, 1836.

When a government has ceased to protect the lives, liberty and property, of the people from whom its legitimate powers are derived, and for the advancement of whose happiness it was instituted, and so far from being a guarantee for the enjoyment of those inestimable and inalienable rights, becomes an instrument in the hands of evil rulers for their oppression, when the federal republican constitution of their country, which they have sworn to support, no longer has a substantial existence, and the whole nature of their government has been forcibly changed, without their consent, from a restricted federative republic, composed of sovereign states, to a consolidated central military despotism, in which every interest is disregarded, but that of the army and the priesthood—both the eternal enemies of civil liberty, the ever ready minions of power, and the usual instruments of tyrants. When, long after the spirit of the constitution has departed, moderation is at length so far lost, by those in power, that even the semblance of freedom is removed, and the forms themselves, of the constitution, discontinued, and so far from their petitions and remonstrances being regarded, the agents who bear them, are thrown into dungeons—and mercenary armies sent forth, to force a new government upon them at the point of the bayonet: When, in consequence of such acts of malfeasance and abdication, on the part of the government, anarchy prevails, and civil society is dissolved into its original elements. In such a crisis the first law of nature, the right of self-preservation, the inherent and inalienable right of the people to appeal to first principles, and take their political affairs into their own hands, in extreme cases, enjoins it as a right towards themselves, and a sacred obligation to their posterity, to abolish such governments, and create another in its stead calculated to rescue them from impending dangers, and to secure their future welfare and happiness.

Nations, as well as individuals, are amenable for their acts to the public opinion of mankind. A statement of a part of our grievances is therefore submitted to an impartial world, in justification of the hazardous, but unavoidable step, now taken, of severing our political connection with the Mexican people, and assuming an independent attitude among the nations of the earth.

The Mexican government, by its colonization laws, invited and induced the Anglo-American population of Texas to colonize its wilderness, under the pledged faith of a written constitution, that they should continue to enjoy that constitutional liberty and republican government to which they had been habituated in the land of their birth, the United States of America. In this expectation they have been cruelly disappointed—as the Mexican nation has acquiesced in the late changes made in the government by general Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna—who, having overturned the constitution of this country, now offers us the cruel alternative, either to abandon our homes, acquired by so many privations, or submit to the most intolerable of all tyranny, the combined despotism of the sword and the priesthood.

It has sacrificed our welfare to the state of Coahuila, by which our interests have been continually depressed through a jealous and partial course of legislation, carried on at a far distant seat of government, by a hostile majority in an unknown tongue; and this too, notwithstanding we have petitioned in the humblest terms for the establishment of a separate state government, and have in accordance with the provisions of the national constitution presented to the general congress a republican constitution, which was, without just cause, contemptuously rejected.

It incarcerated in a dungeon for a long time one of our citizens, for no other cause but a zealous endeavor to procure the acceptance of our constitution and the establishment of a state government.

It has failed and refused to secure on a firm basis, the right of trial by jury, that palladium of civil liberty, and only safe guarantee for the life, liberty and property of the citizen.

It has failed to establish any public system of education, although possessed of means almost boundless, (the public domain) and although it is an axiom political science, that unless a people are educated and enlightened, it is idle to expect the continuance of civil liberty or the capacity for self government.

It has suffered the military commandant stationed amongst us to exercise arbitrary acts of oppression and tyranny, thus trampling upon the most sacred rights of the citizen, and rendering the military superior to the civil power.

It has dissolved by force of arms the state congress of Coahuila and Texas, and obliged our representatives to fly for their lives from the seat of government; and thus depriving us of the fundamental political right of representation.

It has demanded the surrender of a number of our citizens, and ordered military detachments to secure and carry them into the interior for trial; in contempt of the civil authority and in defiance of the laws and the constitution.

It has made piratical attacks upon our commerce, by commissioning foreign desperadoes and authorising them to seize our vessels, and convey the property of our citizens to far distant ports for confiscation.

It denies us the right of worshipping the Almighty according to the dictates of our consciences—by the support of a national religion, calculated to promote the temporal interests of its human functionaries, rather than the glory of the true and living God.

It has demanded us to deliver up our arms, which are essential to our defence, the rightful property of freemen, and formidable only to tyrannical governments.

It has invaded our country both by sea and land, with intent to lay waste our territory, and drive us from our homes—and has now a large mercenary army advancing to carry on against us a war of extermination.

It has, through its emissaries, incited the merciless savage with the tomahawk and scalping knife, to massacre the inhabitants of our defenceless frontiers.

It has been, during the whole time of our connexion with it, the contemptible sport and victim of successive military revolutions; and has continually exhibited every characteristic of a weak, corrupt and tyrannical government.

These and other grievances were patiently borne by the people of Texas, until they reached that point at which forbearance ceases to be a virtue. We then took up arms in defence of the national constitution. We appealed to our Mexican brethren for assistance. Our appeal has been made in vain; though months have elapsed, no sympathetic response has yet been heard from the interior. We are therefore forced to the melancholy conclusion, that the Mexican people have acquiesced in the destruction of their liberty, and the substitution therefore of a military government; that they are unfit to be free, and incapable of self-government.

The necessity of self-preservation therefore decrees our eternal political separation. We therefore, the delegates with plenary powers of the people of Texas, in solemn convention assembled, appealing to a candid world for the necessities of our condition, do hereby resolve and declare that our political connexion with the Mexican nation, has forever ended, and that the people of Texas do now constitute a free, sovereign and independent republic, and are fully invested with all the rights and attributes which properly belong to independent nations.

Signers of the declaration of Texian independence.

LOWER CANADA.

It will be seen from the following speech of the governor of Canada to the legislature, that the conciliatory course adopted by the present British ministers, have failed in settling the difficulties between the majority in the lower house and the government:

Gentlemen of the legislative council, and gentlemen of the house of assembly,

The advanced season of the year and the want of a sufficient number of members in both houses for the despatch of public business, render it expedient that I should prorogue this parliament.

Gentlemen of the house of assembly,

It is to me a matter of sincere regret, that the offers of peace and conciliation, of which I was the bearer, to this country, have not led to the result which I had hoped for. The consequences of their rejection and of the demands which have been made to his majesty, I will not venture to predict.

In the speech with which I opened the session, I announced, that should you consent to discharge the arrears due to the public officers, and provide for their maintenance, pending the inquiries which his majesty had commanded to be made in the province, no part of the surplus revenues of the crown should be touched during those inquiries, without your consent. As no provision has been made for the purposes contemplated in that proposal, I shall be under the necessity of applying the revenues at the disposal of the crown, as far as they will extend, to the payment of the public servants and toward the current expenses of the civil government.

What further measure must be adopted for the removal of the difficulties to which the affairs of the province are reduced, the authorities in England must now determine.

Gentlemen of the legislative council, and gentlemen of the house of assembly,

Of the fifty-nine bills that have passed both houses during this session, I have given the royal assent to all, save one—namely, the bill for establishing a rail road between the river St. Lawrence and the province line. As this bill affects the king's prerogative in the disposal of the waste lands of the crown, the 42d clause of the constitutional act makes it necessary that I should reserve it for the signification of his majesty's pleasure; and it is probable, that the omission of the formalities required by that clause will be altogether fatal to the measure.

I shall continue to do all in my power for the advancement of the public good and the furtherance of that paternal policy which has been enjoined upon me by our most gracious sovereign; and you, gentlemen, will, I doubt not, each in his individual capacity, labor to preserve the peace and to promote the real interests of the community.

LEGISLATURE OF MARYLAND.

Mr. Wootton, from the joint committee appointed to inquire into the expenditures of the state, in works of internal improvement, made the following report:

The joint committee of the two houses, instructed to inquire into the manner in which the loan of the last session to the Chesapeake and Ohio canal company has been expended, and the causes which led to the erroneous estimates furnished the legislature for the completion of the canal to Cumberland; also, generally, into the manner in which the public moneys appropriated for the construction of works of internal improvement in this state have been expended, submit the following report, in part:

That your committee are unable at this time to make a full report, it having been impossible for them so to do, without dedicating the whole of their time to the investigation of the subject referred to them, to the neglect of other duties which they have to perform, and which they did not feel themselves warranted in overlooking.

It appears, from the testimony before the committee, that the application to the legislature for the loan to the Chesapeake and Ohio canal company was based on the report of the committee appointed on the part of the internal improvement convention assembled in Baltimore, in December, 1834; that this report was founded on the survey made by Mr. Cruger, the engineer of the canal company, of 26½ miles of the canal immediately above the 108 miles which had then been nearly completed; that this survey had been made preceding the meeting of the convention, and the canal company, adopting this report as the basis of the estimate for the completion of this great work, were themselves mistaken. That your committee have no reason to believe the canal company were in possession of any facts at the time of making the application for the loan, which did not warrant them in adopting the report of the committee of the internal improvement convention.

From the known character and probity of the parties, the committee are satisfied that the error was one of judgment, not of design; that the canal company had no intention to mislead or deceive the legislature.

With regard to the first part of the inquiry submitted to them, the actual application of the loan, your committee are not prepared to make a detailed report. They have ascertained, however, that the debt of the company at the time the loan was applied for amounted, according to the deposition of their clerk, J. P. Ingle, to $559,771 05, the greater part of which it was necessary for them to discharge, before they could comply with the conditions of the law under which the loan was made. Of the loan, one million remains to be paid, and, by the arrangement entered into between the treasurer and the canal company, the same has to be paid in quarterly payments. By this arrangement, according to the terms upon which the loan was negotiable, neither the state nor the canal company have to pay interest, but as the several portions are necessarily called for from the lenders, and advanced to carry on the work.

Your committee have caused the evidence taken before them to be reduced to writing, and the same is hereby submitted. They would particularly invite the attention of the legislature to the testimony of Mr. Fisk, as clearly accounting for the discrepancies which have been observed in the various estimates, as showing the entire reliance to be placed upon the present estimates, which are final on working estimates, and as demonstrating, in the clearest light, the excellency of the plans now adopted for this great work.

For the reasons already assigned, your committee have not been able to inform themselves as to the application which has been made of the moneys advanced by the state, to aid in the construction of other works of internal improvement, nor even to institute an inquiry into the subject. They propose, however, doing so during the recess, and to make a report at large, in relation to it, as well as upon the matters now only partially reported upon, at the commencement of the next session of the legislature.

The committee conclude, by earnestly recommending that an end be put to all doubt of the completion of the great works in which the state has engaged, and that no unnecessary delay may occur in giving to the people of the state the full use of such improvements, and the immediate benefit of the investments already made.

At this advanced stage of the session your committee deem it injudicious and superfluous to enter into arguments which, designed to promote, might, in effect, delay the necessary action of the legislature, but are unwilling to close without remarking upon one happy circumstance attending the internal improvements of this country, contradistinguishing them from all others of the habitable globe.

In undertaking and prosecuting this canal and other similar works, calculations of profit are based upon existing things.—The quality of the Alleghany coal, for example, is known; its abundance is ascertained to be adequate to the demand of a thousand years, if it may not indeed be fairly considered inexhaustible. The quantity to be transported on the canal is estimated by the population and operations of the existing population of a few cities and a limited region; and even thus calculated, we have ample assurances of vast profit on the cost of the work. But nothing in this country is better proven, or more certain, than that our population doubles in about twenty years, the trade and business increasing probably in a ratio still greater.

In twenty years our present number of twelve millions will be twenty-five; in less than half a century we shall number in this republic not less than fifty millions of souls. In our day and generation, the great channels of trade are found to be abundantly productive; but, based upon inexhaustible supplies, and sustained by demands, geometrically augmenting, what calculations will not fall short of the benefits and revenues we shall provide for generations yet to come, by a provident investment of the means of the state, sufficient for the completion of the incomparable works which it is the laudable pride of Maryland already to have undertaken, and will be her greater pride to have completed.

W. T. WOOTTON, chairman.

MARYLAND—INTERNAL IMPROVEMENT.

It was designed that the legislature of Maryland should have adjourned, sine die, on Saturday last. But on Friday, the people of Baltimore were much excited by hearing that the great improvement bill had failed on Thursday*—and they immediately assembled at the exchange and appointed a large and most respectable committee to proceed to Annapolis forthwith, to intercede with the legislature that they might not adjourn in the existing state of things. A better feeling began to prevail in the legislature, and the following proceedings took place on Saturday, as we learn from the "American" of Monday:

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS—EXTRA SESSION OF THE LEGISLATURE.

It will be seen by the following letter from our correspondent at Annapolis that the visit of the committee of our citizens, although unavailing in reference to any immediate salutary action of the legislature on the subject of internal improvements at its present session, has happily been instrumental in bringing about an agreement on the part of that body for the holding of an extra session on the 4th Monday of May next, for the purpose of devoting its attention to such bill or project as may then be reported by the special committee charged with that duty. We are happy to add that the belief is very general that the extra session will result in the harmonious adoption of the measures which all admit to be indispensable to the onward march of the state to her high and happy destinies.

From an occasional correspondent of the American.

"Annapolis, April 24, 1836.

The committee of the citizens of Baltimore, appointed at the town meeting on Friday, reached here on Friday night about ten o'clock. This morning, in the house of delegates, Mr. McLean presented a memorial from this committee, asking in respectful and very earnest terms, that the house would reconsider its vote on the great internal improvement bill, and pass it. A motion was made to refer the memorial to a select committee of five, to which the house assented, and it was accordingly committed to Messrs. McLean, Merrick, Burchenal, Ely and Long. After an interval of two or three hours, the committee reported a bill, providing a subscription of two millions to the Baltimore and Ohio rail road; a loan of two millions to the Chesapeake and Ohio canal; one million to the Eastern Shore rail road, either by loan or subscription, as that company may elect within a year, and some other provisions.

After the reading of the bill, Mr. Pratt offered to the house, as a substitute for the bill, a resolution proposing that an extra session of the legislature of Maryland should be held on the fourth Monday of May next, for the purpose of taking into consideration such project on the subject of the internal improvements of the state as should then be reported by the joint committee on internal improvements. The substitute was accepted by the house, but when the question on its adoption was put, it was determined in the negative. A question of order then arose, whether in consequence of the rejection of the substitute, the bill reported by the special committee was before the house or not. It was debated for some time, when the house took a recess. On the opening of the evening session, Mr. Merrick moved a reconsideration of the vote on the substitute, when it was agreed to, and it was subsequently passed by the house, by a vote of 33 to 14. It is to the following effect:

By the house of delegates, April 2, 1836.

Gentlemen of the senate—We propose with the concurrence of your honorable body, that when the legislature adjourns it stand adjourned until the fourth Monday in May next, for the purpose on that day of taking into consideration the important subject of internal improvement, and we propose, with the concurrence of your honorable body, the appointment of a joint committee of five with instructions fully to investigate the subject and to report by bill or otherwise. We have named Messrs. Merrick, Pratt and Spence to join such gentlemen as may be appointed by your honorable body to perform this duty.

To which the senate, on motion of Mr. Mayer, made the following answer:

*The yeas and nays for referring the bill to the next legislature (rejecting it), were as follows—in the house of delegates:

For the reference—Messrs. Carroll, (of St. Mary's), Primrose, Millar, Ighehart, Hood, Kent, Wailes, Duke, Carpenter, Brown, Hambleton, Dudley, Bruff, Mullikin; McCullough, Nowland, Henderson, Pratt, Worthington, Bryan, Brewer, Duckett, Palmer, Larimore, Spence, Whitelock, Hearn, Gillies, Boyd, Sutton, Gough, Nelson, Carter, Newcomer, Gittings—35.

Against the reference—Messrs. Gant, Heard, Dunkinson, Lasseil, Kirby, Mercer, Merrick, Dulany, Ely, Carroll, (of Balt. co.) Winder, Long, Teacle, Jones, Dennis, Ford, Hemley, Kirby, (of Q. A.), Willis, Annau, Duval, Shriver, Turner, Burchenal, Hardeste, Richardson, McLean, Warton, Brookhart, Deam, McMahon, Matthews, Berry, Frantz—34.

By the senate, April 2, 1836.

Gentlemen of the house of delegates—We have received your message, proposing that when the legislature adjourns it shall stand adjourned to the fourth Monday of May next, to take into consideration the subject of internal improvement, and proposing the appointment of a committee on that subject, and concur therein. We have appointed on the part of this body, to join the committee mentioned in your message on the part of your honorable body, Messrs. Mayer and Claude.

The "American" adds—

We learn that both branches of the legislature were in session until near midnight on Saturday, and finding it impossible to despatch the business before them at that sitting, adjourned over until nine o'clock, on Monday, for the purpose of closing the session. The Susquehanna canal bill, which passed the house on Friday with one or two unimportant amendments, and was returned to the senate for concurrence in them, did not finally pass the latter body until Saturday night. It was opposed with great earnestness by Mr. Groome, and supported in a most able and happy manner by Mr. Mayer. Messrs. Morris, Chapman and Emery also participated in the discussion. The vote on the passage of the bill was yeas 7, nays 2.

The legislature adjourned on Monday last, at half past 2 P. M. to meet again on the fourth Monday in May. No business was transacted, except the signing of the engrossed bills, by the governor. Three hundred and twenty-three laws were enacted.

Among the bills passed are several incorporating new banks.

The bill to incorporate the Atlantic rail road company, which had passed the house of delegates of Maryland, was rejected by the senate on Saturday. The object of the bill was to authorise the construction of a rail road from the Virginia (eastern shore) line through Worcester county to the Delaware line.

It is expected, and with the greatest confidence, that a bill to raise a large sum of money for internal improvements, will pass at the May session of the legislature. Indeed, the members seem so pledged by their votes to hold an extra meeting. The bill lately before them, is thought to have failed through misunderstandings and jealousies—and, by grasping at too many objects at once; and we are not sorry that it failed—seeing that it was ridden to its death by way of amendments, at the moment, as it were, of closing the session.

The Baltimore and Ohio rail road being completed, a glorious result will follow for our city, as taken in connection with other public works, in the west. The natural sea-port of the west is Baltimore. It is nearer to lake Erie* by two hundred miles, and has a more easy and convenient passage over the Alleghanies, than any other route. We have no doubt, that 1,200 persons will daily pass over it, (east or west), in less than six years from this date, if finished in three years. It will link the feelings and good wishes of the whole of the west with our city, and even now vast quantities of travellers and merchandise pass by this route.† A Wheeling paper of the 29th ult. says—"Our city still continues filled with strangers. Among others, we have observed several of our acquaintance from Cleveland and other towns on the lake shore, bound to New York for goods. In answer to our inquiries of what brought them this way, the reply was, "we find it the best route to the city." Who would have believed that merchants of Cleveland would find Wheeling and Baltimore their best route to New York? yet, so it is at the present time."

And so will it be at Pittsburgh—of all, and every thing, that touches upon the Ohio, or the various improvements, (canals or rail roads), leading to the "beautiful river." The United States too, by the passage of Mr. Grundy's bill, will take up this matter; and the making of the road receive an irresistible impetus. Indeed, it is indispensably necessary that this great line of communication should be made, for the good of the whole union—for mutual convenience, national defence and the general welfare. Every hour saved in travelling and transportation, (unless a person travels for his health) is a national gain.

THE PUBLIC MONEYS AND THE DEPOSITE BANKS.

Mr. Cambreleng has reported a bill in the house of representatives, in relation to the public money, the object of which is to afford additional security to the government depositories, to require a more strict accountability from the banks in which these depositories are made, &c. It is entitled "A bill regulating the depositories of the money of the United States in certain local banks."

The first section of the bill makes it the duty of the secretary of the treasury to select and employ as depositories of the public money, such state banks at or near the places where the revenue is collected, as he may deem safe, and as shall agree to perform the duties required of them, under the prescribed conditions. In each of the principal places of collection, at least two such banks shall be employed.

The second section provides that if at any place of collection there is no bank, or none which the secretary of the treasury deems safe, or which being safe will not agree to perform the duties, under the prescribed conditions, he may direct the money there collected, to be deposited in a bank or banks elsewhere.

The third section makes it necessary that, before any bank can be selected as a depository for the public money, that a full statement of its affairs shall be submitted to the secretary of the treasury.

The fourth section prescribes the following conditions, which are imperative on a bank before it can become a depository for the public money—1. It shall furnish to the secretary of the treasury, as often as he may require, not exceeding once a week, particular statements of its condition and business. 2. It shall keep in its vaults an amount of specie equal to one-fourth the amount of the capital stock paid in. 3. It shall pay, when required, the checks, drafts, &c. of the treasurer of the United States on government depositories in specie. 4. It shall give, when required, the necessary facilities for transferring the public funds from place to place, within the United States, and for distributing the same in payment of the public creditors, without charging commissions, or claiming allowance on account of difference of exchange.

Section fifth forbids the employment of any bank as a deposite bank, which shall not redeem its bills, on demand, in specie—or, after the 3d of March next, which shall issue or use any notes of a less denomination than $5—or, after the 3d of March, 1836, which shall issue or use any notes of less denomination than $10. Nor shall the notes of any bank be received in payment for government dues, which, after the dates specified respectively, shall continue to issue notes below the denominations mentioned.

Section sixth requires collateral security to be furnished by deposite banks, when, in the judgment of the secretary of the treasury, it is necessary for the safety of the public funds.

Section 7th authorizes the secretary of the treasury to enter into contracts with the selected banks in the name and in behalf of the United States.

Section 8th stipulates that no selected banks shall be discontinued as a place of deposite of the public moneys, so long as it shall continue to perform the duties required by this act, and so long as the depositories made in it shall, in the judgment of the secretary of the treasury, continue to be safe. But in failure of either of these alternatives, he shall have power, if congress is not in session, to withdraw the public moneys from any such bank; and in case of so doing, it shall be his duty to report the reasons for such withdrawal, to congress, at the commencement of the ensuing session.

Section 9th directs that until the arrangements contemplated by this act are carried into effect, the banks now employed as depositories of the public money shall continue to be so employed, and on the same terms as at present.

Section 10th makes it the duty of the secretary of the treasury to lay before congress at the commencement of each session, a statement of the numbers and names of the banks employed as depositories of the public money—their condition—and the amount of public money deposited in each. [N. Y. Adv.]

"EXPUNGING" RESOLUTION.

In senate Thursday, March 31.

Mr. Morris, of Ohio, having presented the preamble and resolutions which were passed by the legislature of that state, instructing their senators to vote in favor of the expunging resolution of Mr. Benton; and having, on presenting the resolutions, read a written speech, in which he reflected on the conduct of his colleague, (Mr. Ewing), in keeping back a copy of these resolutions, which had been transmitted to him; and having declared that the people of Ohio had determined, now and forever hereafter, that the course indicated by these resolutions would be that which they would pursue—

Mr. Ewing, of Ohio, addressed the senate to the following effect:

Mr. President: I must ask the indulgence of the senate while I say a few words in reference to the written paper just read by my honorable colleague. That paper seems, from its import, to have been drawn up and designed to exhibit a brief schedule of my past misdeeds in the senate, accompanied with suitable reprehension therefor; likewise to furnish me with all the further instructions that are necessary as to the manner in which I shall deport myself, and the votes that I shall give while here; and, by way of giving the necessary and proper sanction to the whole, something is indicated about the penalty that I incur if I fail to obey the legislature, or if I disregard my honorable colleague's admonitions. All this is, doubtless, very well meant; it is certainly drawn up with much care, and ought therefore to be treated with very great respect.

My honorable colleague was disappointed that I did not present the resolutions of our legislature, instructing me to vote for defacing and mutilating the journals of the senate. I can explain to him why I did not: first, let it be observed, that those instructions were directed to ourselves, not to the senate; it was a paper not regular to be presented—a paper, indeed, which could be received only as a matter of courtesy. I therefore was not bound to present that paper by that principle which requires me to present petitions and memorials, so addressed; it was a mere matter of choice whether I should or should not present it; and as, in my judgment, it reflected no honor upon a state whose reputation I have at heart, I did not obtrude it here upon the notice of this body. If these reasons had not been sufficient to prevent my offering that paper, there were others that would have had some weight. I did not like its contents, and could feel no pride or pleasure in being the organ through which it was communicated here. I knew the case to be different with my honorable colleague, and I would not therefore take upon myself an unpleasant task in order to deprive him of a very pleasant one. It would have been abstracting too much from the general sum of human happiness to have done so.

I did indeed wonder that my honorable colleague delayed its presentation so long. I supposed that he was waiting for some occasion on which he could bring them in with proper effect, when all circumstances would conspire to give it due eclat and that the most favorable occasion hoped for had not arrived. Such was my impression, when once or twice I gave it a passing thought. I did not then know, or suppose, that my colleague expected or wished that they should be presented by my hand, or that he was preparing or compiling a written philippic to read against me in the senate on its presentation. I cannot, I confess, charge him with haste or precipitation. He has had time enough to give the last polish to his much labored production. As for the memorials which I had the honor to present yesterday, they were received by me with the morning's mail. I glanced them over, and found that they requested us to do things that must have their origin before committees of one or the other house. As I did not disapprove of the object of any of them, I, in good faith, took the most speedy mode of bringing them before the senate. These, Mr. President, are the reasons why I presented the one set of papers, and not the other.

But, if I agree to the doctrine that the legislature, or rather a party in the legislature of my state, have a right to instruct me, and to require obedience, it does not follow as a necessary consequence that my colleague has the same right; and I believe that the legislature have not transferred their power of me to him, at least I have received from them no directions to obey him. I must, therefore, and with very great respect, decline obedience to the mandates of my honorable colleague, and he will also excuse me if I decline being intimidated by his threats.

My colleague has referred to instructions heretofore given me by the legislature of Ohio, which I refused to obey, and he quotes these instructions as the verdict upon the APPEAL which I then took to the people from the legislature.

He is right in saying that I took such appeal, but he is wrong in averring that this is the verdict upon it. I did, sir, when instructed by a PARTY in the legislature of 1833-'34, to surrender my judgment to the will of the executive, and become the mere instrument of power, instead of the manly representative of a free people. I did refuse to disgrace myself and my state by obedience to such mandate, and I did APPEAL distinctly and directly to the PEOPLE, to pronounce upon the propriety of my course. The result was not an affirmation of the instructions, not the mandate repeated—go and be a slave—but a legislature was returned who, by a large majority, rescinded in 1834-'35 the instructions of a former year, which I had disregarded.

Now, sir, I supposed, and my friends supposed, that there was an end of this matter. Judgment had been pronounced upon the subject by the sovereign power, and few, if any, within the scope of my acquaintance, or so far as I have heard, raised the question again at the elections in 1835. It was not the question upon which that election turned. How then can my colleague say in a prepared paper like this which he has read, where there ought to be accuracy, how can he say that these instructions of 1833-'36 are the judgment of the people on the appeal so taken two years before?

As to the instructions which are now presented and laid upon your table, I shall obey or not, according to my own best judgment, and I shall, if other duties do not too much press upon my time, give the reasons which will induce the course I may pursue. If any one inquired of me now, who had a right to an answer as to what that course will be, I would not hesitate to give it; but you may rest assured, sir, of this: it will be open, manly and independent. I will do no weak or criminal or dishonorable act. I will not, in obedience to any dictation, violate my oath as a senator, or join in degrading the body to which I belong. In short, sir, I shall act in this matter, not as the passive tool of a party, but as becomes the representative of an honest, manly and independent people.

Mr. Morris made some observations in reply; to which Mr. Ewing rejoined—when the resolutions were ordered to lie on the table.

VOTES IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, ON THE NORTH CAROLINA CONTESTED ELECTION.
From the National Intelligencer.

TUESDAY, MARCH 29.

The following being the resolution reported by a majority of the committee on elections:

"Resolved, That James Graham is not entitled to a seat in this house, and that David Newland is entitled to a seat in this house."

Mr. Rencher, of North Carolina, having moved to amend this resolution by inserting in lieu thereof the following:

1. Resolved, That the depositions which have been communicated to the house by the speaker, and laid on the table since the report of the committee on elections was made, whenever taken upon due notice, will be received by the house, as testimony in this case.

2. Resolved, That the five votes taken from the commons box at the Franklin precinct, in Buncombe county, and counted for the petitioner, ought not to be allowed.

3. Resolved, That the three votes which were stricken from the petitioner's poll by the judges at Asheville, in Buncombe county, because it appeared by the return of the judges from the Henderson precinct that three of the votes given for the petitioner were given by voters living in Yancey county, and which have now been added to his poll by the committee, ought not be allowed.

4. Resolved, That two votes (to wit, Robert Lankford and George Barkly) stricken from the poll of the sitting member by the committee, on the ground that they voted out of their proper county, ought to be restored, because there is no proof that they lived out of the county in which they voted.

5. Resolved, That two votes (to wit, Moses Pace and Andrew Morrison) which were proven by parole testimony to have been given for James Graham out of the county in which they reside, and on that account have been stricken from his poll by the committee, ought to be restored, because it does not appear, from the poll books themselves, that either of these men voted at the election.

6. Resolved, That Wm. H. Milton ought to be stricken from the poll of the petitioner, because it appears he had not paid a public tax.

7. Resolved, That the five votes found on page 6 of the report, which have been counted for the petitioner, but which were not given in at the polls, ought not to be allowed.

8. Resolved, That there is no evidence that these men were qualified to vote, not having lived in the county where they offered to vote 12 months immediately preceding the day of election, as required by the constitution of North Carolina, or that they tendered their votes as required by the law of that state.

9. Resolved, therefore, That ——— is entitled to a seat upon this floor as a representative from the 12th congressional district of North Carolina.

After much discussion, the previous question (which cuts off all propositions for amendment of the original report) was demanded by Mr. Cushman,* and decided as follows:

*When Mr. Cushman called the previous question, Mr. Peyton moved to recommit the report, which motion the chair declared to be out of order. Mr. Peyton appealed, and was proceeding to discuss the appeal, when

Mr. Rencher asked him to give way, to enable him to make a suggestion. He wished, he said, to make a proposition to the house, under the hope that it would be acceptable to the majority, and thereby enable us to avoid the difficulty and confusion in which we were likely to be involved. The friends of the sitting member did not wish to discuss this subject any further, and all they now desired was a distinct vote of the house upon each of the propositions now before us. He trusted, therefore, that the call for the previous question would be withdrawn, and that we would proceed at once, without debate, to vote upon each of the resolutions embraced in the amendment before the house.

But the call was not withdrawn, and Mr. Peyton resumed his remarks upon the question of order.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Chilton, Allan, H. Allen, Ashley, Bailey, Beale, Bell, Bond, Borden, Briggs, Bunch, John Calhoun, W. B. Calhoun, Campbell, Carter, George Chambers, J. Shepperd, Slade, Spangler, Standefer, Steele, Store, Taliaferro, W. Thompson, Underwood, Vinton, White, Whittlesey, L. Williams, Sherrod Williams, Wise—87.

So the previous question was decided in the affirmative.

After some further proceedings, Mr. Milligan moved to lay the whole proceedings on the table.

Mr. Rencher requested him to withdraw that motion: He wished, he said, to make an earnest appeal to the friends with whom he had acted on this occasion. We have (said Mr. R.) from the beginning been anxious to obtain the sense of the house upon each of the amendments which I have proposed, and in which is involved the true merits of this controversy. The majority do not choose to grant us this reasonable request, but are determined to avoid such a vote. When we have appealed from what we believed to be the erroneous decision of the chair touching our rights upon this floor, the chair and the house have just decided that we shall not be allowed the poor privilege of discussing such an appeal. To this unjust and oppressive procedure of the majority we have offered all honorable resistance. Duty does not require of us that we should go any further. All, therefore, I now ask of the majority is to give us a full vote by a call of the house.

The question on the resolution reported by the committees was then so divided as to take it separately upon each branch of the resolution; and first, upon the following part of it:

"Resolved, That James Graham is not entitled to a seat in this house."

Upon which the vote was as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Ash, Barton, Bean, Bockee, Boon, Bouldin, Bovee, Boyd, Brown, Buchanan, Burns, Bynum, Cambreleng, Carr, Casey, Chaney, Chapman, Chapin, Cleveland, Coffee, Coles, Connor, Craig, Cramer, Cushman, Davis, Doubleday, Dromgoole, Effner, Fairfield, Farlin, French, William K. H. Shepperd, Slade, Spangler, Standefer, Steele, Store, Taliaferro, W. Thompson, Underwood, Vinton, White, Whittlesey, Lewis Williams, Sherrod Williams, Wise—87.

So it was determined that James Graham, is not entitled to the seat he occupies.

The question was then taken upon the remainder of the report of the committee, viz: "That David Newland is entitled to a seat in this house," and decided as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Ash, Barton, Bean, Bockee, Boon, Bovee, Boyd, Brown, Buchanan, Burns, Bynum, Cambreleng, Carr, Casey, Chaney, Chapin, Cleveland, Coffee, Coles, Craig, Cramer, Cushman, Davis, Doubleday, Dromgoole, Effner, Fairfield, Farlin, French, William K. So it was determined that David Newland is not entitled to a seat in this house.

On motion of Mr. Patton, of Virginia, it was then

Resolved, That the election held in North Carolina last August, for a representative of the twelfth congressional district of that state, in the house of representatives of the U. States, be set aside, and the seat of such representative is hereby declared vacant; and that the speaker of this house inform the governor of North Carolina of the fact.

The house then adjourned.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Allan, of Kentucky, on presenting certain resolutions of the legislature of his state favorable to the passage of the land bill before the senate, said—

He supposed that, by the common consent of every body, the resolutions brought before the house a subject upon which it must act, and which must be disposed of before the adjournment of congress. He was proceeding on Monday last to consider one of the modes by which it had been proposed to get rid of the surplus revenue. That proposition was, to increase the expenses of the government, in military and naval preparations, in a degree and upon a scale never before devised by any American statesman. He agreed, as he formerly remarked, in the maxim, "in the midst of peace prepare for war"—it came from a source and in such a form, as to claim assent from every one; but how, he asked, should we prepare for war? He had adverted to the understanding of the maxim in Europe, which he did not approve; but again said he was willing to accord with the maxim in the American sense and according to the American understanding; and he contended that the country has means not only to provide defences, according to the American understanding, but also to carry out the purposes of the legislature of Kentucky.

Mr. Allan then went into statements to show what the American idea of preparing defences in time of peace had been from the earliest period of the government. He read from different messages to show the opinion entertained by the late presidents, and stated that he was willing to go on at the same rate of increasing the expenditure as had heretofore been the practice. It appeared to have been the opinion of statesmen that the naval force was sufficient for all necessary purposes in time of peace; that no more large ships were needed, and that but few more small ones were wanted for the efficient protection of commerce. The opinion had also been entertained that the army and military defences should not be increased. The question then was, whether the house should now enlarge these defences and increase the expenditures, without any other necessity than to get rid of the public funds.

He then alluded to the geographical position of the country, with a sea-coast on the Atlantic of 6,000 miles, and a northern boundary of 3,000, making in all 9,000, which, if fortified at every point, would require an army of many thousand men. It would require a standing army of many thousand men to preserve the fortifications in order in time of peace, and at least forty thousand to man them in time of war. He contended that the country could not rely upon such works, but must rely upon the hearts of the people. The way to make the country powerful was to prepare the people, by a good system, to be ready for defence, and, by a just, equal, cheap and good government, to attach their feelings and wishes to the defence of the nation and the support of its institutions. Oppressive taxation and unequal distribution of public funds, were the means of producing discontent and weakness.

If it were necessary, however, to apply the whole surplus means of the country to defence, he thought there was another and a better mode. The strength of the country, he contended, was not upon the border, but in the centre, and throughout the interior, from whence, in case of attack upon the seaboard, the people would rush to the defence of the country; and he argued, at some length, the expediency of appropriating the surplus revenue to the increase of facilities and means, by which troops and munitions could be more quickly transported from one point to another. He thought this mode of preparing for war of the utmost importance, and urged, especially, the construction of rail roads and the improvement of the great highways. This would increase the means of carrying on war, by increasing individual wealth during a peace; by promoting social intercourse; bringing extremities of the country into near proximity; and would produce none of the evils and dangers attendant upon a standing army.

He remarked upon the partiality and injustice of expending all the money upon the seaboard for ships and fortifications, and thought that some regard should be had to equality of disbursement. He conceded that, to build a fort in Kentucky, where it was not needed, merely to equalize expenditure, would be ridiculous; but he thought it proper that the public money should be returned in expenditures somewhat in proportion to the taxation. He thought it not strange, when the constitution was adopted by the original thirteen states, and when this system of defence was adopted, as the states were all Atlantic states, that they should have turned their attention to the navy and to fortifications; to the defence of the seaboard and the erection of breakwaters; but now the country had come to a point where it was necessary to look westward, and embrace considerations for the benefit of the whole.

Having remarked upon the first plan, to leave the money to accumulate in the hands of the government, and upon the second, which was to increase the military and naval expenditures, he proceeded to present some considerations in favor of distributing the surplus revenue, derived from the public lands, to the several states, according to the recommendation of the legislature of Kentucky. The country, he contended, had now come to a point in its history when it was important that a new rule of action should be adopted; and that something must be done, at the present session, to decide whether the money should be returned to the people, or whether it should be suffered to go on increasing, to enlarge the influence, strengthen the power, and increase the patronage of the government.

He said, Kentucky had never opposed appropriations for the support of the navy, and would not do so now. He knew its usefulness, and looked upon it with pride; but he expressed his belief that, if the magnificent plan of returning the public money, amounting now to thirty millions, should be adopted, and great works of public improvement in the states should, in consequence, be created, local difficulties and sectional jealousies would diminish, the country would be better prepared to exert its strength in the emergency of war, and individual wealth and public harmony would be the result. Above all, he considered that now was the time when action upon the subject could no longer be delayed. The country had arrived at a point of time when the question must be settled.

Mr. Hawes said, the legislature of Kentucky had instructed their senators and requested the representatives to vote for the bill for the distribution of the revenue arising from the sales of public lands among the several states; or, in other words, to vote for Mr. Clay's land bill. This was not the first time the legislature of Kentucky had instructed the senators and requested the representatives to vote in a certain manner. In this case it was known that one portion of the representatives intended to vote for the bill; and that another portion intended to vote in a directly opposite manner. He remembered when the legislature of Kentucky, by an almost unanimous vote, directed the representatives to vote for the present chief magistrate. They disobeyed, and elected another man to the chief magistracy. What was the cry then of the gentleman (Mr. Allan) from Kentucky? You have no right to request us to vote in a particular manner. We consider it our duty to disobey. We look to our constituents only for instructions, and do not heed the directions of a majority of the legislature. The gentleman (Mr. Allan) then disobeyed, but he had now come over suddenly to thank the legislature for requesting him to do that which he intended to do.

He remembered, also, when the legislature was willing to part with its liberty, and, forgetful of the rights and interests of the people, requested the representatives to bow in humble resignation to the United States bank, and to say that that monstrous institution should be the prime lord of Kentucky and of America. Upon that occasion he felt it his duty to follow the example of the gentleman (Mr. Allan) and of his leader in the senate, (Mr. Clay). He felt it his duty to disobey, and to say that he was not responsible to the legislature for his acts or his doings upon that floor. He would again say it. When he saw the legislature mindful of their own interests and rights, and of the interests and rights of the state, he should feel pleasure in acting as they requested; but when they were acting with party views alone, neglecting their duties, and acting in a way they had no right to do, he felt a pleasure in declaring, in his place, that he should disagree with the majority.

The legislators of Kentucky appeared to have taken it into their heads to elect general Harrison president of the United States, instead of attending to the duties they were sent there to perform. He knew that their senators intended to vote for this bill—one of them, they knew, was its author; why, then, should they take up their time to instruct them to vote for it?

They knew that every opposition man would vote for Mr. Clay's land bill, as surely as they knew the sun would rise; and they knew that the friends of the administration would not vote for this monstrous, diabolical proposition. They knew that they were too honest, too independent, too mindful of the interests of the state, to vote for it. The resolutions were got up entirely for political purposes; and he intended, before he got through, to give them a touch of politics, in relation to the person whom they had undertaken to elect.

*We are requested to state that Mr. Johnson, of Louisiana, who had voted on the preceding question, was absent, from an unavoidable cause, when this vote was taken. Had he been present, he would have voted in the negative.

Had all the members of the house been present, the result of this vote would not have been changed.

DINNER SPEECHES.

Dinner speeches and toasts are affairs by no means uncommon at the present day. The following have some novelty, from the circumstances that the guests and performers were deaf and dumb. We copy the account from a late French paper.

On the 6th December, at the Calf's Head tavern, Chatlet square, the deaf and dumb, of various professions and different countries, residing at present in Paris, celebrated for the second time, the anniversary of the birth of their beloved father, the abbe l'Epee. M. Berthier presided at the banquet, where we remarked several gentlemen of distinguished merit. This gentleman is a deaf and dumb professor at the royal institute at Paris. He gave a discourse, by signs, which excited at every sentence, a salvo of applause. M. Berthier concluded by proposing, in the following terms, a subscription for a bust of the abbe l'Epee, which was received with the most ardent acclamations:

"All the deaf and dumb shall take part in it according to their ability; the obolus of the orphan will no more be rejected than the gold of the affluent. Our speaking friends will also join us. This bust will become the standard of our fraternal association. We will place it for the whole year in a sacred oratory, and when the anniversary comes of the birth of our chief, we will raise it anew amid the transports of our joy."

Discourses were afterwards pronounced by Messrs. Lenoir, deaf and dumb professor at the royal institution, Foustier, a tutor in the same school, and Gouin, a painter, and they produced the most profound impression on the guests.

Young Ryan, an Englishman of eighteen years old, then arose amid the general curiosity. "It is here," said he, among other things, "that we see how much our universal language is superior to all the partial languages of speaking men, which are confined in a greater or less degree. Honor to the abbe l'Epee! He belongs to the whole world, by the creations of his genius, and the immensity of his benefits. Union between the French and English deaf and dumb!"

The president thought he could not more properly terminate this banquet than by proposing a toast, the effect of which it is impossible to describe!

"The press, it may well be said of it, that it has performed miracles. It has given accents to the people, so long dumb.—It has done more—it has forced the great, so long deaf to that powerful voice, finally to lend an attentive ear to it. The press—as much, and more than our fellow citizens we place ourselves under its egis. It is to the press we will appeal if fools attempt to debase us, and to deny us an equal intelligence which gives us equal rights in the human family. Grateful deaf and dumb, the press!"

THE SLAVE TRADE.

It is computed that there are now, and have been for some years, notwithstanding several treaties and laws against the slave trade, at least one hundred thousand slaves annually imported from Africa into Brazil, Cuba and other West India islands. The London Quarterly Review urges upon all Christian states, as the only means for suppressing the slave trade in Africa, to decree, what England, our own country and Brazil have already decreed, that the slave trader shall be regarded as a pirate. English, American and Brazilian vessels or captains are rarely found engaged in the traffic. The extent, however, to which it is carried on, is thereby not at all diminished. Thus though participation in the trade is prohibited to the citizens of Brazil, the importation of the slaves themselves is not, and of the hundred thousand annually brought from Africa, about seventy thousand are carried into Brazil. The writer in the London Quarterly states that in the fifteen months ending January, 1835, there sailed from the one port of Havana, one hundred and seventy slave vessels, not averaging less than four hundred slaves for each cargo.

It has long been known that one of the most grievous consequences of the slave trade is the continual war it encourages among the tribes in Africa—the object of which wars is the capture of prisoners by one native sovereign from another, to be sold to the white dealers on the coast. Richard Lander, one of the most recent and most authentic travellers in Africa, who resided some time at one of the native slave markets, relates that when the market is overstocked, the sickly and the old are selected, put into canoes, rowed into the middle of the river, and then thrown in with a weight around their necks to drown. The commissioners at Sierra Leone state, that while the natives are excited by slave dealers to furnish them with a human cargo, on which the profit is enormous, no inducement will tempt them to turn their attention to the procuring of such articles as the British trader can lawfully purchase.

Mr. Macleary, the British commissioner at Havana, gives a computation of the profit upon a cargo of 484 slaves brought from Africa to Cuba. He estimates their cost and expense of transportation at 52,000 dollars, and values them at 145,000, showing a profit of 180 per cent.

MR. BIDDLE'S VALEDICTORY.

Mr. Biddle addressed the following letter to his late associates in the directory of the bank United States, in reply to resolutions of compliment passed by them on his resigning the presidency.

Philadelphia, March 4, 1836.

DEAR SIR: I have had the honor of receiving your letter of the 3d instant, with the resolutions of the board of directors, adopted on that day.

I cannot adequately express the feelings which the proceedings have awakened. Such a testimonial from such men, I shall always deem the proudest triumph of my life. To separate from a body of gentlemen, long connected in any enterprise, is naturally painful, but my regret is deepened by the remembrance of the uniform harmony, and the mutual confidence which have distinguished our association, no less than the importance of its object. It was our lot to administer a high public trust, whose very errors would have affected the country; whose mismanagement might have deeply injured it, and whose ordinary difficulties were multiplied by the attempts to prostrate it. Our great effort accordingly was not in erely to preserve the institution, but so to defend as not to wound the country, and to protect both from a common enemy. That it was not overthrown—that it went calmly and safely through all these dangers, conferring signal benefits upon the nation—and is now closing its career without inconvenience to the community, and with great advantages to the stockholders, is wholly due to the judgment and firmness of the directors. My own personal contribution was only an honest devotion to its service, which would have been unavailing had I not been surrounded by friends always ready to forgive my own deficiencies, and colleagues always able to supply them. I pray you to convey to them my grateful sense of this approbation, by those who were the nearest witnesses of my conduct, and the cordiality with which their good wishes are reciprocated. Allow me to add my thanks for the kind manner in which you have communicated them, and the assurance of the respect and regard of yours,

N. BIDDLE.

FRAUDS IN PACKING COTTON.

In our paper of 4th inst. we published a circular from the Liverpool chamber of commerce, respecting the fraudulent packing of cotton. A friend has called our attention to the following act, passed by the legislature of this state in 1832, in relation to this subject, and informs us that since its passage, the evil has been remedied, as far as this state is concerned. It is to be hoped that a similar law will be passed in other cotton growing states; and a strict enforcement will put a stop to the disgraceful practice. [Charleston paper.]

An act to inflict corporal punishment on such persons as may hereafter be convicted of fraudulently packing cotton, and for other purposes therein mentioned.

Sec. 1. Be it enacted by the honorable the senate and house of representatives, now met and sitting in general assembly, and by the authority of the same, That from and immediately after the first day of March next, if any person or persons whomsoever, shall be convicted in any court of sessions of this state, of knowingly and wilfully packing or putting into any bag, bale or bales of cotton, any stone, wood, trash cotton, cotton seed, or any matter or thing whatsoever, or causing the same to be done, to the purpose or intent of cheating or defrauding any person or persons whomsoever, in the sale of such cotton, or shall exhibit or offer for sale any bag, bale or bales of cotton, so fraudulently packed, the said person or persons, at the time of the said exhibit or offer for sale, knowing the same to be so fraudulently packed, shall, on conviction thereof, as aforesaid, for the first offence, be sentenced to pay a fine of not more than one thousand dollars, nor less than ten dollars, and to be imprisoned for a term of not more than six months, and not less than one month.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That if any person or persons whomsoever, shall a second time be convicted in any court of sessions as aforesaid, of fraudulently packing any bag, bale or bales of cotton, or exhibiting or offering the same for sale, as before specified and described in this act, he, she or they shall, for such second offence, and every other thereafter, be sentenced to receive not more than twenty lashes, nor less than five lashes on the bare back, and be further liable to all the liabilities which, by common law or otherwise, may now be imposed on such as have suffered corporal punishment.

INCREASE OF THE ARMY.

The following is a copy of the bill reported in the senate for increasing the army:

A bill to increase the present military establishment of the United States.

Be it enacted, &c. That, in addition to the present military establishment of the United States, there shall be one regiment of artillery and two regiments of infantry: Provided, It shall be competent for the president at any time to direct that one of the regiments of infantry shall do duty as riflemen, and the other as light infantry, and the necessary measures for carrying this act into effect shall be taken under the direction of the president.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the laws regulating the present military establishment shall extend to the additional force herein authorized to be raised so far as the same are applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That each regiment of artillery and infantry in the service of the United States shall hereafter consist of eight companies; and each company of artillery shall consist of one captain, two first lieutenants, and one second lieutenant, one sergeant major, one quarter master sergeant, three sergeants, six corporals, three artificers, two musicians and eighty-four privates; and that each company of infantry shall consist of one captain, one first lieutenant and one second lieutenant, one sergeant major, one quarter master sergeant, three sergeants, six corporals, two musicians and eighty-seven privates. And, in addition to the present regimental staff, there shall be two sub-adjutants to each regiment, who shall be warrant officers, to be appointed under the direction of the president, with the rank, pay and emoluments of cadets.—And there shall also be two chief musicians to each regiment of artillery.

INDEMNITY LAW.

The following is an authentic copy of the law indemnifying the sufferers by the riots of August last. It was referred in the city council to a joint committee consisting of Messrs. Barnes, Harker and Ball, of the first branch, and Messrs. Carroll, Frazier and Ready, of the second branch.

An act to provide indemnity to the sufferers by certain riots in the city of Baltimore.

Whereas it has been represented, and proven by testimony satisfactory to the general assembly, that on Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, the eighth, ninth, and tenth days of August, in the year eighteen hundred and thirty-five, a tumultuous mob assembled in the city of Baltimore, and lawlessly and riotously assailed, defaced and destroyed, a large amount of property belonging to several citizens of this state, and whereas it also appears fully proven that for several days previous, there were reasons well founded and well known to apprehend such violent proceedings,—also, that when the said mob did assemble, it was not formidable in number or arms; and that the authorities, civil and military, and the people of the said city had ample power, at any time to have quelled and dispersed the rioters, but failed to exercise that power, and suffered the houses and other property of peaceable citizens to be deliberately pulled down, burned or otherwise destroyed from day to day by the said rioters. Now therefore,

Sec. 1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of Maryland, That Alexander Fridge, Ashton Alexander, and Charles Howard, be and they are hereby appointed commissioners, and upon refusal to act or death of either of said commissioners, the governor and council shall appoint some person or persons to fill such vacancy or vacancies, with authority to examine and ascertain, by view and by such proof under oath as they shall deem competent and sufficient, the value of the property, injured or destroyed by the said mob, belonging to any person or persons who shall allege in writing by proof under oath, to the said commissioners, that his property was injured or destroyed by the mob aforesaid, and it shall be the duty of the said commissioners, or a majority of them, to make, under oath, to the treasurer of the Western Shore, a return of the estimate of value and damages by them made, specifying the names of the parties injured and the amount of loss or injury sustained by them respectively.

Sec. 2. And be it enacted, That, upon receiving such return, it shall be the duty of the treasurer of the Western Shore, to issue to each of said parties, certificates of stock of this state, bearing interest at the rate of five per centum per annum, payable half yearly, assignable and redeemable at the pleasure of the state, for the amount of loss or injury, so ascertained and certified to have been sustained by such party.

Sec. 3. And be it enacted, That the sum of twenty thousand dollars yearly, heretofore by the twenty-first section of the act of assembly of eighteen hundred and twenty-seven, chapter one hundred and eleven, appropriated for the purpose of deepening and improving the harbor of the city of Baltimore, be, and the same is withdrawn, and hereby pledged and appropriated to the redemption of the stock aforesaid, principal and interest, to be, by the said treasurer distributively applied to that purpose as the same shall accrue.

Sec. 4. And be it enacted, That the mayor and city council of Baltimore shall be and they are hereby authorized to provide for the redemption or payment of the said stock, by assessment and levy, upon the assessable property in the said city, or by a loan, upon the credit of the city, and upon the redemption thereof by the said city, within two years from and after the passage of this act, thereafter as heretofore, the said sum of twenty thousand dollars annually, shall be paid out of the proceeds of duties arising from sales at public auction for the purpose of deepening and improving the harbor of the city of Baltimore, subject always to the control and disposition of the legislature.

We hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the original law, which passed both branches of the legislature of Maryland, at December session, 1835.

Given under our hands at the city of Annapolis, this 26th day of March 1836.

THE "RIOT" IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The following is another view of this subject. It is from the Globe of Thursday; but receiving only the semi-weekly paper, it did not reach us until the greater part of our Saturday's impression was worked off. It is one-sided—as the other accounts were.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Contested election—Newland vs. Graham.

The facts are briefly these: Newland contested the election of Graham; both parties proceeded to take various depositions, anterior to the meeting of congress. Each party concluded the same, and the whole was submitted to the proper committee. Neither party desired or expressed a wish to take further testimony. Both were confident of success, and the case was submitted to the standing committee on elections. About the middle of January the committee, after a laborious and minute examination, ascertained that Mr. Newland had received a very small majority of the legal votes. So soon as Graham discovered this, and when the committee were preparing its report, he asked for time to hunt up and take further testimony, to enable him to retain his seat. The committee very properly overruled the application, and determined, under the circumstances, to give no further time to either party to take testimony; as, were this permitted, it would be to keep questions open which ought to be prepared for adjudication at the beginning of a session to the end, and might cost the true member from his seat for the whole term. Shortly after Mr. Graham's application, Mr. Newland received a letter from his agent, informing him that he had discovered important evidence in his favor, and asking whether he should go on to take the depositions alluded to. Newland wrote to his agent that the committee had decided that it would receive no more testimony, and that it was useless to take any more. Graham, however notwithstanding the decision of the committee, and without applying to the house for that purpose, gave notice to Newland on the 30th January, about two weeks after the scrutiny was closed by committee, that he would continue to take further testimony, which he did ex parte, and one of the points presented was the admissibility of the testimony thus taken.

The report of the committee was made on the 24th of February, in favor of the petitioner, and the chairman moved to make it the order for the 2d of March. This gave abundant time for the members of the house to look into the testimony and the report. Mr. William Biddle Shepard, of N. Carolina, in order to postpone the discussion and prevent final action till near the close of the session, moved to make it the order for the 23d of March. Mr. Hard, (an anti-mason of New York), moved to recommit the report, to give time, until the 1st of April. These failed.

The report then occupied the morning hour for many days. The discussion, however, was cut off by the arrival of one o'clock, the hour appointed for taking up the special order, (the ordinary appropriation to the naval service); and although many motions were made to suspend the rule to decide on the rights of the member contesting the seat, they were negatived by the minority in the house, two-thirds being required to effect this object. The majority at last proposed to change the hour of meeting, so as to obtain an additional morning hour to pass upon the issue between the litigant parties; and it was understood that the previous question would be called to close it, unless the minority would agree to fix a special period for its determination. On the 19th of March, after various motions by Mr. Rencher, of North Carolina, (a nullifier), to postpone to the third Thursday in April, and to give the parties "leave until that time to take further testimony," thus beginning anew a five month's contest at the close of the session—it was agreed to fix three days for the final discussion, beginning with the 24th of March. Thursday, Friday and Saturday last were thus set apart for the final disposition of the subject, which had been made to clog upon the business of the house from its first introduction.

On Thursday the case was taken up, and the first thing the sitting member, (Mr. Graham) did, was to make a motion to permit him to introduce more testimony. Mr. Hard, of New York, followed this up, with a motion to recommit, and to give further time to take testimony, the house having some days before refused further time. Mr. Hard, after a long debate, withdrew his motion.

On Friday, the house debated Mr. Graham's motion to introduce new testimony until it adjourned.

On Saturday, Mr. Graham withdrew his proposition, and Mr. Rencher made a motion to strike out the general conclusion of the committee on the whole testimony, and to insert new propositions, opening up for discussion and for separate issue every circumstance appertaining to each contested vote. This was debated until about half past three o'clock, P. M. when Mr. Graves of Kentucky obtained the floor. He occupied it between seven and eight hours, giving way every half hour, and frequently at shorter intervals, for motions made by the opposition to adjourn and to suspend the rules. Upon each of these motions the yeas and nays were called and taken: the process occupies nearly half an hour. They were taken 12 or 15 times. It was soon apparent that the object was to consume the time, and prevent the majority from taking the question. The majority of the house determined not to be baffled in this way, and refused to adjourn. Upon each refusal to adjourn upon yeas and nays, Mr. Graves being entitled to the floor, would resume and continue his speech, travelling over the same ground again and again, and making it manifest to all, that he was speaking against time. At length his strength gave way, he became exhausted, and by a manoeuvre, (determined on no doubt previously by those who had determined to prevent a decision) it was so managed as to prevent any competition for the floor. When he came to a stop, it was done, as we are informed, not in the usual way, by taking his seat, and leaving the floor to the member who should rise first, so as to give to all an equal chance to obtain the floor; but in the following manner: At the close of a sentence he made a pause, stood erect in his place, picked up a paper, which all supposed contained his notes, which he had frequently used in the course of his speech; seemed to be looking at the paper, as a speaker would naturally do, with a view to proceed upon some other point whilst standing in this position, having given no indication that he was done, Mr. Calhoun, of Kentucky, who sat by his side, rose and addressed the speaker, to whom Mr. Graves yielded, as was supposed, (until Mr. Calhoun commenced speaking), with a view to enable him to make another motion to adjourn by yeas and nays, as he had done several times before. By this trick Mr. Calhoun obtained the floor, and proceeded to discuss the subject of the election. With a fresh pair of lungs, the arrangement no doubt was, that he was to speak against time, until he became exhausted, when some other of the junta, who had resolved to thwart the majority, and prevent them from acting, was to obtain the floor. And, accordingly, Peyton, Wise, and others of the opposition, had left their own seats, and were collected around him. Mr. Calhoun commenced speaking about eleven o'clock, and shortly afterwards gave way for another motion to adjourn. The yeas and nays of course had to be taken to consume time. The majority continued firm, and determined not to be thus thwarted by the minority, and refused to adjourn. Mr. Calhoun spoke until twelve o'clock, when Mr. Lawler, who boards with Wise and Peyton, raised a question about sitting after twelve o'clock, and wished to make a question of order of it, so as to compel the house to adjourn; and if it did not adjourn, at all events to consume time in discussing that question. Mr. Lawler addressed his question to the speaker, who told him that he, as speaker, had no power to adjourn the house, until a majority voted to adjourn. Plain as this was, in order to consume time, he took an appeal from the speaker's decision, and of course Wise, Peyton, and the rest, made speeches upon it. Again a motion was made to adjourn, and by yeas and nays refused. To put an end to the question on the appeal, the previous question was moved; and most of the opposition refusing to vote, for the express purpose of reducing the house below a quorum, (only nineteen of the opposition out of eighty present voting), another motion was made to adjourn, when Mr. Adams, and many members of the opposition, refused on yeas and nays to vote. Motions were then made to excuse them from voting; not to require them to vote; and finally by Mr. Wise, who had himself refused to vote, but moved to compel Mr. Adams to vote. Mr. Adams refused to vote, and refused to be excused from voting.

In this way, the whole sitting of seventeen hours was consumed. The object of the opposition was manifest. If they could prevent a decision on Saturday, they knew the special orders on the appropriation bills, by a previous order of the house, would take precedence of all other business, and that it would be impossible, without two-thirds, to take up the subject; and that this might possibly prevent a decision before the close of the session; and thus keep the member in his seat (who the committee had decided was not entitled to it) until the end of the session; and if the same game were kept up at the next short session, give a full term to a man who is now, by the vote of the house, as well as the committee, proved to have held without right.

During the attempt which was thus evidently made by the minority to frustrate by finesse or force, the order taken by the house for the decision of the question in the three days, the senator from South Carolina (John C. Calhoun) was seen in vehement conversation with one of the principal actors in that scene of violence which ensued, and which had the effect of postponing the final action of the house. Mr. Calhoun was overheard by several gentlemen to denounce in the strongest terms, while in the house, the course of the majority of the house; and there is little doubt but that his instigation had great effect on the overheated partisans with whom he conversed, in producing the tumult which followed. The object of the minority, however, in staving off the decision until after 12 o'clock on Saturday, which was to force an adjournment without fixing a day, and thus put it in the power of one-third to defeat its resumption by the special order which had been suspended for the three days only, was not accomplished. The house resisted all attempts to adjourn, until the same propositions which had been made by some of the majority, (Mr. Mason, &c.) when Mr. Graves was speaking on Saturday to kill time, was adopted. This was to provide that the debate should continue on Monday by special order. This was refused by the opposition, in the hope that the house would be compelled to adjourn over by the intervention of Sunday, and without fixing a day, and so give the minority of one-third a control over the question of the North Carolina election. But the firmness of the majority prevented this, and after a renewal on the part of the coalesced opposition of all its finesse, to prevent a decision, and keep up the harassing difficulty to obstruct public business, the house closed the question on Tuesday, by declaring the seat vacant, and rendering a new election by the people necessary. For the yeas and nays, and the detail of the various manoeuvres of the opposition to embarrass and frustrate the business of the house, we refer to our reporters' columns.

We close our notice of these transactions for the present with a few observations upon the motives and designs of the enemies of order in the house of representatives.

1. Mr. Graves (of Kentucky), who, on his first appearance in the house, has signalized himself as one willing to thwart its proceedings by the very extraordinary course we have endeavored to explain; in a letter addressed to the Globe, to correct the report in which he is represented as acting, without qualification, with a view to the election of a president in the house, makes the following admission over his own signature:

"I have desired, since my attention was first directed to this subject, to be enabled from the testimony in this case, if I could conscientiously, to give my vote in favor of him whose opinions approach nearest mine on the subject of the next presidential election, inasmuch as that election may come into the house, and the vote of North Carolina may depend on who shall fill the contested seat."

It appears that Mr. Graves did bring himself "conscientiously" not only to support Mr. Graham, as approaching nearest to his views on the presidential question, but also to enter into schemes to postpone the action of the house on the case, and to keep him there against the sense of the majority.

2. It seems that the senator from South Carolina (Mr. Calhoun) entered warmly into the feelings of Mr. Graves and those who co-operated with him, and was not unwilling to appear himself in the house, to add his immediate influence and impassioned promptings in all of the agitation and inflammatory feelings got up by his partisans in the house, and to degrade the house by outrage and confusion, if he could not dissolve it, as he would the union, in bloodshed.

The following letter from Col. Howard, one of the representatives from Baltimore in congress, was published in the Chronicle of Monday last has reference to an article copied into our last—see page 77. It is addressed to the editors of that paper.

Washington, March 31st, 1836.

GENTLEMEN:—Your paper of this morning contains an editorial article, commenting in terms of great severity upon the language which your correspondent informed you was used by Mr. Bynum, in the debate which occurred on Saturday night, in the house of representatives. He is said to have threatened to call in a military force, and you justly object, not only to the use of such language on his part, but also to its patient endurance by the house. Although I do not feel it to be always a duty, or claim it as a right to interpose, where your correspondents discuss public measures or criticise the proceedings of congress, yet this case seems to involve such serious matter, that I request the use of your columns, to correct an error, no doubt unintentional, on the part of the person from whom you have derived your information.

I was sitting close by Mr. Bynum, when he made his remarks, and heard distinctly every word that he uttered. No such idea as that of calling in a military force, or in any manner approximating towards it, was expressed by him. What he did say was this: that the minority of the house had interposed delay in the decision of the question, by repeated calls for the yeas and nays, which were attended with no effect except procrastination, and that if the same principle were followed out in the nation, and the minority refuse to acquiesce in the decision of the majority, it must inevitably deluge the country with blood, because no other resort would be left than an appeal to force, civil, in the first instance, and finally, military.

I can easily imagine that, in the confusion and noise which prevailed in the hall, your correspondent might have misunderstood the purport of these remarks; and have no doubt that he and yourselves will gladly remove a censure, which must wound the character of our government and the cause of free institutions throughout the world.

I am, respectfully, your obedient serv't,
BENJAMIN C. HOWARD.

SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

FRIDAY, MARCH 25.

The following resolution, offered yesterday by Mr. Calhoun, being taken up for consideration—

Resolved, That the committee on the judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing proper measures for the safe keeping of the journal of the two houses and other public records, and of protecting them, by proper legal enactments, from being mutilated, obliterated, erased, defaced, expunged, disfigured, altered, or otherwise destroyed or injured—

Mr. Calhoun rose, and said that there is no evil without some accompanying good. The truth of the remark is illustrated by the measure which has occasioned the introduction of this resolution. As unconstitutional and as odious as is the attempt to expunge a portion of the journals of the proceedings of this body, it has had the good effect of rousing attention, for the first time, to the unprotected condition of the journals of the two houses, and the other public records. I have caused diligent search to be made, and the result is, that, with the exception of the 18th section of the act of 1790, to punish certain crimes against the United States, which provides for punishing in certain cases the falsifying for fraudulent purposes the records of the courts, there is no law whatever to protect the public records. As strange as it is, it is no less true, that they may be mutilated, obliterated, falsified, expunged, or destroyed by those in whose possession they are, or any person who may have access to them, without subjecting the person perpetrating the crime to the slightest punishment. Our secretary, who is in charge of our journals, if so disposed, might destroy them before our eyes, without exposing himself to any legal penalty. All who hear me, whatever may be their opinions on particular points, must agree that such a state of things ought not to continue. Setting aside the obligation imposed by the constitution on us in reference to our journals, the great importance of the public records would of itself make it our duty to preserve and protect them with the utmost care. They contain the only authentic account of the proceedings of the legislative and judicial departments of the government, and from them must be drawn mainly the materials for the true political history of the country, to say nothing of the important interests, both public and private, involved in their being preserved free from all alterations or changes, or suspicion of being altered or changed.

But, as sacred as is the duty of adopting the requisite measures for their protection, regarded in the light presented, it becomes far more so, when to that is added the obligation imposed by the constitution on this and the other house to keep a journal of their proceedings. Yes, we are under the obligation of an oath to keep our journals—a word of the most comprehensive meaning, and, at the same time, free from all ambiguity, as applied in this instance. It implies that our proceedings shall be fully and accurately recorded, and, when so recorded, that the journal containing them shall be carefully protected and preserved. Without recording it, would be impossible to preserve, while the injunction to record would be vain and absurd, without the obligation to preserve. The very object of recording is to preserve, for the use of the present and all future generations, a true and faithful account of the acts of this body. Such is the extent of the obligation imposed on the senate by the constitution, in providing that it shall keep a journal of its proceedings; and, in taking the oath to support the constitution, we have all solemnly sworn faithfully to perform this duty, with the others imposed by that instrument. To discharge this obligation, we are bound not only to abstain from destroying, altering, or in any respect injuring the journals ourselves, but to adopt all proper measures to guard them against destruction, alteration, or injury by others.

The impression that they are our journals, and that we may do with them as we please, is the result of a gross misconception. They, indeed, contain an account of our proceedings, but they belong not to us. They are the property of the public.—They belong to the people of these confederate states; and we have no more right to injure, alter, or destroy them, than the stranger that walks the streets; nor more than we have to alter or destroy the journal of the other house, or the records of the courts of justice. We are, it is true, the representatives and the agents of those to whom our journals rightfully belong; and, as such, are their keepers, placed under the sacred obligation of an oath to perform our duty in that capacity, but which, so far from giving us any right to destroy or injure them, would but add to the enormity of the crime; just as it would be more criminal in a guardian to defraud or destroy his ward than any other person.

In making these remarks, I am aware that no law can restrain us from doing what we may think proper in our official characters as senators; and that, while acting in that character, we are not amenable to any court. It follows, of course, that whatever act may be passed by congress to protect the journals of the two houses, cannot prevent either house from passing resolutions, with a view to mutilate, obliterate, expunge, alter, disfigure, or otherwise destroy or injure their journals, or subject the members to punishment for passing such resolutions; but still a law, making it penal to destroy or injure them, will not be without great and salutary effect in protecting the journals, even against the two houses. We may order the expunging or destroying of the journal either in whole or in part, but we cannot perform the act. That must be the work of an agent. Some one must be ordered to do it; either the secretary, or some one else. Though the order may not make us, amenable to the laws, it cannot exempt the secretary, or whoever may be ordered to perform the odious and unconstitutional act, from responsibility. In a court of justice, on an indictment for the violation of law, it would be so much waste paper when opposed to an act of congress, and an express provision of the constitution. Our secretary, as well as all our other officers, from you (addressing the vice president) to the lowest clerk, are all under oath to support the constitution. Each, when he comes to act, must judge for himself, and act on his own individual responsibility. If the members of this body shall misconstrue or disregard the injunctions of the constitution to keep the journal, that would not justify the secretary, should he be ordered to expunge or destroy the journal. What he ought to do in such an event is a case of conscience; that he must decide for himself, and I do trust that, if the members of this body should be so regardless of the solemn obligation imposed by their oath, as to give such an order, neither our present nor any future secretary would be found wanting in the requisite firmness and virtue to resist an order so clearly unconstitutional. But such may not always be the case, and, in such event, the beneficial effects of proper penal enactments to protect the journals from being expunged or destroyed would be experienced. He who might not be restrained by the sanctity of an oath, may be by the terror of punishment; and a senate, impelled, by party spirit and party discipline, to order the performance of an act in subversion of the constitution, might find itself arrested by the refusal of its selected agent, under the terrors of the laws, to perpetrate the criminal act. Thus, a law to preserve and protect the journals of the two houses, and other public records, by inflicting condign punishment on all who may destroy or injure them, may be found in practice to be an efficient protection against the danger to which they may be exposed in high and violent party times from the houses themselves.

It is too late to suppose that party violence and discipline could not possibly drive the houses to an act so palpably in violation of the constitution, and the high duty they are under to preserve the public record as the precious and sacred depository of the acts of the legislative and judicial departments of the government. After what has already passed here, as well as in several of the state legislatures, the danger can no longer be considered imaginary. As monstrous as it may seem, it can no longer be doubted that those who by the constitution are made the keepers of the journals, their protectors and guardians, may so far, forget their duty as to be the first to aim at their destruction. Admonished by what has occurred, and looking forward to what may hereafter follow from the present attempt, every one be his party what it may, who is desirous to see some restraint imposed on the violence and madness of party, ought to aid to throw around the journals and other public records every guard that may contribute to protect them against the destruction to which the rage of party war may hereafter expose them.

I have great confidence in the committee on the judiciary, and have no doubt, should the resolution be adopted, they will give the subject a thorough investigation; and should their opinion concur with mine, they will, I doubt not, be able to devise the proper measures to effect the important object intended to be accomplished.

Mr. Niles said that, as the resolution was merely one of inquiry, he felt reluctant to object to its passage, although he could not perceive the force of the reasons the honorable senator (Mr. Calhoun), had urged in its support. Neither had he any objection to the gentleman's discussing, on this question, the resolution before the senate offered by the senator from Missouri; he could, if so disposed, go into that inquiry, and examine the power of the senate over its journal, and its right to correct or alter the same. But he was not disposed to follow the gentleman in this course, or to reply to his arguments on that subject. At the proper time he proposed to offer his sentiments on that resolution. He did not perceive either the force or consistency of the gentleman's reasons for the adoption of his resolution. At one moment he informs us that there are no legal provisions whatever for the security of the public records and the journals of congress; that there is no obligation to preserve them; and that they may be destroyed by any one, by the secretary of the senate himself, with impunity. Then again we are told that the provisions of the constitution are so clear and strong that they cannot be mistaken or perverted, and that they impose on the senate the most sacred obligation, not only to keep a journal, or cause their proceedings to be recorded by the secretary from day to day, but likewise to take care of and preserve the journal. If the gentleman is right in his construction of the constitution, (and I am not now disposed to deny that he is), it appears to me that there is an obligation of the highest nature, so far at least as the senate is concerned. The journal of the senate is a public record of the highest authority, and is so regarded in courts and elsewhere—a record which we are enjoined to make and preserve by the constitution, according to the gentleman's construction of the provision relating to this question. How, then, can it be said that there is no security for these records? Is there no authority in the constitution? If it imposes so sacred an obligation on the body, can it be said there is not protection or security for the preservation of our journal? But perhaps the gentleman means that there is no legal sanction—that there can be no punishment for mutilating, defacing or destroying the journal. If the journal of the senate is a public record, and made such by the constitution, is it not a crime to destroy it, upon general principles, upon the principles of the common law? To violate the constitution must be an offence. He felt reluctant to oppose a resolution of inquiry only, but could not perceive, from the gentleman's own view of the subject, that there was that necessity for legislation which he professed to feel, and which he so earnestly pressed on the senate.

Mr. Shepley said, ordinarily, I should not be disposed to make any objection to a resolution of inquiry; and if I regarded this as coming properly within that class of resolutions, I would most readily consent that it should go to the committee. From the language of the resolution, as well as from the remarks of the senator who introduced it, we may understand the object of it. The object thus understood, is, by indirection, to withdraw from the regular action of the senate the resolution of the senator from Missouri, proposing to expunge a resolution now upon the journal of the senate. The resolution of the senator from Missouri is now regularly before the senate for consideration, and all the senators have full opportunity to express their opinions upon it. It is right and proper that such opportunity should be given, and that a decision in the usual course should be had upon it. It is not of a character to require that it should be sent to a committee to report upon it. The senate is already in possession of all that relates to its proper action upon it. If, however, it was to be sent to a committee, it ought to be done by a direct motion to commit it, instead of attempting, by the introduction of another resolution, using the very term expunge, to strike a side-blow at that resolution.

The senator from South Carolina seems disposed to dictate to the officers of this body whether they should or should not obey the orders of a majority of the body. The propriety of one member of the senate assuming to prescribe to an officer of the senate, before that officer is called upon to act, what ought to be his course when called upon by a majority of the body to do an act in obedience to it, must be left to the judgment of the senate. It seems to me, to say the least of it, to be a most extraordinary proceeding. I think this resolution should be laid upon the table; but as some other senators may desire to express their opinions upon it, I will not now make the motion.

Mr. Benton observed that, in looking over the directory, he found that the committee on the judiciary, like all the other important committees of that body, was composed of a majority of those members who were in the majority in the senate when the committees were chosen. He found that committee to be Mr. Clayton, chairman, Messrs. Buchanan, Leigh, Preston and Crittenden.

Now, every body knew, if this resolution should be sent to them, what the report of that committee would be. The report would, in fact, be the speech of one of these gentlemen on the floor, and the only difference there would be between them would consist in one being dignified with the name of a report, while the other would be simply called a speech. The only object of referring the resolution would be to get a report from the committee adverse to the expunging resolution he had introduced. He should look upon such a report in no other light than the speeches of members of the committee, made up in the committee room. He did not know whether it was perfectly regular, according to parliamentary practice, to take one subject already under the consideration of the senate out of its hands, by sending another immediately relating to it to one of the committees. He was not disposed to make any formal motion upon the subject; but he would observe that expunging seemed to be one part of the business, and the right and justice of the condemnation another; and gentlemen were called upon to consider how far the sentence they had pronounced was consistent with truth and justice, and how far they could enrench themselves behind technicalities, to avoid going before the country on the merits of the case. They were aware (Mr. B. said) that the country had decided on the merits of the sentence they had pronounced, and decided against them. They had better, in his opinion, meet the subject on its merits, than rely on their speeches, worked up into the form of a report, in one of the committee rooms of the senate.

Mr. Clayton said that, as a member of the committee on the judiciary, to which this resolution proposed a reference, he was not anxious for the accumulation of labor, nor did he believe that a majority of its members felt any ambition to consider or report upon such a subject as that presented by the expunging resolutions. But, in answer to a remark of the senator from Missouri, (Mr. Benton), that every body knew, if the resolution of the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. Calhoun) should be sent to them, what the report of that committee would be, he would say that, if the senator from Missouri could foretell the contents of that report, it was more than he (Mr. Clayton) could do. The question involved in this resolution is, what legal enactments (if any) are necessary to prevent the forgery, alteration or mutilation of the records of congress? The question upon which the individual members of the committee have heretofore expressed an opinion is a very different one, being merely whether these records shall or shall not be altered or expunged. We have said by our votes, during the last session, that they shall not be altered or expunged, and we have not yet found among us any one who has been guilty of the design to obliterate or expunge these records. The senator from Missouri has nevertheless informed us that we are now divided on this old question as four to one, and his observation was so made as to leave no room for any one to doubt that he referred to the senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. Buchanan) as the dissenting member of the committee. Sir, what authority has he for this? How does he know that the member from Pennsylvania has abandoned his whole ground on this question? We all remember that, when the expunging resolutions, as they are termed, were last year called up by me, in obedience to resolutions of the legislature of the state I have the honor in part to represent, and rejected by an overwhelming majority of the members of this body, comprehending men of all parties here, the senator from Pennsylvania expressed himself decidedly against them, and voted with us against them. How does the senator from Missouri, know, then, that this gentleman is now prepared to reverse his vote? Then, as to the real and only question before the senate, whether any and what legislation is necessary to protect the journals from frauds, forgeries or mutilation, I defy the senator from Missouri to point out an instance in which any one member of the committee has ever expressed any opinion on the subject, or to show the slightest foundation for his opinion that others know what the contents of our report will be. No, sir; this question is now presented for the first time, and, although we do not court the inquiry, for reasons which must be manifest to others, yet we shall not shun it if the senate really desires to secure the public records of the country against the open exercise of lawless power or secret frauds.

Mr. Walker said that there was at least one objection to the motion, as it now stood, of the senator from South Carolina, (Mr. Calhoun), which he thought it proper to state to the senate. That motion asked to be considered by a committee of the senate "the expediency of providing proper measures for the safe keeping of the journal of the two houses." Now are we not attempting by this motion to assume jurisdiction in relation to a matter over which we have no constitutional control? The constitution says "Each house shall keep a journal of its proceedings." What right then has the senate to direct the proper measures for the safe keeping of the journal of the other house? Each house is to keep a journal only of its own proceedings. What right then have we to direct the method in which the other house shall keep its journal? The constitution requires two journals to be kept, one by each house; journals that are distinct and separate; journals that the constitution requires to be kept distinct and separate, and by different journals; and yet we are asked to blend these journals into one by a new species of political fusion, and direct the mode in which the other house shall keep its own journal, in defiance of a clear constitutional provision, conferring upon each house separately the sole prerogative of keeping its own journal. This distinction cuts deeper into the question of the expunging resolutions now before this body, and conceded to be sought to be reached by this motion, than perhaps the gentleman from South Carolina supposes. This distinction (sought to be broken down by the adoption of this motion) demonstrates that each house has the exclusive control over its own journal, and can alone direct the manner of keeping the journal of its own proceedings. The manner of keeping each of these journals is to some extent designated by the constitution, and the very distinction which Mr. W. said he had alluded to demonstrated that to keep a journal of our proceedings meant only to note down an account of our proceedings from day to day; for, had the constitutional provision related to the preservation of a journal of both houses after it was made, it would not have left this direction to the mere naked operation of a separate rule of each house after the journal of the two houses was made. The whole direction is to make a journal, and the manner in which that shall be done is directed by the constitution. Each house is to make its own journal of its own proceedings; it is then to publish that journal. The direction is to publish, not to preserve, unless, indeed, publishing the journal was considered the best mode of preserving the journal. Had the direction, indeed, been to congress to keep a journal of its proceedings by the operation of some law to be made in pursuance of a constitutional injunction, then, indeed, might there have been some ground to contend that to keep a journal meant to preserve a journal already made. But as the constitution now stands, every moment that the secretary is noting down our proceedings here, from day to day, he is inflicting for us the constitutional injunction upon the subject of keeping a journal. If this clause in the constitution had any other meaning, and some law were required upon a subject that is confided to the exclusive separate authority of each house, it is most extraordinary that the discovery is just now made after the lapse of nearly half a century since the adoption of the constitution. No law is required, none can be made, to direct the manner in which we shall keep our own journal. But the resolution of the gentleman from South Carolina contemplates "legal enactments;" enactments which that gentleman has conceded are designed to operate upon this body, and to prescribe the mode in which it shall keep its own journal; legal enactments to interfere with a subject confided by the constitution to the exclusive separate control of each house. Mr. W. denied the constitutionality of any such enactment. This direction as regards keeping a journal was, in that section of the constitution, designating only the separate powers of each of the two houses, not their legislative powers in their joint capacity as the congress of the United States. As well might you attempt to legislate, as regards our sole power to judge of the qualifications of our own members, or the determination of our own rules of proceeding, as to regulate by law the manner in which we shall keep our own journal. Mr. W. said he should, therefore, oppose the adoption of this resolution.

Mr. Ewing, of Ohio, said he thought the doctrine advanced by the senator from Mississippi somewhat extraordinary. I cannot, (said Mr. E.) comprehend how a law to preserve our journals, which the constitution requires us to preserve, can be a violation of the constitution. It is very true congress has no power to pass a law directing how we shall keep the journal, nor what we shall enter upon it—for that matter is entrusted by the constitution to each house of congress for itself; but I really cannot comprehend wherein the resolution proposed by the senator from South Carolina militates against that constitutional provision.

Mr. Walker explained that the resolution of the gentleman from South Carolina went further, at least to the safe-keeping of the journals of the other house, with which we had nothing to do; and as regards any legal enactments in regard to our own journal, it was conceded by the gentleman from South Carolina, that his object in this resolution was to prevent by law any expunging of our own journal, by any order even of this body; that he sought to regulate by law the manner in which we should keep our own journal, and, therefore, the object thus embraced in this resolution was at least so far unconstitutional.

Mr. Ewing resumed. The senator from South Carolina has very well observed that our records are now unprotected against any act of violence that any one may choose to perpetrate upon them. If an individual not at all connected with the senate, or with the keeping of the records, should lay hands on them, and violently destroy or deface them, what could the senate do? Punish him for a contempt, if done in the face of the body in session; if done at any other time, we are wholly powerless. One gentleman has said the constitution is a sufficient protection of the records. How so? Where is the penal sanction for destroying what it requires should be kept? There is none. No indictment could be framed under it, for the common law has no effect in this union in cases of crime. So far, then, from such a law as is proposed violating the constitution, its effect would be to enable each house of congress more effectually to protect and preserve what the constitution requires them to keep. It would be placing a guard, by law, around those records which the constitution says shall be preserved.

As to the effect of such a law on the resolutions of the senator from Missouri, it depended wholly on the constitutional power of this senate to destroy or obliterate the records of the last. If they have the power under the constitution, the order of the senate would justify the secretary in making the erasure. If we have no such power, he would be criminal, notwithstanding such order.

Mr. E. said he was under the impression that the public records of all the states were protected by law. He was very certain that they were so protected in Ohio, and that to alter or deface them was a crime. He saw no reason why the same protection should not be extended to the records of the general government.

Mr. Shepley here moved to lay the resolution on the table, and this question was decided in the affirmative, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Cuthbert, Ewing, of Illinois, Hendricks, Hill, Hubbard, King, of Alab. King, of Georgia, Linn, Morris, Nicholas, Niles, Rives, Robinson, Shepley, Tallmadge, Walker, Wall, Wright—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Black, Calhoun, Clay, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing, of O. Kent, Knight, Mangum, Moore, Robbins, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson, White—15.

PENNSYLVANIA LEGISLATURE.

House of representatives.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

The committee charged to inquire into the circumstances of the attempt alleged to have been made by Henry W. Conrad, a member of the house of representatives, from the county of Schuylkill, corruptly to influence and bribe the vote of Jacob Krebs, a member of the senate, from the senatorial district, composed of the counties of Berks and Schuylkill, in reference to the bill entitled, "an act to repeal the state tax on real and personal property, and to continue and extend the improvements of the state by rail roads and canals, and to charter a state bank, to be called the bank of the United States"—Report.

That they have carefully examined into all the facts connected with the transaction referred to in the resolution, and caused to be reduced to writing the testimony of all the witnesses examined, which is herewith transmitted for the consideration of the house. It appears from the testimony, that on the tenth day of February, ult. Jacob Krebs, a member of the senate, stated in writing to the senate as follows:—

"About the 30th of January last, or the 1st of February inst. Henry W. Conrad, esq. told me that I would be made independent, if I would vote for the bill chartering the bank of the United States; that I could for certain get twenty thousand dollars, and that if I agreed to do so, that Burd Patterson would make the arrangement with me for the same; that I could get it in two weeks after the bill had passed into a law. I told him that the United States bank had not money enough to buy my vote."

He was subpoenaed as a witness before the committee, and repeated the same statements under oath. The representation originally made by him to the senate, and in earlier communications, to his constituents and others, were calculated, and without doubt intended to induce the belief that the bank of the United States, through its agents, had endeavored to procure a charter by dishonest and dishonorable means, consummated by an attempt, if not an actual purchase of one or more members of the legislature. The committee deem it of great importance to ascertain whether the bank were guilty of such attempt, and if not, whether the propagation of such belief arose from honest ignorance or wilful misrepresentation. If the bank of the United States and its agents were guilty of such corruption, it and they merit the unminged indignation of the public. If they be innocent, and any member of the legislature rashly and ignorantly not only charged them with it, but thereby laid open to suspicion the conduct of many members of the legislature, it would be difficult for the most enlarged charity to look upon him without abhorrence. But if such slander were the result of deliberate and wilful design, its author deserves to have a mark fixed upon him, that hereafter he may be known whenever he walks forth among honest and confiding men.

The testimony proves that, while the bill referred to was pending before the legislature, Henry W. Conrad informed Mr. Krebs, "that fortune awaited him; that if he would vote for the bank bill, he could retire from public life independent; that he could receive 20,000 dollars for his vote in two weeks after the bill became a law; that Burd Patterson was ready to make the arrangements with him." Such was the testimony of Mr. Krebs, who swore that, at the time, he believed Mr. Conrad serious in the proposition; from what he has since heard him say on the subject, he believes him serious in the assertion, that he was authorised to make such proposition; but says that he did not consider Mr. Conrad as desiring him to accept the offer. Mr. Conrad has produced evidence to prove that he had no desire, and did not attempt to induce Mr. Krebs to accept the bribe, although he admits that he communicated to him such an offer; and has taken especial pains throughout the whole investigation to prove, and has fully satisfied the committee, that he repeatedly and earnestly asserted and attempted to make others believe that such a proposition had been made to him, and that efforts were making by the bank to bribe the senate.

No testimony has been produced to create the slightest suspicion that the bank ever authorised any person to make any such overture; or that it ever was made to Henry W. Conrad by Mr. Patterson or any other person. On the other hand, Mr. Patterson, whose character for truth is unimpeached, and who is proved and admitted to be a gentleman of proverbial honor and honesty, unequivocally denies ever having said any thing to Mr. Conrad which could be mistaken for such a proposition; and he as positively asserts that he never had any agency from or in connection with the bank of the United States. His testimony is corroborated by Mr. John Weaver, a witness called by Mr. Conrad, who was present at the conversation between Mr. Patterson and him.

The committee are therefore constrained to declare their belief, that the allegation made by Mr. Conrad, that he was authorised by Mr. Patterson, or any other person, to tender to Mr. Krebs any pecuniary reward or personal advantage as the consideration for his vote, is wholly destitute of truth, and the mere fabrication of Mr. Conrad. Nor can they believe that at the time he first made the declaration to Mr. Krebs, he intended to be understood, or was understood by Mr. Krebs, or by those who heard him, as seriously attempting, or asserting that others would attempt corruptly to influence the vote of the senator.—It was said in a joceous and rallying manner, in a public tavern, in the presence of six or eight gentlemen; the whole conversation was in so loud a voice as to be distinctly audible in the adjoining bar-room, which was filled with company, and the door between the two rooms open. It is hardly credible that men of common prudence would seriously make a corrupt proposition under such circumstances; or that it could be so understood by discreet men. This opinion is corroborated by the neglect of Mr. Krebs, for ten days to communicate the facts to the senate; and then only doing it after a vague rumor of their existence had reached that body from the distant county which he represents, and upon a formal resolution calling upon him for information. Had he believed such attempt to be serious his duty required him promptly to bring the matter before the senate, and demand the punishment of the principal and the agent. And his honor and integrity could not fail to be deeply compromised by his failure to do so. Equally imperative also was it on Mr. Conrad to have informed the house of the foul attempt to make him the corrupt agent of so iniquitous a transaction, that the offender might be dealt with according to his merits.—To suppose that Mr. Conrad had received such a proposition, or that Mr. Krebs so believed, and yet concealed it from the legislature, would argue them so insensible to the insults of corruption, and be so high an impeachment of their characters, as to deter the committee, without convincing proof, from coming to those conclusions. They, therefore, unequivocally acquit Mr. Conrad of the charge of attempting to bribe Mr. Krebs, or of having become, or being desired to become an agent for that purpose. And they regret that such acquittal involves him, under the evidence before them, in the conviction of practices no less iniquitous, and guilt no less censurable than bribery itself; and they withhold the same remark from Mr. Krebs, for no other reason than want of jurisdiction over him.

The committee believe that a deliberate plan was concocted beyond the limits of Pennsylvania, to control the deliberations of the legislature by the pressure of the people acting under an excitement created by incendiary falsehoods, sent forth upon responsible authority, charging the bank with bribery, and the senate with interested treachery. And it is much to be regretted that fit instruments for the execution of such a plot, were found among the representatives of the people, who were willing not only to tarnish the character of the legislature of this commonwealth but to sacrifice its interests to the unprincipled dictates of PARTY. In the prosecution of such design, as is believed, Mr. Krebs wrote to his friends in Schuylkill under date of the 20th of February, 1836, the inflammatory letter which accompanies the testimony; in which he stated "that he had been called upon often by men in favor of the bank, and that he could have had $20,000 for his vote." He testifies that when he wrote this letter, he knew that a meeting was about to be held in Schuylkill county, in which he designed the letter to be read. Charles Frailey, to whom it was directed, testified that he received another letter from Mr. Krebs, by the same mail, requesting him to read the "letter" to the meeting, but not to allow it to be made a part of their proceedings. Thus evidently intending to produce a violent impression upon the public mind, and conceal the cause, that it might appear to be the spontaneous indignation of the people against the provisions of the bill, and to prevent, by concealment, the detection of the falsehood.—Mr. Conrad, about the same time, had occasion to visit Schuylkill county, when he repeatedly asserted that he and Mr. Krebs were offered bribes of $20,000 to support the bill. He even went so far as to point out on a printed list of senators which he hung up in a public house at Pinegrove, the names of eight senators who had voted for the bank bill, and who he said were "BOUGHT OR BRIBED." The contents of the letter thus written by Mr. Krebs, and the declarations of Mr. Conrad, come to be shown at Harrisburgh, and Mr. Krebs prevailed upon to make a similar statement for publication, which was extensively circulated in handbills throughout the state. Hitherto the name of the agent had not been given by Mr. Krebs, and it is extremely doubtful whether at the time he wrote his "letter," he had any particular person in view. Certain it is, that had he named Mr. Conrad as the agent, the plot would have failed of effect and been deemed ridiculous, as he belonged to the same political party with himself, and had been, and was a uniform and intemperate opponent of the bank. But when the charges which he had sent forth were discovered, and he was called upon to answer for them before the senate, he took advantage of the casual and unmeaning remarks of Mr. Conrad, to shelter himself from the consequences of detected calumny. And Mr. Conrad, finding himself charged with being the author as well as the propagator of the slander, attempted to divert public indignation from himself and fix it upon another, by boldly maintaining the reality of the corrupt proposition. These, as far as we are capable of judging, are the facts and the motives of the actors in these humiliating scenes; disgraceful alike to Mr. Conrad, whether we consider the proposition as having been actually made to him, and by him communicated to Mr. Krebs, but concealed from the house; or, whether we deem it a sheer invention industriously propagated for the purpose of bringing disgrace upon the bank and the senators, and of deceiving the people. Whether we adopt the former or latter supposition; whether we award the front rank in this inglorious race to him or to Mr. Krebs, can be of but little importance; in either event, he will have acquired sufficient notoriety to secure to himself an immortality of infamy.

The committee feel great delicacy in attempting to recommend to the house the ulterior measures which it may be necessary to adopt. If we are correct in the opinion that Mr. Conrad has resorted to wilful misrepresentations to bring odium upon honorable men for the faithful discharge of their official duties, no punishment, in the power of the house to inflict, could be deemed disproportionate to the offence. Justice and self-respect would seem to require that the house should be purged of his presence. But his expulsion would create the necessity of a special election, which would be expensive and burdensome to his constituents. The committee are unwilling to recommend a measure which would involve the innocent with the guilty. They therefore submit to the house the following resolution:

Resolved, That on the eleventh day of March, Henry W. Conrad be placed at the bar of the house, and publicly reprimanded by the speaker.

REPORT OF MR. WOODWARD.

Whereas, Jacob Krebs, a member of the senate, has stated on the floor of the senate, that Henry W. Conrad, a member of this house, attempted corruptly to influence and bribe him to vote for a certain bill, then pending before the senate;

And whereas, if such be the fact, and such attempt were seriously made, the said Henry W. Conrad is unworthy longer to be a member of this house, and deserves to be forthwith expelled therefrom;

Therefore,

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to inquire into the allegation above cited, with power to send for persons and papers, and that due notice of this investigation be given to the said H. W. Conrad.

The undersigned, from the committee appointed agreeably to the above resolution, regrets that he is unable to agree with the report of the majority of the committee.

The undersigned believes that under the resolution, the committee had authority only to inquire, whether Henry W. Conrad had "attempted corruptly to influence and bribe" Jacob Krebs, a member of the senate. It is not in evidence before the committee, that Henry W. Conrad did so attempt to influence and bribe Jacob Krebs, and therefore he, the said Henry W. Conrad, is not guilty of the charge of bribery, or an attempt to influence the vote of Jacob Krebs, upon the bank bill. The undersigned believes that from the resolution, the committee had no right to inquire further into the conduct of Henry W. Conrad, than it was identified with the allegations set forth in the resolution; and although he has not had the opportunity of examining the evidence as taken by the clerk of the committee, he feels justified in saying from his recollection of the evidence, that at the time the attempt to bribe Mr. Krebs, (as alleged in the resolution), Mr. Conrad had no intention to influence the vote of Jacob Krebs, upon the question of the bill to which the resolution refers.

The duties of the committee being specific, as the resolution which created that committee shews, it could not be expected of the committee to inquire further of the conduct of Henry W. Conrad, than was plainly understood by the language of the resolution; and, in the opinion of the undersigned, the inquiry should there have stopped.

But after having the evidence of Mr. Krebs, and the evidence of Messrs. Irish, and Ulrich and other witnesses, that Mr. Conrad did not attempt to bribe or influence the vote of Mr. Krebs, Mr. Conrad offered testimony to prove that he was serious in his charges, that the friends of the bank had bribed, or bought the votes of some senators, for the bill in which the United States bank is re-chartered.

In the opinion of the undersigned, H. W. Conrad ought to have let the house (of which he is a member) know that Burd Patterson had offered him, or through him, Jacob Krebs money if the bank bill passed. If Burd Patterson ever made an offer to Mr. Conrad or any other member of the house, when he made such offer he was in contempt of the house, and it was the imperative duty of the member to whom such an offer was made, to inform the house, and in the opinion of the undersigned, Mr. Conrad is highly censurable for not letting the house know that Burd Patterson had made the offer if the bank bill passed. The undersigned will refer the house to the testimony, from which all can form an opinion. But while he would rejoice and congratulate the house, as well as the friends or enemies of the bank, upon the fact, that the supposed or alleged bribery, originated with Henry W. Conrad or Burd Patterson, and with them it rests that neither the friends or enemies of the bank, are chargeable as a body, party or association, with an attempt at bribery, or to influence the vote of any one.

The undersigned, therefore offers the following resolution:

Resolved, That for the unguarded expressions, out of the house, in relation to the bank bill—the impressions he intended to carry to the public, but which were unfounded, that the bank had attempted to bribe a member of the senate, Henry W. Conrad is censurable as a member of this house.

NATH. A. WOODWARD.

REPORT OF MR. DEWART.

The undersigned, one of the committee appointed to inquire into the allegation, that H. W. Conrad, a member of this house, attempted corruptly to influence and bribe Jacob Krebs, a member of the senate, to vote for a certain bill then pending before the senate, dissents from the report of the majority of the committee, and submits the following reasons:

I have carefully attended to all the evidence adduced in support of the charge against Henry W. Conrad, and given it that reflection which the importance of the subject required. However much I may feel disposed to disapprove of his conduct, yet I cannot see any thing in the evidence which would warrant me in coming to the conclusion that he designed or attempted corruptly to influence or bribe Jacob Krebs, a member of the senate, to vote for a certain bill then pending before that body: on the contrary, I believe the evidence established just the reverse, the said Jacob Krebs, having denied, on oath, that such attempt was ever made by the said Henry W. Conrad. I therefore have come to the following conclusion, that the said Henry W. Conrad is not guilty as charged.—Therefore,

Resolved, That Henry W. Conrad be and is hereby discharged; and

Resolved, further, that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject,

All of which is respectfully submitted,

LEWIS DEWART.

Harrisburgh, March 9th, 1836.

THE REPRIMAND.

The following is the reprimand pronounced by the speaker of the house of representatives of Pennsylvania, upon Henry W. Conrad, the hero of the celebrated bribery case. We can scarcely conceive of a situation more replete with all the elements of mortification than that of Mr. Conrad. He has resigned since.

"Henry W. Conrad—This is the day on which I have been directed by the representatives of the people of Pennsylvania, publicly to reprimand you for a violation of the duties which in their opinion, are due to them and our common constituents. I need not say that it is to me a source of deep regret, that any member of the legislature of Pennsylvania, should be placed in the relation to the house, and the country which you occupy, and that my official station compels me to execute the judgment of your fellow members. The judgment has been deliberately formed, after having fully heard your case, and the result is, that you have been found guilty of an attempt to mislead public sentiment at the expense of the character and reputation of the legislature of our commonwealth, and vilify and calumniate grossly, those with whom you were in the habit of daily communion. The object of the evidence offered by you to the committee, was to show that the conversation you had with the senator from Schuylkill, was purely jocular, and that you so considered it. Supposing it to be, it has seemed to this house, that your subsequent conduct, in representing that an attempt to bribe a member of the legislature, has been seriously made, and your repeated assertion in public places, that senators and representatives had been bribed was in utter dereliction of your duty as a man of honor, and an abandonment of that high integrity and purity of purpose which should distinguish a representative of a free and honest people.

"Had not the public mind been disabused, and the antidote of truth met and subdued the venom which a combination of designing men had endeavored to circulate, the most disastrous consequences must have ensued; confidence in the purity of popular representation would have been destroyed; great enterprises of public benefit arrested; the character of the commonwealth stigmatized, and the triumph of those at home and abroad, who would rejoice to see your native state degraded from her primary rank in the union, and subjugated to pernicious influences from abroad, would have been complete; and among the active agents in this disgraceful conspiracy you would have been found. It is a source of gratitude to every honest freeman in Pennsylvania, that such success was not achieved, but the pleasure which such a result occasions, is greatly qualified by the conviction which has been forced upon us, that you at least, are entitled to no exception from the emphatic condemnation to which a share in this wicked and disgraceful scheme justly subjects you. It is not necessary that more should now be said on this painful subject, and in mercy to your feelings, I readily abridge my part in the painful exhibition of this day. In conclusion, in obedience to the order of the House, in the name of the people of Pennsylvania whose representatives we are, and whom, through us, you and your confederates have traduced; I solemnly and emphatically reprimand you."

From the Harrisburgh Reporter and State Journal.

On Friday last, Mr. Conrad, in the exercise of his privilege as a member, presented to the house the following protest against the unwarrantable punishment decreed to be inflicted upon him, on account of his opinions of the motives which induced certain senators who were elected as anti-bank democrats, to vote for the recharter of the United States bank:

The undersigned respectfully begs leave to place the following statement of facts in relation to himself, and his reasons against the proceedings of the house upon the subject, on the journal of this house.

On the eleventh day of February last past, the house adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas, Jacob Krebs, a member of the senate, has stated to the senate, that Henry W. Conrad, a member of this house, attempted corruptly to influence and bribe him to vote for a certain bill, then pending before the senate: And whereas, if such be the fact, and such attempt were seriously made the said Henry W. Conrad is unworthily longer to be a member of this house, and deserves to be forthwith expelled therefrom.—Therefore,

"Resolved, That a committee be appointed to inquire into the allegation above cited, with power to send for persons and papers, and that due notice of this investigation be given to the said Henry W. Conrad."

Under this resolution, the committee proceeded to investigate the subject; and acquitted the undersigned most unequivocally of the charge contained in the above resolution. They proceeded, after having thus acquitted him of the alleged offence, to inquire into other matters not embraced in the above resolution, of which neither he nor the house had the least notice, and reported a variety of charges and insinuations against the undersigned, which he firmly believes to be untrue in point of fact, not warranted by the evidence in the case, and concerning which the house had not authorised them to make any inquiry. Founded on this report, the committee introduced the following resolution:

"Resolved, That on the 25th day of March, Henry W. Conrad be placed at the bar of the house and publicly reprimanded by the speaker."

The house have adopted it by a minority vote, and the undersigned has been duly notified thereof.

Against this proceeding of the house, he now respectfully asks to enter his solemn protest;

Because, the committee had no authority to make such report, or introduce such a resolution:

Because, the charges are not specific, nor does any one of them amount to an offence or a contempt against the dignity of this house:

Because, the alleged offences, if any, are against the senate or some of the members of the senate, and not against this house or any matter before it:

Because, the alleged words spoken, were not in the presence of this house, nor relating to any thing before it, nor about it, are not in contempt or violation of its rules:

Because, the words charged to have been spoken, if true, as reported, were nothing more than an honest expression of the undersigned's opinion, and this right is guaranteed to him by the constitution of his country, and every principle of liberty:

Because, for an offence committed out of this house, not relating to it, or its members, expulsion is the only punishment which this house can inflict; and to reprimand, or attempt to reprimand, would be a palpable usurpation of power and violation of the constitution of Pennsylvania.

For these reasons the undersigned denies the power of the house to punish in the manner proposed, and begs leave to inform the house that he protests against being made the instrument for this house to violate the constitution, wrong his constituents, and to render insecure for all time to come the rights and privileges of the representatives of the people in this body.

He is unwilling that his case shall stand silently on the journal of this house, as a precedent, which may hereafter be used for the worst and most dangerous purposes, without proclaiming at the same time, his reliance on the constitution of his country as the safeguard of his rights. If that fails him, he submits with confidence to the tribunal of public opinion, the rejudging of this vitally important question.

HENRY W. CONRAD.

House of representatives, March 25th, 1836.

Mr. Stevens moved that this protest be entirely rejected, and was sustained by the house, by a party vote of 53 to 23.

Yesterday, (Monday), Mr. Conrad sent in his resignation in the following terms:

To Ner Middlewarth, esq. speaker of the house of representatives:

SIR: The house of representatives, of which I am a member from Schuylkill county, appointed a committee on the 11th of February last, to inquire into my conduct on a certain charge. On that charge the committee acquitted me, but reported a resolution to reprimand me for certain "practices" concerning which it was not directed by the house to make inquiry, and based that resolution on certain facts contained in the report. These facts in all material respects I believe to be unfounded, and the right of the house to pass such a resolution altogether questionable. The house nevertheless passed the resolution. I was forcibly arrested by your sergeant at arms, brought to the bar as a criminal, reprimanded by the speaker in terms of unusual severity, and I now feel that my constituents are humbled and degraded in my person to a degree which neither they nor I can tranquilly bear. I was also denied the right of placing on the journal of the house, my reasons against its proceedings. I am anxious that my constituents shall be represented by a member who can be heard in their behalf, and who is known to possess their confidence. I therefore respectfully resign my seat in the house of representatives, so that another election may be immediately held to fill it by the adjourned session, and my own character and conduct I cheerfully submit to the scrutiny of my constituents. Respectfully yours, &c.

HENRY W. CONRAD.

NILES' WEEKLY REGISTER.

FOURTH SERIES. No. 7—Vol. XIV.] BALTIMORE, APRIL 16, 1836. [Vol. L. WHOLE No. 1,282

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY H. NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

It is difficult to pass along Market street—the pavements are so much filled with boxes and other packages. The largest, and it is said by far the best, business, has been done in Baltimore for the last four months, that ever was transacted in this city—and still the assortment and supply is stated to be beautiful and large. Such are among the benefits of having had an open harbor during the late severe winter—and our proximity to “the west.” A few days past, a neighbor counted, at one time, no less than fifty-three drays, laden with a great variety of goods for the steamboat Rappahannock, for Fredericksburg! It is pleasant to stop and see the operations at the rail road depot. A great business is doing there! Indeed, the whole appearance of things in Baltimore is delightful, to persons conditioned as we are, generally chained down to the desk—when allowed to take a brief walk, and see and hear the “busy hum” of industry and the cheerfulness that prevail.

The Baltimore Gazette says—

The great and apparently unaccountable delay of congress in making the necessary appropriations for the payment of the current expenses of government, and more especially to pay the bills drawn by the distant agents and officers of the government—some of which, it is reported, have been protested—has caused very general, and, we fear, too just complaint. Some explanation is certainly due from the representatives to their constituents, for this omission to pay just claims when the treasury is full to overflowing; and money so scarce as to cause general embarrassment to almost every class of business men.

Oliver Evans once said to the editor of the REGISTER, that the time would come, when, every person able to build a house costing 10,000 dollars, would provide himself with a steam engine, as a part of its furniture, to wash the clothes, scrub the floors, &c. &c.

The following seems to be an approach to the fulfilment of Mr. Evans' prophecy.

Portable steam engines. Mr. Gough, an engineer of Salford, has constructed a portable steam engine, to which he has attached a very simple apparatus for lifting dead weights from the hold of a ship or the top of a building. The engine, with its machinery, is fixed upon a carriage with four wheels, so that it may be removed at pleasure to any particular spot where the power is required, and when removed will perform its duties without being attached to the soil, being in this respect as independent of the soil as the snail or the tortoise, who carry their houses on their backs. If used in aid of manual labor in the construction of a large building, a block of stone, or any other heavy mass of matter, might be raised and lowered into the exact place prepared for its reception, as the machinery admits of giving to the body moved either a perpendicular or horizontal direction. The fire is so constructed that all the caloric generated is expended under the boiler; hence the consumption of fuel is very trifling, and the fire itself is so securely guarded as to admit but of little or no chance of danger on that account. In the loading or unloading of vessels, the engine might be placed either on a quay or the deck of a ship with the greatest facility. The adaptation of steam power to these purposes, and others to which the engines we are speaking of might be applied, is second only to the self-moving power already given in these machines. [Liverpool Standard.]

The steamboats for New York now leave Providence at 4, P. M. The passengers leave Boston after the business hours are over, so that now the passage is made both ways in such a manner as not to destroy any day. A traveller leaves New York at 4, P. M. arrives in Boston at 10 or 11 next morning, leaves there at 2 P. M. and arrives here at 8 or 9, A. M. of the next day.

It is said that the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars has been charged by Mr. Livingston, for the management of the great case between the United States and the city of New Orleans, by which the latter gained one million of dollars.

VOL. L.—SIG. 9.

Since the opening of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, the tolls are said to have averaged 800 dollars per day. In the week ending the 7th inst. 8,106 bbls. of flour descended the canal.

The winter! We believe that the Hudson has been, by this time, released from its “icy chains,” and is now open to Albany. Steam vessels are passing to and from Albany to New York. The water is to be let into the canals to-morrow, the 17th April.

The Fredonia (N. Y.) Censor, of a late date, says:—“There is now more ice in the lake than has been known, at this season, for twenty years. The upper end of Lake Erie, ordinarily navigable in March, is now entirely closed.”

The N. H. Courier, published in Concord gives the following account of the prolongation of winter, in that quarter:—

“At the close of March, the snow is not only two feet deep, but it is as solid as ice, and the Merrimack is passable on the ice for sleighs and teams, the snow being about as thick on the ice as it is on the land. We learn that in many parts of the state, great want of hay, and the dying of almost whole stocks of cattle, attend the winding up of winter. It is now going on five months since the snow first covered the ground, and we have had constant and pretty good sleighing all the time. Such a winter as the past, or—perhaps we should say present—has no man living among us ever before seen, and the like he probably never will see again.”

An “old fashioned” winter. The following account of two “old fashioned snow storms,” which occurred in 1717, is taken from Alonzo Lewis's history of Lynn, Massachusetts.

“Two great storms on the 20th and 24th of February, covered the ground so deep with snow, that people could not for some days pass from one house to another. Old Indians of an hundred years said their fathers had never told them of such a snow. It was from 10 to 20 feet deep, and generally covered the lower story of the houses. Cottages of one story were entirely buried, so that the people dug paths from one house to another under the snow. Soon after a slight rain fell, and the frost crusted the snow, and then the people went out of their chamber windows and walked over it. Many of the farmers lost their sheep; and most of the sheep and swine that were saved, lived from one to two weeks without food. One man had some hens buried near his barn, which were dug out alive eleven days after. During this snow a great many deer came from the woods for food, and were followed by the wolves, which killed many of them. Others were killed by the people with guns. Some of the deer fled to Nahant, and being chased by the wolves leaped into the sea and were drowned. Great damage was done to the orchards, by the snow freezing to branches and splitting the trees as it fell. This snow formed a remarkable era in New England; and old people in relating an event, would say it happened so many years before or after the great snow.”

And so it is—in many other places; and with us at Baltimore, the wind, whether it blows from any quarter, (except the south) if it blows freshly, is damp and raw and cold.

An immense emigration is expected at New York, in the present season—especially of mechanics to rebuild the burnt part of the city, with 40,000 Irish laborers!

“MONEY MATTERS.” The bank of Washtenaw, (Michigan), has issued the following notice—

Bank of Washtenaw, Ann-Arbor, March 24, 1836.

An unexpected and continued run upon this bank, caused by unfounded rumors, having made it necessary to suspend payment for a short time, the directors consider it a duty to caution the holders of Washtenaw notes against making any sacrifices upon them, as the bank has available means to the amount of $20,000, beyond its circulation, and will soon resume payment. Persons having notes in the bank are requested to pay immediately, and interest will be refunded on the notes not due.

By order of the board of directors.

E. W. MORGAN, cashier.

The New York Evening Star says—

That the money market in that city continues very tight and that stocks are going down.

Again—

Money now is worth twelve per cent. per annum, on undoubted security.

The Charleston Courier says—

We learn that a letter received by the last mails from Mobile, mentions that operations in cottons had been momentarily suspended, in consequence of a run upon the banks for specie, and that some sales had been subsequently made, at a reduction of from one to two cents per lb.

Bicknell's Reporter repeats that the pressure in the Philadelphia money market is gradually passing away, but that no important or very perceptible relief will be experienced until the government determines the appropriation of the surplus revenue. For the last two months money in Philadelphia has readily commanded from one to two per cent. a month, with stock as security.

The editor of the Nashville Transcript, bears the following testimony of the upright and impartial conduct of the managers of the United States bank, which, we believe, will be responded to from every part of the country where "the monster" has transacted business:

"As a commercial agent much has been said against the bank; but we do not remember to have seen or heard that any chamber of commerce, or any respectable merchant, or any body of merchants, at any of the places where it had offices, has ever exhibited any public charges against its administration, or privately complained of its partiality or malevolence."

BANKS, PAPER, AND MONEY. Brief and desultory remarks. Money seems to be very "scarce"—see the preceding articles—though paper ought to be plentiful; seeing that in the last six or eight months, there have been incorporated in the United States considerably more than fifty millions of banking capital, and we have nearly 35 millions of "surplus" money in the "deposit banks." Some suppose that the latter is the chief cause why money is "scarce"—it is, assuredly, disadvantageous; and, being undetermined how it shall be distributed, the deposit banks hold back, in expectation of calls to be made upon them for payment. Others suppose that the banks care little about that, and say the government MUST accommodate them, and give them time to refund the public moneys deposited; which is pretty nearly equal in amount to all the specie in the United States! and it is certain, that they cannot pay up, without many "days of grace."

Another class of persons, attribute the "scarcity of money" to the manufacture of new banks; in which Maryland has freely dipped "her fingers into the pye"—or rather, in printers' phrase, "pi," that is, types thrown into a confused, or "heels over head" condition. It is a "sin against light and knowledge" and the end must be calamitous. We have made some 12 or 15 new banks, of — millions in paper capital, without adding, perhaps, one cent to the real capital of the state! And so it is elsewhere—and especially in the south west. It is apprehended that a scene of disorder and confusion, unparalleled except in 1819-20, must ensue; when millions on millions of property, honestly acquired by the labor of years, will be sacrificed to brokerage, discount and exchange. It is certain, that the "exchange-brokers," or shavers of bank notes, are mightily pleased with the "prospects before them!" They have good reason to rejoice, and to be "exceeding glad!" For, like "mother Carey's chickens" they delight in a storm. They perceive the storm that is coming—and are strapping their razors for deep cuttings of notes; as the wild boar did his tusks! They, only, are pleased with the embarrassment and breaking of banks! "History is philosophy, teaching by example." "What has been may be." And many must bend and break, too, by the tempest of paper-money that will sweep our country before long. All forced circulations must fail; and there is a time when "accommodations" will be difficult to obtain.

The responsibilities of banks in the United States are six or eight times greater than their means, though all the specie in the land were gathered into their vaults—and there must be a "scramble" for it! That "lame ducks" will be made, and in great quantities, we have no manner of doubt. The people must pay for the excesses of their rulers.

And further, a bill has just passed the house of representatives of the United States—and will pass the senate, also—It is intended to deprive the new bank of Pennsylvania of the general currency that belonged to the late bank of the United States, to liquidate balances and settle claims—not because the solvency of the institution is "questioned," but, apparently, only to embarrass the winding-up operations of the old bank; and, if it succeeds in that, it may serve to dispose of some millions of the public funds—seeing that the people are holders of one-seventh of all its stock! It will be like a man's "cutting off his own nose to spite his face." But it will not succeed; though it may mightily increase the public difficulties, about money. The bank can and will sustain itself, nobly. One of the ablest of financiers is at its head—who has "counted the cost" of all things pertaining to it, and stands ready for the issue—saying, "let the HARDEST fend off!" but by the people, hastily deprived of the use of that currency, (the best that the world ever witnessed), the additional pressure will be hard to bear! It may force the bank to withdraw several, some eight or ten millions, of their present circulation and "accommodations"—which in the present state of things, will not be pleasant! It is about equal to all the specie in all the deposit banks—and then, "save himself who can" will be "in order;" the productive industry of the country be suddenly paralyzed, and wailing abound in those walks that lately abounded with joy, and the glad hum of honorable industry will be succeeded by unavailing regrets. We do not see any necessity, for thus further deranging the currency. The bank, as a national institution, has ceased—it has been "kilt;" why not suffer it to wind up its affairs and die in a natural way—as it must in less than two years? why attempt to force it into a "flurry" as the whalemén say, and overwhelm thousands in its struggles—when it would retire peaceably and passively, at—the end of its time? For this bank, like all others, will rely on its own means of defence—and use them for self-preservation. It is the first law of nature to resist force—and its power is still formidable! It is not a "dead Piercy"—to be stabbed at by Fallstuffs. The bank now pays out only its notes, redeemable in Philadelphia—it is calling in the rest; and, if left quiet, all others will soon disappear—disappear faster than most persons can wish that they should; and discounts on bank notes are severely advanced.

The unbounded extent of credit which we have latterly had, has arisen from the fact that there was no demand for specie. It remained in the banks, only as ballast stones in the hold of a ship. But, let the exchange on England advance one or two per cent, and eleven-twelfths of all our banks will be deprived of their means of "accommodation"—being, also, hard put to it to save themselves! A general war in Europe will bring about this state of things—and we shall have to go over all our old troubles again. Our newspapers will be again filled with sheriffs' advertisements of the sale of property, as they were in 1819-20.

The peace of Europe, together with our own prosperity, have kept things "steady." Many nations are "flourishing," and so are we. England, with whom we have the most intimate connection, is eminently so—business and money are abundant in that country. They are as without end! And so it has been with us. The general business of our manufacturing establishments, promoted and impelled by the tariff laid for their protection and encouragement, have given them great force, and the products of our cotton fields furnish a large surplus for exportation. The probable value of all things produced by the people of the U. S. States have been 1,500,000,000 dollars; and now, at the present high prices, will give a creation of 1,800,000,000 millions* per annum. But a shock may easily be given to this immense production of value. It is a subject not to be thought of without great attention and much caution and care; for notwithstanding this large amount of production, our imports are not lessened—the ability to buy being always accompanied by a desire to possess; as is clearly shown in cases that we have frequently stated, that at a well conducted cotton manufacturing establishment more silks and other fa- reign goods are disposed of than to double the amount of an agricultural population—for the means to purchase are more easily or conveniently afforded to the former.

*Colquhoun estimated the "new property," as he called it, annually created in Great Britain and Ireland, at 430,521,372 pounds sterling, in 1812—say 2,000 millions of dollars; our estimate then, for the present time, must be a very moderate one, for the United States.

This great production, (a considerable part of which is annually added to the capital of a country), has been the cause of the great advancements in wealth in England and the United States; and it will go on, geometrically, (as long as the world remains at peace), unless there is too much "finkering with the currency." A child may set fire to a city, that it will require thousands of men to extinguish.

It is not of physical wonders, alone; that the great west is productive. There is a kind of indigenous ferocity in some of the people of that country which is as peculiar as the fertility of the soil, the immense size and volume of the rivers, and the vast prairies, which distinguish it from other regions. A singular instance of this spirit is now before us. In the town of Dubuque, Illinois, some three or four weeks ago, Henry L. Massey had an encounter with an old gentleman named Smith, whom he shot with a pistol. About two weeks after, Miss Massey, a sister of the first named homicide, shot William Smith, son of the deceased. The feud, no doubt, will be kept up, men, women and children mingling in the melee, until the hostile clans have been all, in western phrase, "used up."

The Pittsburgh Gazette states that the steamboat Moravian left that place a few days ago with the largest cargo ever carried from it. A large part of it consisted of pine boards, planed, tongued and grooved, which had been brought down the Alleghany river from the state of New York, and were destined for the Illinois river, sixteen hundred miles off!

The "marble palace," the bank of the United States, Chesnut street, Philadelphia, has been publicly sold for 388,000 dollars, to Thomas P. Cope, esq. for the use of the stockholders of the United States bank of Pennsylvania. The biddings for it were spirited. It is a splendid property.

The election for charter offices of the city of New York came on, on Tuesday. There appears to have been a great deal of confusion among the "democrats." Result not known. The election lasts three days.

CONNECTICUT. The late election in this state has resulted in the complete success of the Jackson party. For governor—Edwards (Jackson) 20,107; for Tomlinson (whig) 17,269. For the senate; 17 Jackson and 4 whig. For the house, 133 Jackson and 73 whig.

VIRGINIA. There are about 100 counties in Virginia—returns have been received from twenty-three, only. In these there have been elected 17 whigs, and 13 administrators; giving a nett gain of two to the former. The election will, probably, be closely contested.

Attempts to fire the city of Boston continue to be made.

Great riots have happened in Philadelphia—caused by the sale of a part of a grave yard, on Arch street, and a removal of "dead men's bones," from the premises.

A high excitement exists at New York, on account of the murder of an exceedingly fair and highly accomplished Cyprian, and a firing of the house to conceal the offence, supposed to have been committed by the keeper of the girl—a young man of about 20 years old.

A base attempt at fraud in the packing of six bales of cotton was recently exposed at Nashville. The unusual weight of the bales created a suspicion in regard to them, and on opening them they were found to contain about 1,200 pounds of stones, oak logs, &c. The good cotton in the bales sold for only $37 25.

This is something worse than—"wooden nutmegs!"

It appears by a recent treasury statement, that the difference in the duties on French wines and silks stipulated for in the treaty of indemnification has already amounted to six millions of dollars. The last instalment of her debt is not due yet.

EARTHQUAKE AT AMBOYNA. We are indebted to capt. Furber, of the ship Mary, from Canton, for the Java Courant of Dec. 30th. It contains some particulars of a dreadful earthquake which took place at Amboyna, and the neighboring islands, on the first of November. At Amboyna the principal shock continued 35 seconds. A great many buildings were destroyed or injured, and many lives were lost. Fifty-eight, men, women and children, were killed by the falling of a building inside of Fort Victoria. [N. Y. Jour. Com.]

Tagliioni, the celebrated dansuse, who has turned the heads of all the Parisians, and of every body else who ever saw her, is about to pay a professional visit to London. Her history is nearly akin to that of almost every distinguished actress. She accumulated an immense fortune by her profession; was courted, caressed and flattered as though she were a divinity; and at length, being ambitious of titles, married a profligate nobleman, who gambled away all her earnings. In this dilemma she is obliged to commence the world anew, and have recourse, once more, to heels for her a livelihood.

RIOTS AT QUEBEC. Mention has been made of serious disturbances which took place at Quebec on Wednesday, March 23d, between the Canadian population on the one part, and the English and Irish on the other, at the close of an election. Many persons were severely injured in the conflict, but no lives lost. On Saturday night, March 26, the riots were renewed, and resulted, as might be expected, in a new supply of broken heads. Two persons, it was feared, were mortally wounded.

This riot, (says a Quebec paper), was caused by the advance of a Canadian mob from St. Roch's and St. John's suburbs, with an effigy of Dr. Painechaud, swung on a ladder, and drawn to be burnt. This mob was armed, as usual, and in the most cruel and cowardly manner, assailed every individual not of their "origin" whom they met. The partizans of Mr. Stuart, who had nearly all dispersed, hearing of these outrages, began to reassemble, and about eight o'clock a party of 30 to 40 individuals armed with sticks, sallied out, and when near Mr. Robertson's grocery store, attacked the procession. In a few minutes, Mr. Robertson's windows were smashed, and several persons severely beaten. At other spots the parties met; and the house opposite to Mr. Robertson's occupied by Mr. Gauthier, advocate, up stairs, also received trifling damage.

Hagan's and Cotrel's house, in St. John's, suburbs was also attacked and damaged.

The kind of goods manufactured in the nine principal establishments are, machinery of all sorts, prints, sheetings, drillings, carpets, rugs, negro cloth, broadcloths and cassimeres.—The locks and canal machine shop can furnish machinery complete for a mill of 5,000 spindles in four months. At the date of the "statistics," two new mills were going into operation, and two are to be erected during the present season.

In addition to the above, are extensive powder mills, the Lowell bleachery, flannel mills, card and whip factory, planing machine, reed machine, grist and saw mills, glass works, furnace for castings and worsted mill, the latter operating 1,200 spindles, and consuming 1,000,000 lbs. wool, and 11,250 gallons oil, per annum.

SILK MANUFACTURE IN FRANCE. The amount of manufactured silk exported from France during the year 1835, is almost incredible. From authentic statements it appears to have been the enormous sum of $22,700,000 and that one-third of this amount was brought to the United States. Had the people grown the raw materials on their farms and manufactured it in their families and factories, the very considerable sum of $7,566,666 would have been saved the past year; besides giving employment to thousands who have consumed their time in idleness and poverty. MENAI BRIDGE. In that wonderful structure, the Menai suspension bridge, the effect of the expansion and contraction of the chains, by heat and cold, is ingeniously provided for, by passing the chains over rollers placed upon the top of the towers over which they were slung. In 1830, when the mercury was 38 degrees below the freezing point, it was found that the bridge, which weighed more than twenty thousand tons, had risen six inches and a half above its level, and the extremes between its relaxing on the hottest and its contraction on the coldest day, are more than a foot.

Considering the small amount of specie in the city, the exporting of this quantity has no doubt seriously affected the money market, and will no doubt serve as a warning against increasing the credit currency, by increasing the bank capital. To augment banking capital tends to drive specie abroad.

THE LAND BILLS. The New York Commercial says that the great point of disagreement between Mr. Clay's land bill and Mr. Walker's, is briefly this: Mr. Clay wished to distribute the proceeds of the public domain rateably, according to population, among all the states; the old, by whose toil and blood and treasure it was won, as well as the new, within whose boundaries it lies; but the new states claim the whole—and, the present indications are, that they will get it.

[The public lands, as a general fund, will be wasted, and lost forever to the old states—unless there is some just and speedy settlement, as to the distribution of their proceeds.]

EXAMINATION OF MIDSHIPMEN. A board of naval officers has been ordered to assemble at Baltimore, on Monday, 16th day of May ensuing, for the examination of all midshipmen, whose warrants bear date prior to 1st January, 1831.

This board will be composed of commodore Mary Biddle, as president, and captains H. E. Ballard, J. B. Nicholson, A. Claxton and L. Kearney, members.

The mathematical examiners are professors E. C. Ward and P. J. Rodrigues. [Army and Navy Chronicle.

From the Pittsburgh Gazette, April 6. Worthy of notice.—We have just been informed that Messrs. Irwin, Cassel & Co. of this city, have received a lot of merchandise from New York, destined for Chicago, at the south end of Lake Michigan. Their instructions are, to send it to Hennepin, on the Illinois river, whence the goods will be transported to Chicago, and probably most of them sold before the harbor at Buffalo is free of ice.

AFFECTION FOR A MOTHER. The following beautiful passage, as true as it is beautiful, is from Mr. James' last novel, "The Gipsey."

"Round the idea of one's mother the mind of a man clings with a fond affection. It is the first deep thought stamped upon our infant heart when yet soft and capable of receiving the most profound impressions, and all the after feelings of the world are more or less light in comparison. I do not know that even in our old age we do not look back to that feeling as the sweetest we have through life. Our passions and our wilfulness may lead us far from the object of our filial love, we learn to pain her heart, to oppose her wishes, to violate her commands, we may become wild, headstrong, and angry at her counsels or opposition; but when death has stilled her moanful voice, and nothing but calm memory remains to recapitulate her virtues and good deeds, affection, like a flower beaten to the ground by a past storm, raises up her head and smiles amongst her tears. Round the idea, as we have said, the mind clings with fond affection; and even when the earlier period of our loss forces memory to be silent, fancy takes the place of remembrance, and twines the image of our dead parent with a garland of graces and beauties and virtues, which we doubt not that she possesses."

Current through the straits of Gibraltar. A writer in the Nantucket Magazine for September, explains thus the current which sets constantly from the Atlantic to the Mediterranean through the straits of Gibraltar. The specific gravity of the waters of the Mediterranean has been ascertained to be 1,030; while that of the Atlantic is but 1,028. The depth between Ceuta European point is 4,200 feet. A column of water of the specific gravity of 1,030, and of the height of 4,200 feet would balance one of the specific gravity of 1,028, and of the height of 4,208. The difference of level of the two seas, if a barrier were placed across the surface and equilibrium produced pressure on the water below, would be $\frac{8}{10}$ feet. The waters of the Atlantic tend to press in, therefore, at the surface, whilst the denser waters of the Mediterranean flow out at the bottom. Observations in proof of such an under-current have been made.

TWENTY-FOURTH CONGRESS—FIRST SESSION.

SENATE.

April 8. A message was received from the president of the United States, enclosing reports from the secretary of war and the secretary of the navy, in reply to a resolution of the senate calling for estimates of the amount necessary to put the land and naval defences of the country upon a proper footing of strength and respectability; which reports were referred to the committees which have those subjects in charge.

Ordered to be printed, &c.

Mr. Hubbard presented resolutions of the legislature of New Hampshire, instructing the senators from that state to vote in favor of the expunging resolution; which were laid on the table.

The senate then proceeded to consider the bill to grant to the state of Missouri certain lands for the purpose of internal improvement.

Mr. Walker moved to amend the bill by introducing an equal grant of 500,000 acres for the state of Mississippi.

On this question he asked for the yeas and nays, which were ordered.

Mr. Nicholas moved to amend the bill by introducing a similar grant for Louisiana.

This amendment was accepted by Mr. Walker as a modification of his motion.

Mr. King, of Alabama, moved a similar amendment as regards Alabama, Indiana and Illinois; which was also accepted by Mr. Walker.

Mr. King, of Georgia, moved a similar amendment, so as to include the state of Georgia.

Mr. Clay moved the indefinite postponement of the bill.

Mr. Walker asked for the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

After some observations from Messrs. Benton, Ewing and Walker,

Mr. Calhoun moved that the bill be laid on the table; and the yeas and nays being ordered, it was decided as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Calhoun, Clay, Crittenden, Cuthbert, Davis, Ewing, of Ohio, Goldsborough, Grundy, Hendricks, Hill, Hubbard, Kent, King, of Alabama, King, of Geo. Knight, McKean, Naudain, Niles, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Shepley, Swift, Tomlinson, White—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Linn, Nicholas, Porter, Robinson, Ruggles, Walker—8.

So the bill was ordered to lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. White, the senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

After sitting some time, the doors were opened, and the senate adjourned to Monday.

April 11. Mr. Naudain presented certain resolutions passed by the legislature of Delaware, instructing their senators to vote against the expunging resolution; which were laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Davis, from the committee on commerce, reported a bill to suspend so much of the act imposing discriminating duties as applies to the Portuguese islands, and to reduce the duties, on wines.

Mr. Davis made a motion that the bill should be passed through its first and second reading at this time, giving as the reason which operated on him to submit the proposition the fact that it was extremely desirable to cherish the trade with Portugal, who took from us a large quantity of our lumber, staves, fish, cotton, flour and tobacco. The president had been urged to abolish the discriminating duties in this case, by proclamation, and thus to put our trade with Portugal on the same footing with that of Great Britain; and this arrangement with Portugal ought to have been made long ago. The duties on wines might be diminished one-half without producing any injury to the revenue, any encroachment on the principles of the compromise act, or any discouragement to our industry. It was unanimously recommended by the committee, and he hoped would be unanimously agreed to by the senate.

The bill was read a first time, and considered as in committee of the whole; when

On motion of Mr. Knight, the bill was so amended as to make the reduction take date from and after the "30th day of June," instead of "1st day of July."

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading. The joint resolution authorising the application of an unexpended balance of the sum appropriated for the construction of the Potomac bridge to the paving of Maryland avenue, was read a third time, and passed.

The senate proceeded to consider the amendments made by the house of representatives to the bill to establish a territorial government in Wisconsin.

Mr. Crittenden moved to disagree to the first amendment of the house, which reduces the salary of the governor, and, after some brief remarks from Messrs. Clayton, King, of Alabama, Grundy and Benton the motion was agreed to—yeas 18, nays 11.

The other amendments to the bill were concurred in.

The senate then proceeded to consider the special order, being the bill prohibiting deputy postmasters from receiving or transmitting through the mail, to any state, territory or district, certain papers therein mentioned, the circulation of which, by the laws of said state, territory or district, may be prohibited, and for other purposes.

After Mr. King, of Geo. had spoken in favor of the bill—it was laid on the table until to-morrow.

The remainder of this day's session was spent on the bill to provide for the mode of paying pensioners.

April 12. Mr. Clay rose to present several petitions which had come into his hands. They were signed by citizens of Philadelphia, many of whom were known to be of the first respectability, and the others were, no doubt, entitled to the highest consideration. The petitions were directed against the admission of Arkansas into the union, while there was a clause in her constitution prohibiting any future legislation for the abolition of slavery within her limits. He had felt considerable doubt as to the proper disposition which he should make of these petitions, while he wished to acquit himself of the duty entrusted to him. The bill for the admission of Arkansas had passed the senate, and gone to the other house. It was possible that it would be returned from that branch with an amendment, which would bring this subject into consideration. He wished the petitioners had selected some other organ. He did not concur in the prayer of the petitioners. He thought that Arkansas, and another state or territory south of 40 degrees, had the entire right, according to the compromise made on the Missouri question, to frame its constitution, in reference to slavery, as it might think proper. He adhered to the opinions on this point which he held on a former memorable occasion, which would be in the recollection of senators. He would only ask that one of these memorials be read, and that the whole of them should then be laid on the table.

Mr. King, of Alabama, expressed his regret that the senator from Kentucky had introduced these petitions while a bill was pending in the other branch, in the progress of which it was probable that this question would be stirred. If the presentation of these petitions should bring up again the agitation which was produced by the discussion of the Missouri question, it would be difficult to predict the consequences which might ensue. When the Missouri question was under consideration he acted with the senator from Kentucky, and agreed to give up certain rights of the new states for the purpose of conciliation. But he would now say that never again would he give up anything for the purpose of conciliating another quarter of the country. He repeated his astonishment and concern that the senator from Kentucky should have brought forward the petitions.

Mr. Clay said he felt unaffected surprise at the expression of regret contained in the language of the senator from Alabama as to the presentation of these petitions. I (said Mr. Clay) feel no regret. The subject of these petitions I do not approve, and I stated my disapprobation. I should have been happy had the petitioners chosen another organ. I stated further that my opinions were unchanged. But these petitions have been committed to my care. In presenting them I only performed a duty—a duty, in reference to petitions, of a constitutional, almost a sacred character. I have presented the petitions, but I have asked for no other action on them than the mere laying of them on the table, although I might have done so, as the bill is yet before the other branch. It is highly competent to the legislative authority to pass another bill to control this clause in the constitution of Arkansas. I have asked no such thing. If the question should be stirred in the other branch, as seems to be apprehended by the senator from Alabama, it is better that the petitions are presented here. Here they are. I have merely performed a duty in presenting them; yet I am chided, chided at least in tone, by the senator from Alabama for having done so. Sure I am sir, that in this tone of chiding there is not another senator on this floor who will participate.

As to the principle of compromise, (Mr. C. continued), there were several epochs from which gentlemen might take their start. The adoption of the constitution was a compromise; the settlement of the Missouri question was the second epoch; the adjustment of the tariff was the third. The principle illustrated in all these great cases it was highly desirable should be carried out. These persons who now come before congress think it hard that they should be excluded from any participation in the soil south of 40 degrees which was won by the aid of their treasure and their valor. Perhaps the hardship was equally severe on those whose habits have rendered them familiar with slavery, that they are virtually excluded from a residence in any of the states north of the line of forty. He concluded with saying, that he had defended the principle of compromise in the Missouri question with as much zeal, if not as much ability, as the senator from Alabama.

The petitions were then laid on the table.

Mr. Kent presented resolutions of the legislature of Maryland, instructing the senators to vote for a distribution of the proceeds of the public lands.

Mr. Goldsborough presented resolutions from the same legislature, against the expunging resolution.

After other business of a preliminary character—

The senate proceeded to consider the bill concerning incendiary publications; when

Mr. Calhoun addressed the senate in reply to the objections which had been made to the bill.

Mr. Davis then answered the observations of the senator from South Carolina. After he had concluded,

On motion of Mr. Brown, the bill was laid on the table, and the senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

After remaining a short time with the doors closed,

The senate adjourned.

April 13. Mr. Kent presented a memorial of the general assembly of Maryland, praying congress to cause a survey of the Chesapeake bay.

Mr. Calhoun offered the following, which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the secretary of the treasury be directed to report to the senate, with as little delay as possible, the amount of money in the treasury on the 1st of April, where deposited, and the amount of liabilities of the several banks, respectively, and their means of meeting the same, and also the receipts of the treasury for the quarter ending 31st March, arranged under the heads of customs, public lands and incidental receipts.

On motion of Mr. Calhoun, the bill relating to incendiary publications was taken up.

Mr. Benton said he desired to say something on the subject of the bill, which he thought went too far, though he was willing to go a great length. He asked for time to consider it, and moved to lay it on the table, but withdrew his motion, and

Mr. Niles offered a substitute or amendment—which was debated at length. The bill was laid on the table, to be taken up on Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Friday, April 8. Several motions to suspend the rules to offer certain resolutions, were negatived.

On motion of Mr. May, the house proceeded to the consideration of the bill to establish the territorial government of Wisconsin.

A long debate followed. The bill was read a third time and passed.

Mr. Whittelsey then called for the orders of the day.

Mr. Robertson offered a series of retrenchment resolutions, as to the expenditures of the several departments, but the house refused to suspend the rules.

Private bills were then taken up and occupied the remainder of the day.

Saturday, April 9, was chiefly spent on private bills, and many of them were disposed of.

Monday, April 11. The resolutions from the legislature of Kentucky, directing the senators and requesting the representatives of that state to vote for a bill to distribute the revenue arising from sales of public lands among the several states, for the purposes of internal improvement and education, being first in order, were taken up.

Mr. Speight moved to postpone the consideration of those resolutions, for the purpose of receiving petitions and memorials, and such resolutions as would not give rise to debate.

Mr. Graves said—The distribution of the sales of the public lands is a subject in which every state in this union feels a deep interest, and it ought not to be set aside without some good reason. The object of the gentleman from North Carolina, in suspending the consideration of this subject for the purpose of receiving petitions, may be attained by dispensing with the rules to-morrow for that purpose. And he (Mr. G.) was unable to account why that gentleman had chosen to make his motion to-day, when he knows the effect of it will be to occupy the very small portion of time allotted by the house to this subject, one in which Kentucky has a much greater direct interest than any other upon which this congress will likely act. I trust, sir, the motion will not prevail.

The question was then taken on postponing the further consideration of the Kentucky resolutions, and decided in the affirmative without a count.

Mr. Jenifer offered to present certain resolutions, passed by the legislature of Maryland, protesting against the expunction from the journals of the proceedings of either house of congress.

Mr. Thomas objected to their reception.

Mr. Jenifer asked that the resolutions be read and printed; to which Mr. Thomas also objected, and protested against the expression of the opinion of the legislature being considered the sentiments of the people of the state.

Mr. Jenifer expressed his surprise that any member from Maryland should object to the reading or printing of resolutions passed by the legislature, and forwarded at their request, by the governor of the state, to the representatives here. He should have presumed that the resolutions should have been presented, either by his colleague, (Mr. Thomas), or one of the representatives from the city of Baltimore, and to have had the benefit of their advice as to their proper disposition. He hoped, however, that the resolutions might be read, as he perceived a desire to suppress them altogether. The resolutions were then read, and laid over till Monday next.

Mr. Chambers, of Pennsylvania, presented a petition from the citizens of Beaver county, Pennsylvania, complaining of the burden imposed on the navigation of the Ohio river, in the collection of tolls on the Louisville and Portland canal; and that, whilst immense sums of money have been appropriated and expended for foreign commerce and on the Atlantic coast, but little has been done for inland commerce and navigation. The petitioners ask congress to make an appropriation to purchase out the individual stock in the Louisville and Portland canal company, and make the navigation of the Ohio river free.

A great many resolutions, chiefly of a local or private nature, were submitted.

On motion of Mr. Graves,

Resolved, That the petitions of sundry citizens of the states of Kentucky, Illinois and Pennsylvania, in favor of the federal government's purchasing up the individual stock in the Louisville and Portland canal, be referred to the committee on roads and canals, with instructions to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill providing for the appropriation of the proceeds of the government stock for that purpose.

On motion of Mr. W. L. Fuller,

Resolved, That the committee on military affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorising the secretary of war to furnish the state of Kentucky, at the national expense, with a supply of arms, ordnance and munitions of war, equal to the quantity lately destroyed by the burning of the arsenal in that state.

Mr. Slade, after stating that he was not present when the state of Vermont was called, asked leave to present a petition; which was not objected to.

Mr. Slade then presented a memorial from sundry citizens of the city of Philadelphia, remonstrating against the admission of Arkansas into the union, with a constitution which sanctions the existence of slavery, and prohibits the abolition thereof, and called for its reading.

The reading of the memorial was objected to, and

The chair stated that the gentleman from Vermont had a right to call for its reading.

Mr. Hannegan moved to reconsider the assent given by the house to the presentation of the memorial.

The chair stated that the motion was in order.

After some conversation, the house adjourned.—The chair having decided (from which decision Mr. Slade appealed), the house adjourned, at half past three o'clock.

Tuesday, April 12. Mr. Cambreleng moved to take up the bill repealing the 14th section of the act incorporating the subscribers to the United States bank, which section makes the bills and notes of said bank receivable in payment of all dues to the government of the United States.

Mr. Dunlap objected. Until the special order was rescinded, he would, he said, oppose any motion to take up any other business than the appropriation bills.

Mr. Cambreleng said it was necessary that the bill should pass, for the protection of the interests of the United States. He had a letter from the cashier of the branch at Savannah, stating that he was not authorised to redeem the notes paid by that branch, but that they would be paid in Philadelphia.

Mr. C. also stated that the new bank of the United States issued only the notes of the old bank and its branches, which were redeemable only in Philadelphia.

He moved the suspension of the rules for the purpose of taking up the bill, and the motion was agreed to.

After some discussion, and several unsuccessful attempts by Mr. Peyton to amend the bill by adding to it provisions relating to the deposit banks, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was passed—by means of the previous question.

The house then went into committee of the whole on the state of the union, upon the general civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, the debate on which continued until half past five o'clock, when the committee rose, and the house adjourned.

Wednesday, April 13. Mr. Dromgoole asked the consent of the house to offer a resolution for an inquiry into the management of the deposit banks, as such.

Mr. Wise objected, and asked leave to give his reasons therefor, which was refused.

Mr. Dromgoole then gave notice that he should renew the motion to-morrow, and if objected to, he should move the suspension of the rules.

Mr. Wise said he would give the gentleman an opportunity to offer his resolutions now. He then asked the consent of the house to offer the resolutions on the same subject heretofore presented by him. He said his colleague would move his resolution as an amendment to this, and on the previous question, his colleague's resolution and his (Mr. W.'s) would be cut off.

Objections being made, Mr. Wise moved the suspension of the rules, which was negatived, yeas 66, nays 88.

Mr. Dromgoole having changed his intention to defer till to-morrow his resolutions, now moved to suspend the rules so as to offer them now. The motion was agreed to, yeas 158, nays 19.

Mr. Wise intimated his intention to offer his resolutions as an amendment, but it being near one o'clock, he moved to suspend the rules so as to continue the consideration. This was rejected.

Other business being attended to—

The special order was here announced, and the house resolved itself into a committee of the whole on the bill making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses for 1836.

The question being on Mr. A. H. Shepard's motion to substitute $17,000 for $25,000, for the contingent expenses of the state department, a long debate ensued, not on the motion, but relative to the appointment of Messrs. Howard and Rush as commissioners to Michigan during the controversy with Ohio—to the deposit banks, and R. M. Whitney's connection therewith, &c.

The principal speakers were Messrs. Wise, Bell, J. Y. Mason and A. H. Shepard.

THURSDAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

The National Intelligencer of yesterday, after assigning its reasons for a postponement of Thursday's proceedings, says—

The following paragraphs, however, embrace the principal business transacted in each house yesterday:

In the senate, after some morning business, the great bill to provide for the distribution of the proceeds of the public lands among the several states, was taken up, and underwent discussion; which had not been brought to a close, when, near the usual hour of adjournment, the bill was laid upon the table until to-day.

In the house of representatives, after two or three vain attempts to suspend the rules to enable members to make motions—for, owing to the gross inconsistency of the rules (as now construed) with common sense, it is only by suspending the rules that any original motion can be brought within the rules—the house resumed the consideration of the annual general appropriation bill, and continued engaged in the discussion of it until 6 o'clock. Previous to the adjournment, the rules were suspended, which assign Friday and Saturday for the consideration of private bills, and this bill was accordingly made the special order of the day for that day and to-morrow.

Perhaps, it ought to be mentioned, further, that, by moving an amendment to a resolution proposed by another gentleman, Mr. Wise succeeded in getting before the house, yesterday, his proposition for the appointment of a committee to investigate the nature of the connexion of Mr. R. M. Whitney with the deposit banks and the treasury, &c. The remarks of Mr. W. in support of this motion were arrested by a motion to proceed to the orders of the day, which motion, after the arrival of the hour of one o'clock, if carried, puts aside for that day all business which has not entered into the orders of the day.

ASSEMBLY OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

FRIDAY, 25TH MARCH.

Distribution of the awards of the public lands.

Mr. Bradish rose and said, that he held in his hand a preamble and resolutions, on a subject of deep interest to the people of this state, and the whole country. In calling the attention of the house at this time, to a subject so important and interesting to the whole people, he trusted he might be permitted thus early, to invoke in its consideration the candor and deliberation, due as well to the nature of the subject, as it would be in harmony with our responsibilities as representatives of the people. He therefore confidently indulged the hope that in the final disposal of this important matter, no other considerations than such as commanded themselves to the house, as members of the house, and as citizens of this state, would have any influence. As the resolutions were concurrent, he supposed they would lie on the table one day of course.

The preamble and resolutions were then read by the clerk, as follows:

Whereas, the United States, in entering into "articles of confederation and perpetual union," encountered serious impediments, arising from the claims of several of the states to the extensive unoccupied territory within their respective chartered limits; as well as from the views entertained by other states in relation to such claims:

And whereas the congress of the United States, anxious to remove those impediments, did on the 6th day of September, 1780, resolve among other things, "that it be earnestly recommended to those states who have claims to the western country, to pass such laws, and give their delegates in congress such powers, as may effectually remove the only obstacle to a final ratification of the articles of confederation;"

And whereas congress, on the 10th day of October, 1780, and before any state had in pursuance of its earnest request, made any cession of its territorial claims to the United States, did also resolve, "that the unappropriated lands that might be ceded or relinquished to the United States, by any particular state, pursuant to the recommendation of congress of the 6th of September, 1780, should be disposed of for the common benefit of the United States, &c." and "that the said lands should be granted or settled at such times and under such regulations as should hereafter be agreed on by the United States in congress assembled or any nine of them:"

And whereas several of the states, New York being the first, animated by a spirit of conciliation, and a patriotic desire to remove the impediments which existed to a cordial union and co-operation of all the states in the accomplishment of the great objects of the revolution, did, in pursuance of the earnest solicitation of congress, make large cessions of territory of the U. States, upon the conditions, and for the uses, declared by congress in its resolution of the 10th of October, 1789; and which, by the express terms of the cession, were to be considered "as a common fund for the use and benefit of such of the United States as had become, or should become, members of the confederation or federal alliance of the said states, and were to be faithfully disposed of for that purpose, and for no other use or purpose whatever;" and which cessions proceeded not more from a spirit of conciliation than a sense of justice, and were induced by the consideration, that as by the united exertions and the common blood and treasure of the whole people of the U. States, those immense tracts of fertile and valuable lands had been wrested from the British crown, so ought they to be considered as the common domain, and to enure to the common benefit of all.

And whereas the territory acquired by treaties with France and Spain, embracing Louisiana and the Floridas, were paid for out of the common treasure of the United States, which had been drawn from the people either by direct or indirect taxation, and is, therefore, and of right ought to be, the common property of the whole people of the United States, to be held and disposed of for their benefit:

And whereas it appears, from the returns of the treasury department that there is now in the treasury upwards of thirty millions of dollars, of which twenty millions five hundred and seventy-one thousand, one hundred and twenty-five dollars and seventy-five cents are the proceeds of the sales of the public lands; and that judging of the future by the past, there will be in the treasury, on the first day of January next, upwards of fifty millions of dollars; and that the average receipts from the sales of the public lands for the next years will probably exceed ten millions of dollars annually:

And whereas, the national debt has happily been extinguished, and it may be confidently estimated that, after all proper expenditures for the ordinary purposes of the government, and for putting the nation in an attitude of complete defence, both by land and by sea, there will still remain a large surplus, exceeding the amount of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands now in the treasury:

And whereas, such large accumulations of revenue are not only unfavorable to a wise economy in the public expenditures, and a pure administration of the government; but are corrupting in their tendency, and even dangerous to liberty itself; that instead of such dangerous accumulations, a sounder policy would suggest, and justice to the people seem to require, that a portion, at least, of their own money, now lying hoarded in banks, and neither necessary for the uses, nor profitable to the finances of the government, should be given back to the people, and be employed for their benefit:

And whereas, the right of the people to demand a distribution of the proceeds of the sales of the public domain, and thus become relieved and exonerated from burthensome and unnecessary taxation, is unquestionably not in contravention of the constitution, inasmuch as the cessions made by the several states were intended and expressly declared to be for the common benefit of the whole people of the United States and inasmuch also, as by the third section of the fourth article of the constitution of the United States, it is ordained, "that congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory and other property belonging to the United States;"

And whereas, it appears by a report made to the senate of the United States during the present session of congress that, should a distribution of the proceeds of the sales of the public land now in the treasury be made upon just and equitable principles, the state of New York, in such distribution, would be entitled to receive the sum of three millions three hundred and nine thousand, five hundred and three dollars; and should such distribution hereafter continue to be made annually, this state would probably receive annually, upwards of one million and a half of dollars:

And whereas, the representatives of the people of this state would be unfaithful to their constituents, if they should be regardless of their right to demand and receive their just proportion of the fund now held in trust for the United States by congress—a fund which, if now justly distributed, would not only greatly relieve from the heavy burden of taxation, but would diffuse among the people manifold blessings, in useful and important works of internal improvement, and in multiplying and extending the advantages of education to every child of the republic: Therefore,

Resolved, (if the senate concur), That our senators and representatives in congress be, and they are hereby, earnestly requested to use every proper effort to procure the passage of a law which shall provide for a just and equitable distribution of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, which are now or shall hereafter come into the national treasury, among the several states, according to their respective rights therein.

Resolved, (if the senate concur), That his excellency the governor be requested to transmit to each of our senators and representatives in congress a copy of the foregoing preamble and resolution.

The ordinary motion to print, was made by Mr. Carroll, and decided as follows, yeas 28, yeas 73:

AYES—Messrs. A. Barker, Bradish, Brooks, Campbell, Carroll, Chambers, Comstock, Herttelt, Jones, Keep, Lee, Marvin, Ogden, W. S. Paddock, Pardee, Patterson, Richmond, Robertson, Romeyn, D. L. Seymour, M. H. Sibley, Simson, Switzer, Tomlinson, Tyrrel, J. J. Vile, S. L. Vile, N. West—28.

E. Shepard, R. L. Smith, Speaker, Spencer, Stetson, Sutton, Topping, Tubbs, Van Eiten, Walworth, J. West, Wilbur, Yates—73.

So the house refused to print the preamble and resolutions.

THE DEPOSITE BANKS.

Remarks of Mr. Ewing, of Ohio, in the senate, March 17, on the subject of the report of the treasury department on the deposit banks.

Mr. Ewing said he believed it had not been usual, before the final discharge of the national debt, to have at any one time in the treasury money enough to discharge all the existing appropriations; indeed, it had never been the case at the commencement of the year. The senator from Missouri was, therefore, wrong in saying that the surplus in the treasury was chargeable, or would be chargeable, with the appropriations of the current year. Those appropriations are always expected to be paid out of the accruing revenues. For example, if we had now in the treasury but five millions, instead of thirty millions, can it be doubted that we might safely go on and appropriate twenty-five millions, if necessary, for the current year, and be secure in the prospect of receiving from the customs alone money enough to meet and cover the expenditure? The gentleman from Missouri knows well—none better than he—that we might. How, then, can he urge that the present surplus is or will be chargeable with future expenditures? On the contrary, the receipts of this year will, beyond all doubt, very much exceed the expenditures. The surplus, instead of being diminished, must continue to increase.

The senator from Missouri says, the appropriation bills are kept back to an unusually late day in the session, for the purpose of swelling this apparent surplus. By whom kept back? Those bills do, in the regular course of things, originate in the house of representatives; they are sent to the senate, and then, and not till then, acted on here. Well, we have not yet heard from them; they have not come to us; and if they are kept back, it is by the friends of the administration in the house, with whose doings and motives the senator from Missouri is probably better acquainted than I am. This only can I say: those bills have not been kept back here for any such purpose.

I feel fully and sensibly the danger to which the public money, and, what is of more importance, our currency and the business of the country, are exposed, from the unsound condition of the deposit banks. I glanced my eye this morning over the returns from those banks which were laid on our tables yesterday, and I felt fully all the danger from that state of things which has been so clearly and forcibly developed by the chairman of the committee on finance. There is no safety in those depositories of the public money. There is no safety or soundness in the currency of the country, so far as the notes of those deposit banks mingle with or form a part of it. Besides, I could not but be struck, and forcibly, with the perfect control which the executive has, if he see fit to exercise it, over all these banks, and, with them, also over the whole long list of directors, stockholders and debtors. Of the thirty-five banks in which the public money is deposited, there are but eight which would not be crushed at once, if the public deposits should be at once withdrawn from them. There are twenty-seven of them that could not pay the amount of those deposits on demand, even if no other creditor should call on them. They are fettered, bound by a golden chain, the ring of which is in the hands of the secretary of the treasury. They could not, and they dare not, move contrary to his bidding, if he see fit to direct them to any end or object.

Is this a state of things which any one who is a friend to his country, no matter to what party he may belong, would wish to continue? But unless some efficient remedy be applied, continue it must, and with constantly increasing aggravation. Let the present order of things remain unchanged during this year, and the surplus in the treasury will have arisen to fifty millions—a sum which will, probably, exceed all the specie in the United States. If the deposits shall then be so extended as to reach all the principal banks, the great depositories of specie, the executive will have the whole solid medium of the country in his power, and may control it at pleasure.

RAIL ROADS.

In senate—April 7.

Mr. Grundy, from the committee on the post office and post roads, made a report on the subject of rail road contracts for the transportation of the mail, which he read from the clerk's table. The report viewed the introduction of rail roads as one of the incidents of civilization. The general power to make roads was considered as belonging to the states, and it had been the subject of conflicting opinion whether the general government might, constitutionally, exercise jurisdiction over them when made. The rail road system promises to put this conflict to rest. The proposed plan is that congress shall make the contracts with the rail road companies for long periods. This would take the contract duty out of the hands of the post-master general. These contracts might be made perpetual, where the charters of the roads are perpetual, where the charters are limited, in order to secure the government for the advances of money made to them, a lien might be retained on the property of the company, until the amount, in case the contract should terminate, should be repaid. The money to be advanced only on such part of a road as may be completed, and brought into use. The company could apply this money to any part of the road they may think proper. If the duty of making the contracts was left in the hands of the post-master general, exorbitant demands might be made by the companies for carrying the mail, an evil which would increase with the extension of the roads until at length it might become necessary to try whether congress might not compel the companies to transport the public mails for a reasonable compensation. This evil was prevented by placing the power of making the contracts in congress alone. The magnitude and weight of the mails were productive of great and constant difficulty under the present system. The inconvenience would be obviated under this new arrangement. The transportation of troops which would be secured by the bill, would be a great advantage, as, in time of necessity, it would enable the government to send them to any given point in a short period of time. At present, the same roads which enabled our troops to move across the country, offered equal facility to an enemy; but on rail roads, our own troops can be conveyed, and on the approach of an enemy, the cars might be taken away, or the road broken up so as to render it impassable. At this moment contracts may be most favorably made, as the companies are in want of money to carry on their operations. The Baltimore and Ohio rail road company might be willing, by raising money from the government on the road now in use, to attain the means of carrying their road through to its completion. The condition of the treasury at this time was an auspicious circumstance, as the large surplus on hand could be beneficially distributed in this manner among the different states of the union, and will cut off from the department the heavy expenditure incurred annually in making contracts for transportation.

The committee close their report by recommending the passage of the bill.

Mr. Ewing of Ohio, moved the printing of 5,000 extra copies of the report with the bill, as proposed to be amended. This motion, after a short debate, in which Mr. Calhoun desired more time to look into the report before an extra number were distributed through the country, was agreed to.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT—MARYLAND.

Baltimore, April 8. The United States court for the fourth circuit commenced its regular session in this city this morning at 11 o'clock, the honorable R. B. Taney, chief justice of the United States, for the first time presiding. The grand jury being sworn, the chief justice stated that the usage had long prevailed to deliver a charge to the grand jury, and probably one would be expected from him. He had a few words to say, not so much in compliance with that usage, of which he disapproved, and would in future dispense with altogether, but more for the purpose of giving his reasons for departing from it, and his present charge would necessarily be brief. He thought the court should enter at once with promptness and industry upon the discharge of its duties, disincumbered of all unnecessary forms. The age had passed by, which called for particular instructions from the court; the public mind had become enlightened, and the intelligence of juries was adequate to the discharge of their duties. The district attorney was ready to counsel them in all matters of the law. It was unnecessary that the court should enter the wide field of jurisprudence when the attention of the jury would be called to but few infractions of the criminal laws of the land. He would advise the jury carefully to examine into the testimony which they would receive, it being necessarily on one side; and having no opportunity of examining the proof in defence they should find no bill upon a clear conviction of the guilt of the accused.

In conclusion, he stated that our liberties and the permanency of our free institutions could only be secured by maintaining the supremacy of the laws, securing to the innocent the enjoyment of their rights, and visiting the violator of the law with the punishment due to his guilt.

The jury were then told they could return to their rooms, and the court proceeded to the transaction of business.

OPERATIONS IN FLORIDA.

From the National Intelligencer.

We have been allowed to make the following extracts from a letter from an officer in general EUSTIS's brigade, to his friend in Washington, dated "Volusia, March 25, 1886.

"As we are at this time about to take up our line of march westwardly, you would probably like to hear something of the position of affairs here. Lately, all our movements have tended to the concentration of all our forces upon the banks of the Wythlacoochee. An order for this was issued some time since, but unforeseen circumstances have somewhat retarded the movements of this wing. On the 1st instant, major Kirby was sent with two companies to establish a depot of provisions on Halifax river, and to save some corn that the Indians had not burnt. This was reserved for the use of Bull's brigade of South Carolina militia. Brisband was at Tomoka, 12 miles from camp Williams; to him we were to forward provisions, and Butler, with the cavalry, was to visit camp Williams on his way to Volusia. General Eustis, in Augustine, awaited the arrival of Butler's horse in order to organize, and he prepared for Scott's orders of movement. Butler arrived, and was sent to Tomoka; Bull was directed to proceed to Volusia from Tomoka, by the most practicable route, and to furnish Kirby with transportation, that he might proceed upon the march with him. He was permitted, at his own discretion, to allow a portion of the horse to scour the country while he was preparing to take up the line of march. After issuing these orders, Eustis thought he would (while awaiting Scott's orders) visit camp Williams in the steamboat. The boat got aground, and Eustis was detained several days later than he expected, by which means Scott's orders reached Augustine two or three days before he received them. These orders were to be in the field west of the St. John's by this day. Eustis, with the disposable force left at Augustine, proceeded directly to Picolata, and thence to this place in the steamboat Santee. About the 20th of this month, general Bull, by express, informed major Kirby that he would leave Tomoka at sunrise next morning (the express reached camp Williams about sunset). Kirby, having no means of transportation, sent word back that, if he would send him means of transportation, he would abandon the post with the stores, and join him immediately. True to his word, Bull left Tomoka at sunrise, leaving a two-horse wagon for each of the companies under Kirby, and a company of South Carolina militia, with all his sick. Of this he informed us. We immediately abandoned all the stores at camp Williams, threw away half our baggage, and marched to Tomoka, leaving the remainder of our baggage in the boats. At Tomoka we found 70 men, out of whom about 24 were fit for duty. This force deserted the post, and marched to Volusia with us; the distance is about 35 miles, which took us three days. I do not exaggerate when I say that more than half the whole distance was swamp. Our wagons broke down repeatedly, and we were compelled to throw away all our baggage except the camp-kettles and a portion of our personal baggage; indeed, we would have been compelled to desert even this, had it not been that general Eustis, being informed by express of our circumstances, sent a wagon to meet us. When we arrived, we found that Butler, with half his horse, had gone in search of us five days previous. He came in to-day, and we take up our line of march to-morrow; we take ten days provisions, and march direct to Wythlacoochee. It is supposed that, after visiting the Indian towns upon the Wythlacoochee, we will march south and east to visit those lying in that direction.

"Two or three days ago about 40 Indians attacked a portion of our troops bivouacked on the opposite side of the river. They got within 25 or 30 yards of the sentinels before they were discovered, and fired upon the men while at their various fatigue duties. They were immediately broken back, leaving 5 or 6 dead on the ground, and having killed 3 of our men, and wounded several others. Yesterday several horsemen fell in with a small body of Indians, and killed two of their number; on our side one man was wounded. We leave at this post two companies of South Carolina militia, Butler with his horse, (750), Brisband with the infantry; and four companies of first artillery compose that portion of the left wing that go into the field. Companies A, E, G and H, 1st artillery, and captain Ellmore's company of Columbia riflemen, form one battalion under the command of major Kirby. Major Gates remains at this post, in command. We have no certain news from general Gaines. Sent was to have left Camp King for Wythlacoochee to-day; we will meet him there in a few days, when we expect a general engagement."

Savannah, April 1. The steamboat Florida arrived this morning from Florida. We understand from one of the passengers, that generals Scott and Clinch left Fort Drake on the 26th ult. for the Wythlacoochee, at the head of 2,000 troops and volunteers. The general opinion which prevailed was, that the proffered treaty by Powell was for the purpose of delusion, and to afford him an opportunity of concentrating his forces, and making other arrangements to carry on his warfare. There had been no recent engagements between the whites and Indians, that had come to the knowledge of our informant, although it is confidently looked upon that the chiefs have deep and concerted plans to continue in mischief. The proposition of Ocoola, and other chiefs, to meet on the 20th was not complied with on their part.

There are some additional scraps of news from Florida—but no important thing has happened. The general opinion seems to be, that the war is not over.

It will be seen, by the following letter, that the body of mounted men under lieutenant-col. Butler, for whose safety apprehensions were entertained, have returned to the army of gen. Eustis:

"Volusia, March 27th, 1836.

"The left wing of the army of Florida, brig. gen. Eustis crossed the St. John's yesterday, and marched this morning for the seat of war.

"Col. Butler's command, for whose safety so much anxiety was manifested, has returned safe. Their detention was caused by bad roads. Three guides have arrived to-day from St. Augustine to accompany the army.

"The mounted men sent in pursuit of col. Butler, engaged a body of Indians, and but for the cowardice of the lieutenant the whole force would have surrendered to them. The Indians were entirely run down by the horses, when he made his men retreat. Three of the Indians were begging for mercy.

"The whole number of troops here before the movement was fifteen hundred, including 750 horse."

The Savannah Georgian says:—"General Scott has authorized general Woodward and majors Watson and Flournoy, to receive into service, for the Seminole campaign, five hundred friendly Creek Indians. To this end, the United States' agents are required to co-operate with those officers."

Despatches from major general Scott's head quarters in Florida, dated Fort Drane, March 20, have been received at the adjutant general's office, of which the following is an extract:

"For the information of the secretary of war and general-in-chief, I addressed you a hasty note on the 14th. Nothing material has since occurred. This wing is waiting to give time to brigadier general Eustis and colonel Lindsay to gain their respective positions, Pelakleka and Chickuckaty, for the arrival of the wagons sent hence to Gary's Ferry for subsistence, the last of which may be expected by the 24th, with (it is hoped) some additional teams from Savannah, and for the troops from New Orleans to recruit their strength. All these objects, I have good reason to hope, will be accomplished by the 26th or 27th instant, although I have not had a line from col. Lindsay later than his letter dated at Mobile the 13th ult. In the mean time, it is confidently believed that the great body of the enemy remains in the swamp or cover of the Wythlacoochee, about the junction of its three branches, say twenty-five miles from this place. I send a topographical sketch of that vicinity, made by my aid, lieutenant Johnston, from information received here, and principally from col. Gadsden, the quartermaster general of Florida, whom I have taken into the service of the United States, and my staff, with that rank. His minute knowledge of the country and the hostile Indians, together with his general military intelligence, render him a valuable acquisition. I also expect to derive much valuable assistance from colonel Fitzpatrick, the president of the territorial legislative council, particularly if the war should be carried into the lower part of the peninsula, with which he is, perhaps, better acquainted than any other individual in the territory. He is with me, and is well disposed to render himself generally useful.

"You will receive with this copies of several orders. No 13 was supposed to be necessary, in order to be provided with the best kind of means to ferret out of the swamps, and other hiding places, small parties of the enemy, which may be expected to remain out after the great body of the nation shall be subdued. General Woodward and majors Watson and Flournoy, mentioned in that order, are strongly recommended to me as suitable persons to direct the detachment of 500 Creek warriors. I trust that this step on my part may meet the approbation of the war department. It seemed to me to be dictated by a wise discretion, and it will, probably, by abridging time, save many valuable lives from the effects of the summer climate of the lower country.

"The order limiting the ration of bread or flour is the direct result of the want of sufficient means of transportation, and we shall probably be obliged to move hence on the 24th or 25th instant, with less than eighteen days' subsistence for this wing, which will consist of about 1,700 fighting men. No murmur has been uttered in consequence of that reduction in the rations. All are disposed to make any sacrifice which the good of the service shall demand."

Tallahassee, April 2.

To the politeness of adjutant general Brown, we are indebted for the perusal of a letter from gen. Scott and one from col. Gadsden, dated Fort Drane, 23d March, brought by express.—Gen. Scott, complains of embarrassment for want of subsistence, created by the unexpected movement of gen. Gaines from Tampa, and the consequent consumption of the supplies provided for the other divisions of the army. He apprehends also that col. Lindsay may follow the same route, though a letter had been despatched to him by a friendly Indian, directing him to take the position of Chickuckaty, by the 25th inst, and advising him that gen. Eustis would be on the Pelakleka, and that gen. Clinch would force a passage of the Wythlacoochee, between the 24th and 25th.

This combined movement has probably been effected, as we are happy to learn through a volunteer recently arrived from Tampa, that the letter above referred to, was received by col. Lindsay on the 25th who immediately took his position about 40 miles from Tampa. The enemy is now enclosed by nearly five thousand men and will be forced to give battle or surrender. Commodore Dallas, at Pensacola has been instructed to co-operate, and the revenue cutters required to repair to the western coast of the peninsula. Should it be necessary, measures will be taken to send provisions to the mouth of the Wythlacoochee, whence boats can ascend to Camp Graham.

The war with the Seminole Indians will be exceedingly expensive. Millions will not pay the cost of it. Great waste has been made by want of means of transportation and for the support and supply of the mounted force, present.

MORE INDIAN TROUBLES—PERHAPS.

Near Fort Gibson, Arkansas territory, March 14, 1836.

I promised to write you should any thing turn up in this quarter, and I know at home an interest is felt for the far west, and for those who defend her frontiers.

Things in this quarter look as if we were to have trouble ere long with the Indians on the Grand Prairie.

An express arrived at head quarters a few days since, announcing to gen. Arbuckle that the Camanches and Pawnees had murdered all the traders at Coffee's trading house, on Red River, in the Pawnee country. One man only escaped; he has arrived here, and described the massacre as dreadful, 50 or 60 Americans and some Creeks and Osages were butchered.

It was near Coffee's trading house that the treaty last year was made with the Camanches and Pawnees, but owing to col. Dodge not being there agreeably to promise, the treaty was torn up and Tabaguna, a fierce and savage Camanche warrior, warned gen. Coffee and his men to leave their country, his not complying has been fatal to them all. Our men who saw the Camanches last summer describe them as a fierce, warlike race of men, well mounted and armed with a lance and shield. They are a wandering tribe, and we may look for them all next summer without even crossing their trail. There is no doubt that the United States will resent these murders, and we will march from here as soon as the grass will admit of our horses living on it. The whole regiment of dragoons will concentrate and be joined by the 7th infantry, now at Fort Gibson. Chile McIntosh, the Creek warrior, swears vengeance against the Pawnees and Camanches, and he will no doubt add 6 or 700 warriors to our command. We are making every preparation, and we shall get off, I suppose, by the 1st May, or sooner.

General Arbuckle has put Fort Gibson in good repair, and mounted field pieces in the block houses, so that should our neighbors ever make an attack, they will find things in better preparation than at poor major Dade's command.

FROM TEXAS.

From the New Orleans Bee.

FALL OF SAN ANTONIO AND MASSACRE OF THE TEXIAN TROOPS.

The following important documents were placed in our hands by a gentleman just arrived from Texas. The news is melancholy, indeed; and here is opened another field of action for the noble hearts now returning triumphant, and covered with laurels won on the banks of the Wythlacoochee, against foes less savage, perhaps, than Santa Anna's merciless Mexican bands.

Our informant met the express bearing the news we give, and from him procured copies to be published for the information of the people on this side of the Sabine, whose relations and friends, kin and countrymen, are now the victims of Mexican barbarity. Col. Bowie, it is said, shot himself; and col. Travis stabbed himself to escape the cruelties of the enemy. Nobly they fought; dearly they sold their lives, but none escaped of the whole garrison of San Antonio.

Head quarters, Gonzales, March 11, 1836.

J. W. Fanning, jr. commanding at Goliad:

Sir: Upon my arrival here, the following intelligence was received through the Mexican supposed to be friendly, which however was contradicted in some parts by another who arrived with him: it is therefore only given to you as rumor, though I fear a melancholy portion of it will be found true. Ansilma Burgara states that he left the Alamo on Sunday, the 6th inst, and now is three days from Aroaches Rancha; that the Alamo was attacked on Sunday morning, at dawn of day, by about 2,300 Mexicans, and was carried a short time before sunrise, with a loss of 520 Mexicans killed and as many wounded. Col. Travis had only 150 effective men out of his whole force of 187. After the fort was carried, seven men surrendered and called for gen. Santa Anna for quarter—they were murdered by his order. Colonel Bowie, was sick in bed, and also murdered.

The enemy expect reinforcement of 1,500 men under general Conditla, and 1,500 reserve to follow them. He also informs that Ugartehear had arrived with two million dollars for the payment of the troops. The bodies of the Americans were burned after the massacre—an alternate layer of bodies and wood, underlaid and set on fire. Lieut. Dickinson, who had a wife and child in the fort, after having fought with desperate courage, tied his child to his back, and leaped from the top of a two story building—both were killed in the fall. I have little doubt but that the Alamo has fallen. Whether the above particulars are all true may be questionable; you are therefore referred to the enclosed orders.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

(Signed)

SAMUEL HUSTON.

P. S. The wife of lieut. Dickinson is now in possession of one of the officers of St. Anna. The men as you will perceive, fought gallantly, and in corroboration of the truth of the fall of the Alamo, I have ascertained that col. Travis intended firing signal guns at three different periods each day until succour should arrive. No signal guns have been fired since Sunday, and a scouting party have just returned who approached within twelve miles of the fort, and remained for 48 hours. S. H.

TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES.

The intrigue conveyed to us by the above letter, confirm all that we have heretofore alleged of the arch fiend, who, after subverting the liberties of his own countrymen, has arrayed all his forces to reduce us, the free born colonists of Texas, to the yoke of military and ecclesiastical despotism.

We have exercised the right inherited in all considerable societies of men, of choosing the form of government, most consonant with our feelings and most likely to secure our happiness.

It is the same right which impelled your fathers and our fathers, to throw the gauntlet of defiance at the power of Britain, and to claim and gloriously to achieve a name among the nations of the earth. Their enemy was comparatively Christian and magnanimous. Ours is semi-civilized, infuriate and merciless. They appealed to the sympathies of monarchs and of strangers, and they appealed not in vain. Aid, prompt, powerful and decisive, was rendered them.

The descendants of Pericles lifted up their voice to supplicate the aid of strangers in their struggle for liberty, and you Americans responded to their call by a zealous, active and efficient succor. The gallant Poles arduously participated in your generous sympathy for the oppressed. Friends and brothers! we the citizens of Texas, threatened with an indiscriminate slaughter by the Mexicans, of a complicated and cruel disposition, now in this hour of trial turn our thoughts and our hearts with an unwavering confidence to the land of our common nativity, and we ask you for assistance. Our numbers are few but our hearts are firm, and our nerves are strung to the high resolve of liberty or death. Will you, brothers and friends, refuse to do us as in the hour of your calamity was nobly done for you? and will you not jointly witness the destruction of your kindred and triumph of tyranny, and make no effort to save the one or arrest the other? It cannot, it will not be. The sainted spirit of Washington would rebuke your apathy, and could pain invade the beatitudes of heaven, would warm over the recollections of '76.

On motion of Mr. Parmer this appeal was annexed and ordered to be communicated to the people of the United States of America, accompanying the communication of major general Saml. Houston to James Collingsworth, esq. chairman of the military committee on the 16th day of March, 1836, at Washington.

Signed, RICHARD ELLIS, president of the convention.
W. S. KIMBAL, secretary.

From the New Orleans True American.

We learn by a passenger of the schooner Camanche, eight days from Texas, that the war has assumed a serious character. On the 25th February the Texian garrison in Bexar, of 150 men, commanded by lieut. col. B. Travis, was attacked by the advance division of gen. Santa Anna, consisting of 2,000 men, who were repulsed with the loss of many killed, between 500 to 800 men, without the loss of one man of the Texans. About the same time, colonel Johnson, with a party of 70 men, while reconnoitering the westward of San Patricio, was surrounded in the night by a large body of Mexican troops. In the morning the demand of a surrender was made by the Mexican commander unconditionally, which was refused, but an offer of surrender was made as prisoners of war, which was acceded to by the Mexicans; but no sooner had the Texans marched out of their quarters and stacked their arms, than a general fire was opened upon them by the whole Mexican force. The Texans attempted to escape, but only three of them succeeded, one of whom was col. Johnson.

Between the 25th February and 2d March, the Mexicans were employed in forming entrenchments around the Alamo, and bombarding the place; on the 2d March col. Travis wrote that 200 shells had been thrown into the Alamo without injuring a man. On the 1st March the garrison of Alamo received a reinforcement of 32 Texans from Gonzales, having forced their way through the enemy's lines, making the number in the Alamo consist of 180 men.

On the 6th March about midnight, the Alamo was assaulted by the whole Mexican army, commanded by Santa Anna in person. The battle was desperate until daylight, when only seven men belonging to the Texian garrison were found alive, who cried for quarters, but were told that there was none for them. They then continued fighting until the whole were butchered. One woman (Mrs. Dickinson) and a negro of col. Travis, were the only persons whose lives were spared. We regret to say that colonel David Crockett, his companion, Mr. Jesse Benton, and col. Bonham, of South Carolina, were among the number slain. Col. Bowie was murdered in his bed, sick and helpless. Gen. Cos, on entering the fort, ordered the servant of col. Travis to point out the body of his master, he did so, when Cos drew his sword, and mangled the face and limbs with the malignant feelings of a Cunauche savage. The bodies of the slain were thrown into a heap in the centre of the Alamo and burnt. The loss of the Mexicans in storming the place was not less than one thousand killed and mortally wounded, and as many wounded; making, with their loss, in the first assault, between two and three thousand men. The flag used by the Mexicans was a blood-red one, in the place of the constitutional flag. Immediately after the capture, general Santa Anna sent Mrs. Dickinson and servant to gen. Houston's camp, accompanied by a Mexican with a flag, who was the bearer of a note from gen. Santa Anna, offering the Texans peace and a general amnesty, if they would lay down their arms and submit to his government. Gen. Houston's reply was: "True, sir, you have succeeded in killing some of our brave men, but the Texans are not yet conquered."

The effect of the fall of Bexar throughout Texas was electrical; every man who could use a rifle, and was in a condition to take the field, marched forthwith to the seat of war. It is believed that not less than 4,000 riflemen were on their way to the army when the Comanche raiders, determined to wreak their vengeance on the Mexicans.

General Houston had burnt Gonzales and fallen back on the Colorado, with about 1,000 men; col. Fanning was in the fort at Goliad, a very strong position, well supplied with munitions and provisions, with from 400 to 500 men.

The general determination of the people of Texas is to abandon all their occupations and pursuits of peace, and to continue in arms until every Mexican east of the Rio del Norte shall be exterminated.

We publish above the account of the fall of San Antonio into the hands of the Mexican army, and of the massacre of the Texian troops. The following letter, written by the commander of the Texian garrison, a few days before its overthrow, breathes a spirit worthy of a better fate than that which subsequently befel him and his gallant band:

Letter from col. Travis to the president of the convention.

Commandancy of the Alamo, Bejar, March 3, 1836.

SIR: In the present confusion of the political authorities of the country, and in the absence of the commander-in-chief, I beg leave to communicate to you the situation of this garrison. You have doubtless already seen my official report of the action of the 25th ult. made on that day to gen. Samuel Houston, together with the various communications heretofore sent by express. I shall therefore confine myself to what has transpired since that date.

From the 25th of the present date, the enemy have kept up a bombardment from two howitzers, (one a five and a half inch, and the other an eight inch), and a heavy cannonade from two long nine pounders, mounted on a battery on the opposite side of the river, at the distance of 400 yards from our walls. During this period the enemy have been busily employed in encircling us with entrenched encampments on all sides, at the following distances, to wit:—In Bajar, 400 yards west; in Lavillera, three hundred yards south; at the powder house, one thousand yards east by south; on the ditch, eight hundred yards north east; and at the old mill eight hundred yards north. Notwithstanding all this, a company of thirty-two men from Gonzales made their way into us on the morning of the 1st inst. at three o'clock, and col. J. B. Bonham, a courier from Gonzales, got in this morning at 11 o'clock, without molestation. I have so fortified this place, that the walls are generally proof against cannon balls; and I still continue to trench on the inside, and strengthen the walls by throwing up the dirt. At least two hundred shells have fallen inside of our works without having injured a single man; indeed we have been so fortunate as not to lose a man from any cause, and we have killed many of the enemy. The spirits of my men are still high, although they have had much to depress them. We have contended for ten days against an enemy whose numbers are variously estimated at from 1,500 to 6,000 men, with gen. Ramirez Seizma and col. Batres, the aid-de-camp of Santa Anna, at their head. A report was circulated that Santa Anna himself was with the enemy, but I think it was false. A reinforcement of about 1,000 men is now entering Bejar from the west, and I think it more than probable that Santa Anna is now in town, from the rejoicing we hear. Colonel Fanning is said to be on the march to this place with reinforcements, but I fear it is not true, as I have repeatedly sent to him for aid without receiving any. Col. Bonham, my special messenger, arrived at La Bahia fourteen days ago, with a request for aid; and on the arrival of the enemy in Bejar ten days ago, I sent an express to Colonel F. which arrived at Goliad on the next day, urging him to send us reinforcements—none have yet arrived.

I look to the colonies alone for aid; unless it arrives soon, I have to fight the enemy on his own terms. I will however do the best I can under the circumstances; and I feel confident that the determined valor, and desperate courage, heretofore evinced by my men, will not fail them in the last struggle; and although they may be sacrificed to the vengeance of a gothic enemy, the victory will cost the enemy so dear, that it will be worse for him than a defeat. I hope your honorable body will hasten on reinforcements, ammunition and provisions to our aid, as soon as possible. We have provisions for twenty days for the men we have: our supply of ammunition is limited. At least five hundred pounds of cannon powder, and two hundred rounds of six, nine, twelve and eighteen pound balls—10 kegs of rifle powder, and a supply of lead, should be sent to this place without delay, under a sufficient guard.

If these things are promptly sent and large reinforcements are hastened to this frontier, this neighborhood will be the great and decisive battle ground. The power of Santa Anna is to be met here, or in the colonies; we had better meet them here, than to suffer a war of desolation to rage in our settlements. A blood red banner waves from the church of Bejar, and in the camp above us, in token that the war is one of vengeance against rebels; they have declared us as such, and demanded that we should surrender at discretion, or that this garrison should be put to the sword.

Their threats have had no influence on me, or my men, but to make all fight with desperation, and that high-souled courage which characterises the patriot, who is willing to die in defence of his country's liberty and his own honor.

The citizens of this municipality are all our enemies, except those who have joined us heretofore; we have but three Mexicans now in the fort; those who have not joined us in this extremity, should be declared public enemies, and their property should aid in paying the expenses of the war.

The bearer of this will give your honorable body a statement more in detail, should he escape through the enemy's lines.

GOD AND TEXAS—VICTORY OR DEATH!!

Your obedient servant,

W. BARRETT TRAVIS, lieut. col. com.

P. S. The enemy's troops are still arriving, and the reinforcement will probably amount to two or three thousand.

The annexed letter from the assistant inspector general for the army of Texas, confirms the intelligence of the distressed condition of that country:

Head quarters, Velasco, 6th March, 1836.

To the editor of the Mobile Register.

SIR: I deem it my duty to my fellow citizens to inform our brethren in the United States of our perilous condition at present. Last night an express arrived with the news, that one division of the Mexican army, 4,000 strong, meeting the small force under Lieut. Thornton, had driven them in, and are now in full march for the interior of Texas. Col. Travis is besieged in St. Antonio, with little provisions and a garrison of only 150 men, and we hourly expect an attack on this point of the coast, from the Mexicans by sea, under Ugartheba, 3,500 strong. We have in the field now about 700 men to oppose this force. There is here under my command, only 120 men, when we expected at least 2,000—and it is thought the Mexican army is within a few days' march of us.

The families at a short distance from us are flying before the enemy, and have left their stock, their houses and crops to the mercy of the tyrant, who is in person at the head of his army.

We call on you by the sacred ties of country, language, habits and kindred, not to desert us in this our hour of danger. Delay for a time and we may be lost—we want immediate aid, and men and arms. Do not be deaf to our requests, but come forward as you have heretofore done, and say "forward to the rescue." I have the honor to be your obedient servant,

GEO. W. POE, assist. inspec. gen. of the army of Texas.

From the New Orleans Bulletin, April 1.

The report received from Natchitoches, by passengers on board the Caspian, is, that another engagement between the Texans and Mexicans had taken place on the San Antonio river, which resulted in the Mexicans' defeat after a loss of 600 killed and wounded. The Texans were under the command of Gen. Houston.

STATISTICAL VIEW OF MEXICO.

From the Commercial Bulletin.

The United States of Mexico formed their constitution in 1824, on the plan of our federal union. The deviations were few and inconsiderable. 19 states and 4 territories formed the confederation. A president was to be elected every four years, and could not be re-elected. A senate of two members from each state, and a deputy for each 80,000 population formed the congress.

According to that constitution, every man at 18 years of age became a voter; no other qualification was required. Indians and Mestizoes, negroes and mulattoes, were equally free citizens and voters.

The population of Mexico is at present about 8,000,000. In 1794 it was 5,000,000; in 1806 it was 5,500,000, in 1825 it was 6,850,000. This population is divided as follows: 1. Indians, 4,000,000—2. Mestizoes, that is, descendants of Indians and Spanish, 2,000,000—3. Creoles, Spanish descent, born in Mexico, 1,200,000—4. Zambos, Indian and negro descent, and mulattoes, 600,000—5. Negroes, 100,000—7. Estrangeros, or strangers, American, English, French, Italian, &c, 15,000.

By this relative population, we perceive that Indians and Mestizoes form the great bulk of the nation, and with equal privileges, are sure to rule at some future time. They are, however, at present regarded with extreme contempt, and are by the whites opprobriously denominated irrational. The number of Indians remains nearly the same as when first discovered by the Spaniards three centuries ago; and their manners and religion have been little affected by their white intruders.

The land in Mexico is generally much superior to that of the United States. Almost all the productions of other climes grow there in rich luxuriance.

The produce of maize is wonderful. An acre has been known to yield 200 bushels, and some stems are twenty feet high with five or six large ears.

Wheat grows well only on the table land, but there it commonly yields 25 for 1. In the irrigated lands of Mexico it has yielded 50 to 1, while in Europe only 10 or 12 to 1 is considered the average production, and the best lands in Kentucky yield only 22 for 1.

To produce 1,000,000 pounds of sugar, only 150 laborers are required, while 300 are requisite in Cuba and Louisiana.

The production of coffee is still easier in Mexico; 20 men can attend 200,000 trees, which on an average produce 500,000 pounds.

Cotton also, of a quality far superior to ours, can be purchased in many parts of Mexico, in greater quantities by one-third, than can be obtained from the best lands in Louisiana.

The silver mines in Mexico are perhaps inexhaustible; 3,000,000,000 of silver have been drawn from them during 300 years past, averaging $10,000,000 per annum.

OPENING OF THE WINCHESTER AND POTOMAC RAIL ROAD.

From the Baltimore Gazette, of April 2.

A number of gentlemen who had been invited by the Winchester and Potomac company to assist at this celebration, left Baltimore with the morning train of cars and were joined at Harper's Ferry by a deputation from that place. The party, now consisting of about fifty, proceeded on to Winchester in two beautiful and very commodious cars, drawn by the locomotive "Tennessee," and were followed by the engine Thomas Jefferson—the latter belonging to the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company, and now temporarily loaned to the Winchester company for the purpose of aiding them in the transportation of the trade on their road, which, it appears, had so greatly exceeded the expectations of the directors, as to be far beyond the actual means of the company to dispose of it.

The latter engine took in its train 15 burthen cars richly freighted with the merchandise of our city, destined to south western Virginia and the state of Tennessee—and the whole proceeded in fine style, accompanied by a full band of music from Harper's Ferry, and reached Winchester at about half past 4 o'clock in the afternoon, where their arrival was announced by a discharge of artillery and warmly greeted by the enthusiastic acclamations of an immense multitude of spectators from the city of Winchester and the surrounding country.

Upon alighting from the cars the deputations were met by the president and directors of the Winchester rail road company, and were addressed in an eloquent speech by Mr. Bruce, their president, who, after drawing a vivid picture of the immense benefits this nation is about to derive from the numerous schemes of internal improvements now in progress, or in contemplation, concluded by the following remarks, addressed immediately to the delegates from Baltimore:

"To you, gentlemen, and your associates, the fathers of the rail road system in America, belongs the enviable merit of warding off that evil day. The patriot, surveying the vast extent of national domain, though it encourages the rapid growth of civil communities, by giving ample room to individual exertion, and clothing man with increased importance, because he is vain—might well be alarmed for the duration of the confederacy, did not the facilities of intercommunication keep pace with its enlargement. The rail road system is eminently calculated to quiet his fears. The philanthropist would have reason to dread the downward tendency of all new settlements, thrown upon themselves, and restricted in the enjoyment of social and commercial intercourse—rail roads are destined to circulate to their utmost borders the refinements of trade, and the political and moral intelligence so essential to the duration of our liberties. The statesman beholds, in our extended and exposed seacoast, many openings for the assaults of a foreign foe—your system of furnishing a conveyance, rapid as the signal of invasion, will concentrate the fresh and hardy inland soldier, upon the vulnerable points—and your citizens, should the horrors of war again threaten their fire-sides, must expect to share with our Highland blues, in the glory of their defence. Though wide as the empire of the czar, the extension of this system will give to our confederacy the effectual compactness and elastic power of the little islands of Britain. If interest and social sympathy cement not our government, in vain were the declaration 'the union must be preserved.' It will be preserved, echoes from the rail road conventions held amid the defiles of the Alleghany and the recesses of the western forests—this feeling vibrates through a lengthening chain of commercial parts, and rouses with a thrill of kindred enterprise the men of Charleston, Cincinnati and Chicago. Borne far inland, on the broad waters of the Chesapeake—the rail road metropolis may survey the numerous undertakings similar to her great works which chequer our land—with pride exclaim 'these are my children,' and may bid defiance to all attempts to wrest from her the advantages of her commanding situation. On the south her arm extends along the verge of tide-water, and welcomes those improvements which promise to link the Atlantic capitals. On the north, her enterprise taps the commercial streams of the Susquehanna, and furnishes to her rival an outlet for her trade, where nature refuses to open her own artificial channels. From no point of their commercial horizon, can your citizens expect more certain or more abundant supplies than from the fertile valley of the Shenandoah. Our tributary road will eventually bring the wares of your merchants and the products of our farms into daily and advantageous exchange. But a few years ago the sun performed two revolutions, ere the weary traveller from your city could reach Winchester—now it is accomplished in little more than half his daily course, and soon your citizens may have it in their power to witness from the summit of their monuments the glory of his rising in the ocean, and find in the shades of our mountains a healthy retreat from his noontide ray. We watch with anxiety the prosperous march of your city—though Virginians politically and socially, we feel interested in the growth of a southern emporium. The Maryland line, shoulder to shoulder, with the chivalry of the Old Dominion, breasted the hardships and shared in the glories of the revolution, and the true interests of their soil will never allow them to be at variance in the generous strife of internal improvement.

"Let the pulse of enterprise, which beats from the heart of the union, from those sacred halls, where the father of his country and the first advocate of its commercial union resigned the sword of power for the laurels of peace, but animate our statesmen at Richmond and that city and Norfolk and Petersburg and Lynchburg, in the reviving gains of a flourishing commerce will soon be enabled to spare.

"The overflowing trade which may pass through this valley in exchange for the merchandise of a neighboring state—your city, gentlemen—your state—your country call upon you for continued exertion. Onward, gentlemen, onward."

To which the president of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company returned the following reply:

"Permit me, in the name of the company which I have the honor to represent, to thank you for the very flattering manner in which you have been pleased to speak of its exertions. Remote as the Baltimore and Ohio rail road company is from the points of its ultimate destination, it may be considered, nevertheless, to have accomplished much in advancing its steps so far as to form the connexion we this day meet to celebrate: and whatever may hereafter be its progress, I am very certain, that at no point in its onward course, can those entrusted with its execution, find a warmer or more gratifying welcome, than we have on the present occasion experienced."

"In the connexion that is now established between the valley of the Shenandoah, or as it has been emphatically called 'the great valley' and the city of Baltimore, there can be little doubt, that the interests of Virginia and Maryland will be materially promoted. You have alluded to a by-gone day, when common dangers, in a common cause, united these states in the closest bond of sympathy and affection. The feelings which that memorable epoch elicited have been cherished and kept in full vigor during the happy and peaceful times that have followed—and the column, which has won for the chief city of Maryland the epithet of 'monumental city,' is a tribute to a son of Virginia, universally hailed as the father of his country, and whose fame now fills the world.

"Your eloquent exhortation to continue our efforts, until the work we have commenced shall be accomplished, will not be disregarded. The country is now aware of the importance of the undertaking, and should the necessary means be obtained, of which there seems but little doubt, we may, in three brief years from this day, call upon our hospitable hosts to join us in a trip to celebrate the connexion of the Baltimore and Ohio rail road with the tributaries of the Mississippi, and in return may we not with equal certainty, hope that the time is not far distant when we shall be called upon to join in proclaiming on the summit of the southern Alleghanies the completion of the great rail road which, passing through the valley of Virginia, is destined to cement in one common interest, the vast country between Portland and New Orleans. Then will our most sanguine anticipations be realised, and then may the patriot, in the full exultation of his feelings, exclaim 'THE UNION HAS BEEN PRESERVED!'"

After this ceremony the company proceeded to "the Virginia house," kept by Mr. Aulick, where they partook of a most sumptuous dinner that had been prepared for the occasion. The company at dinner consisted of more than 100 gentlemen. The utmost good feeling prevailed. Mutual congratulations were exchanged on all sides at the happy and successful completion of the road, and a sincere gratification was felt, that the citizens of Baltimore and Winchester were hereafter destined to become so nearly connected by the bonds of a close and intimate social and commercial intercourse.

The party, after spending a most agreeable day, separated at an early hour—and the deputation from Baltimore returned the next morning highly delighted with their excursion, and deeply impressed with the warm and generous hospitality of their Winchester hosts.

SPECIE PAYMENTS—AT BANKS. Reported for the Journal of Commerce.

SUPERIOR COURT—APRIL 5TH.

Chief Justice Jones presiding.

John Thompson vs. the Union Bank.

This was an action for the amount of a note of 500 dollars of the Union Bank protested for non-payment. From the evidence it appeared that on the 14th of October last, the plaintiff, about half past ten o'clock, sent a boy to the Union Bank with one of their notes for 500 dollars, to get specie for it. The boy presented the note to the teller at the bank counter, who told him that the porter was then out, and that the boy could not be paid until he came in. The boy waited for about half an hour, at the expiration of which the porter returned and the boy asked him for the specie. The porter replied that he had to go out again, and would be in soon, and then left the bank. The boy returned to Mr. Thompson, who went over to the bank himself, and made some angry observations on the note not having been paid, but it was not proved that he then demanded payment for it. Mr. Thompson then left the bank and put the note into the hands of Mr. Crooke, a notary, who went to the bank about 12 o'clock and demanded specie for the note. The teller took the note and placed it under a sancer, and told Mr. Crooke that the porter was then weighing specie and that the note would be paid before two o'clock. Mr. Crooke then asked the teller if he declined paying the note, to which the teller replied "I do not decline it, but decline having any further conversation with you." Mr. Crooke then took away the note and protested it for non-payment. It appeared that at the time the plaintiff sent for the specie a customer was then waiting for it at the plaintiff's. This was the case for the plaintiff.

For the defence. It appeared that provision was made by the bank every morning for specie payments during the day, to the amount of from 500 dollars to 1,500 dollars, and that the usual amount of specie had been brought up that morning, but that part of it was exhausted before the plaintiff sent for payment of his note. It was not, however, very clearly shown what amount of specie had been brought up the morning in question, or what part of it had been paid away before the plaintiff sent the 500 dollar note for payment; but it appeared that on the same morning the plaintiff's boy had been paid a note for 100 dollars, prior to his going with the note of 500 dollars. It also appeared that the plaintiff was in the habit of sending to the bank for specie, and that special care was taken by the bank to have it always ready to meet his demands. It appeared that when the notary called for payment, the porter was then engaged in weighing specie, but it did not appear that any person but the notary was then waiting for it. Relative to the porter's absence when the boy called, it appeared that it was the usual practice of the bank to send the porter on business about ten o'clock, and that he invariably returned before 12 o'clock. According to the evidence of the bank teller, it was between one and two when the notary called; but the notary positively deposed that when he protested the note, it was then only a quarter past 12 o'clock. Evidence was adduced to show that the plaintiff was hostile to the bank, and had endeavored to harass and annoy it, and it appeared that there had been an unfriendly feeling between the parties before the transaction occurred, which caused the present suit. This was the case for both sides.

The court charged the jury, that this was an action against the Union Bank for non-payment of one of their notes. These notes as was known to the jury, were in the common form, by which the bank promised to pay the sum mentioned in it on demand, and the first question was what is the obligation which such a note imposes on the bank? And the second question was, had the bank refused to pay the note in such a way as to render them responsible? That Mr. Thompson being the bearer of the note was entitled to be paid, there could be no doubt; as such were the precise words of the contract. The question was then, whether the words in the note bore any precise import differing from the common acceptance in which the words were understood; or whether the words "on demand" mean a different period of time, when used in relation to one individual holding the notes of another. In the latter case they all knew that the person was bound to pay the note immediately, and if he did not do so, he was liable to an action. In all such cases the note, if sued for, must be paid, though it had never been presented for payment. When the note becomes due, the maker of it must look out for it himself. Though the endorser of a note must receive notice, the maker of it need not. But with regard to our banking institutions, the matter stood on somewhat different grounds. A bank, being a corporation or body politic, acted through its agents by certain practical modes. One of these modes was, that it had a banking house where there was a counter at which their notes were paid; and therefore their case differs from that of individuals, and an action can't be maintained against them, without demanding payment at the place where every one who takes their notes goes for that purpose, under the engagement that they are to call for payment at the bank counter. And the rule of law applicable to the bank, is, that the holder of the note is bound to present it for payment at the ordinary place where such notes are paid; and instead of the maker of the note being obliged to search out for the holder, the holder must call on the maker. But if he does call and demands payment, the bank is then bound to pay it. In relation to the mode of paying, every one is to be paid in their turn, and the construction of the law relative to these turns is, that the person who first presented the note for payment, is to be first paid. If there are fifty before you, you must wait for your turn; and when that comes you are entitled to say, here are your bills, for which I want specie; and it is then the duty of the bank to pay you before any other customer: the bank however should have a reasonable time to pay, for though they are bound to pay on demand, impossibilities or unreasonable acts are not required of them. If a person demanded payment of a very large sum, amounting suppose to 100,000 dollars, it would be unreasonable and unjust both to the bank and all other customers in it, that the bank should stop its business in order to weigh out so large an amount of specie. In such a case the bank is entitled to a reasonable time, to bring up the money and weigh it, and whilst that was being done, the bank would have a right to go on and pay other customers, and the person who called for the large amount of specie should stand aside and wait. The bank is however entitled to such indulgences only in proportion to the infrequency of the demands on them for specie, and the credit of their bank paper, which might induce them to have a less quantity of specie ready than would meet an extraordinary demand. But the bank is bound to have accommodations and facilities for making payments in proportion to the amount of its dealings, and if it banked on a capital of 100 millions, it should have accommodations and conveniences on as complete a scale, according to the amount of its trade, as if it only banked in a capital of 100,000. Putting aside however the interior arrangements of the bank. In proportion to their means the smaller banks are bound to pay as promptly as the larger ones; and the only indulgence they are entitled to, is what the circumstances of the case render absolutely necessary. The great question was then, had the bank refused to pay according to the general import of the term? and the only thing to be taken into view was the circumstances under which the demand was made, and whether they were such that the bank should have had some short time to pay it, or in other words did they pay it in such a reasonable time as they ought? For example, if they had a large sum in specie brought up from their vaults that morning, and had paid it all away except what was necessary for small checks, then it would be unreasonable to insist on being paid a large amount without waiting until it could be brought up. But except in such a case as this, the bank has a right to pay immediately, and has no right to put off a party until two or three o'clock, if they could pay in a short time. Then did the bank, when payment of the bill was demanded, refuse or neglect to pay it? or was there a justifiable excuse for their not doing it; or did they act in so unreasonable a manner as to expose themselves to an action? I think it has been satisfactorily shown that two demands were made, and it is said that a third one was also made by Mr. Thompson; but the teller of the bank has said that Mr. Thompson made no demand, though he called at the bank in a passion. The first demand was made by the clerk in the morning, and he was then told that the porter was out and would be in shortly. When the porter came in, the boy applied to him, and the porter said he was obliged to go out again and would be in shortly. The clerk then waited from a quarter to half an hour, and then returned to Mr. Thompson and told him that he could not get the money at the bank. The question was then, whether the porter's not being there, was a sufficient excuse for not paying the money. That would depend on circumstances. If the porter had that morning brought up a sufficient quantity of specie to make the ordinary payments, and it was exhausted when the boy called, and if the porter was not to be long out, it might be a justification for detaining the boy a short time. But strictly speaking, the bank had no right to make such an excuse, as they were bound to have the porter always there to get up specie whenever it was called for. The bank would scarcely be justified in keeping a person waiting an hour, as that hour might be of the utmost importance to him, and the circumstances that could justify the bank in doing so, must be of a very peculiar character. But if it was justified in keeping a person one hour, it certainly would not be justified in keeping a person so long as two hours. In the present case, the porter said that he brought up that morning, from five to $1,500 in specie; but the teller of the bank has shown that there could not have been more than $500 brought up, as there had been but two notes amounting to 200 dollars, paid that morning, and it has not been shown that there was any peculiar disposal made of the remainder of what was brought up; so that in all probability the porter did not bring up more than 5 or 600 dollars that morning. And the jury would consider whether, having such a sum brought up, was acting providently, or was a sufficient excuse not to pay a note of 500 dollars or 1,000 dollars, if the porter was out, in the business part of the day. In considering the question, whether the porter being out for half an hour would justify the bank in not paying their note, something was of course due to the practical experience of merchants, and it might be a question whether the payment of such a note might be postponed for one or two hours; and if doing so was a universal rule or nearly so, it might be a justifiable excuse for the bank to say the porter was out. And the party must wait half an hour. But still the responsibility rests on them, as to whether he should have been out. Five, ten or fifteen minutes, might not perhaps be an unreasonable time to ask a person to wait, unless he said he could not stay so long. The jury had therefore some latitude in considering whether the porter was absent unreasonably long, according to the usual course of business, or whether it was reasonable and proper that the party should be kept over an hour, instead of only fifteen minutes. But under the rule of law, the bank has no right to tell a man to wait for a small sum, and in the present case the bank had no right to defer payment so long as the witness has stated, unless there was some very particular reason for doing so. The second demand was made by the notary a few minutes after twelve o'clock, and he was told that the porter was then weighing gold, and that the note would be paid when he had done. The notary then asked when that would be, and was told between that time and two o'clock. On this occasion the porter was there, and the gold had been brought up and was at the scales; and the testimony is, that $500 could be weighed in five or six minutes. The question then is, was not the bank bound to pay the note in five or six minutes after it was called for. The answer to this has been, that the porter was weighing gold for another person; but there is no evidence to show that any other person was there waiting for it, and it is probable that the porter was weighing the gold for the general business of the bank. Was then the teller justified in putting off the payment, or was the notary obliged to wait from that time until between one and two o'clock? On this question the rule of law is, that the bank, having the porter there, was bound to pay the money in as reasonable a time as possible, having reference to other dealers if any were there at the time. According as the jury considered whether the bank had or had not kept their promise to pay on demand, they would find for the plaintiff in defendant.

Verdict for the plaintiff 500 dollars, (the amount of the note), with interest and costs.

For the plaintiff, Philip S. Crooke and Daniel B. Talmadge; for defendant, Henry E. Davis and Samuel A. Foot.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

The special joint committee, appointed to investigate the doings of any or all the banks in the commonwealth, having, in pursuance of their instructions, summoned before them, the president, directors and company of the New England City Bank, of the City bank, and of the State bank, all in the city of Boston, and of the People's bank, in the town of Roxbury, to show cause, if any they have, why their respective charters should not be declared forfeit and void, respectfully

REPORT:

That in obedience to the summons of your committee, the aforesaid banks severally appeared, and were fully heard in their defence. The explanations and arguments, exhibited in their defence, have varied the opinions of your committee, in some respects, but have left them entirely unchanged, as to the illegality and impropriety of the acts complained of. They remain unanimously of opinion, that the aforesaid banks have severally violated the laws, relative to banks and banking, and transcended the limits of their charters. The opinions expressed in their former reports, as to the impropriety of the check system, and the illegality of the rates of exchange charged and taken, on both foreign and domestic paper, have been confirmed by the hearing. Yet, nevertheless, it appeared inexpedient to a majority of your committee, to pursue all the banks to extremities. They have, therefore, endeavored to distinguish between them, believing that the punishment of a part, would be as salutary, as an example, as the punishment of the whole. The supremacy of the laws will be as firmly established, the efficacy of punishment as clearly illustrated, and the claims of justice as amply satisfied, by inflicting the ultimate sanctions of the law upon a portion of the offenders, as upon all who may be guilty. The majority of the committee, therefore, acting upon this principle, and under a high sense of public duty, are constrained to report, that the State bank, and the People's bank have failed to satisfy them, that their charters ought not to be declared forfeit and void. The check system of the State bank, and the extravagant premiums of the People's bank, clearly distinguished them from all others, and, in the opinion, of a majority of your committee, entitle them to the pre-eminence, allotted them by this report.

The New England bank satisfactorily explained one of the strong charges against it, viz: the charge of borrowing money on time and interest. It appeared, that this had been done in only one instance, and that under peculiarly mitigating circumstances.

The committee are unable to perceive any thing in the transactions of the City bank, distinguishing it from many others. It seemed expedient, therefore, to a large majority of your committee, to recommend the discontinuance of further proceedings against the two last named banks.

There are strongly mitigating circumstances in the case of the State bank, which common fairness require us to mention. On the 2d day of January last, at a special meeting of the directors, they, by formal votes, resolved to discontinue the practice of charging a premium on checks and drafts, and since that time have wholly abandoned it. It commenced, without the knowledge of all its directors, these practices, and it appears, that as soon as the fact came to the knowledge of the directors, they, on consultation with the solicitor of the bank, directed an immediate discontinuance of the practices.

The several memorials read to your committee by the banks, in their defence, are herewith presented.

By order of the committee, M. LAWRENCE.

MASSACHUSETTS WHIG CONVENTION.

At an adjourned meeting of the members of the legislature, and of delegates chosen from the various towns in the commonwealth not represented by whigs in the legislature, friendly to the election of Daniel Webster to the presidency, holden at the hall of the house of representatives on the evening of Thursday, March 24, 1836, it was unanimously

Resolved, That the members of this convention entertain the fullest and most perfect confidence in the character and political principles of his excellency Edward Everett, and that we do cordially recommend and nominate that distinguished citizen as the whig candidate for the suffrages of the citizens of Massachusetts, at the ensuing annual election for the office of governor of the commonwealth.

Resolved, That, with the same entire confidence, we recommend and nominate his honor George Hull, a citizen, able, faithful and attached to the constitution, as the whig candidate for the office of lieutenant governor.

The following letter from the hon. Daniel Webster to a friend in this city was then read to the convention:

Washington, Feb. 27, 1836.

MY DEAR SIR: The whig members of the legislature of Massachusetts, of the last year, saw fit to put me in nomination for the office of president of the United States.

Events have since occurred, which were probably not anticipated, and which may be thought to have rendered a reconsideration of that nomination expedient. If this opinion should be entertained by the whig members of the present legislature, I should exceedingly regret that they should forbear to act upon it, from any motives of delicacy towards me. Indeed, in the state of things at present existing in the country, my personal wishes are, to withdraw my name from the place it occupies before the public, in connexion with the approaching election; and I am restrained from so doing, only by the consideration that there are interests, which might be effected by such a movement, in regard to which the opinions of others ought to be consulted.

I wish you, therefore, my dear sir, to signify to our friends that not only would it give me no pain to be no longer considered a candidate, but that such a change in my relations to the country would be altogether agreeable to my personal feelings. At the same time, I wish it may also be said to them, that I shall not act in opposition to their judgment of what is required by the public good. I shall not separate from them, nor from those principles which we have hitherto maintained, and which, I trust, we shall continue to maintain, whether in majorities or minorities, or in prosperous or adverse fortune. If, in their opinion, our common principles and common cause, notwithstanding what has occurred, do still require of me that I remain in my present position, I shall cheerfully abide by their determination, confident that, in no events hereafter to happen, can it become matter of regret to me that I have conformed to what seemed best to their honest patriotism and intelligent sense of public duty.

With this distinct expression of my own personal wishes, therefore, I leave the subject for their decision; desiring them to consider nothing but what just and consistent principle, sincere, patriotic duty, and the great cause of constitutional liberty may appear, in the present posture of public affairs, to demand from them and from me. With very true regard, your obedient servant,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

To H. W. Kinsman, esq.

On the above letter the Boston Centinel makes the following remarks:

"It is calculated to confirm and fortify the judicious confidence, which the people of Massachusetts have long entertained towards our distinguished fellow citizen. It proves beyond a doubt, that, although universally admitted to be the ablest champion of the constitution, and one of the most virtuous and accomplished statesmen in the country, and worthy of its highest honors, he is disinterested, so far as concerns his own personal advancement. Without any solicitation on his part, the legislature of the last year, nominated him as a candidate for the presidency. Most other men would have been disposed to hold the party to their nomination, under all circumstances: Not so with Daniel Webster; he treats the convention to consider whether any thing has occurred recently, to change their views, and while he indicates unequivocally, that he is prepared for any sacrifice, so far as he is concerned personally, he magnanimously leaves it with them to decide, whether it is expedient, to have his name withdrawn from the contest. He is, in fact, prepared to go with them and their principles, under any and all circumstances; whether he is placed in the position of a candidate, or a private station. Such a proposition cannot fail to unite in his favor, the best wishes of all patriotic citizens."

The convention agreed to adhere to the nomination of Mr. Webster for the presidency—and at the same time, nominated governor Everett and lieut. gov. Hull, for re-election, which was carried by acclamation.

NORTH CAROLINA CORRESPONDENCE.

His excellency Martin Van Buren:

DEAR SIR: A portion of your fellow-citizens in this section, feeling a deep anxiety as to your views on a topic which most vitally affects our immediate welfare and happiness, have thought proper to propound to you the following interrogatory, to which we wish an explicit answer.

Do you, or do you not, believe that congress has the constitutional power, to interfere with or abolish slavery in the District of Columbia?

The conspicuous situation in which you are placed, and the importance of a thorough knowledge of your views on this interesting topic, will, we hope, be sufficient apology for the liberty we have taken.

Mr. Martin Van Buren's reply.

Washington, March 6th, 1836.

GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter apprising me of the deep anxiety which is felt by a portion of your fellow citizens, as to my views upon a topic vitally affecting their immediate welfare and happiness, and the importance of their being possessed of a thorough knowledge of them; and asking me to say, whether I do or do not believe that congress has the constitutional power to interfere with or abolish slavery in, the District of Columbia?

I am not only willing, but desirous, gentlemen, that you should have the most thorough knowledge of my views and feelings upon the delicate and interesting subject with which your question is connected; and I shall endeavor to acquaint you with them in the fullest manner in my power.

Not having, heretofore, had the honor of being in political communication with you I am not advised whether the sentiments relating to it, which have been avowed by myself and by my authority, within the last two years, have come to your knowledge. I deem it therefore proper, to furnish you with the substance of them, before I reply to your more specific inquiry. The avowals to which I refer, were—

1st. An opinion that congress has no right to interfere in any manner, or to any extent with the subject of slavery in the states;

2d. Against the propriety of their doing so in the District of Columbia; and 3dly. The statement of my full concurrence in the sentiments expressed by the citizens of Albany, in public meeting, the most important of which are as follows, viz: "That the constitution of the United States carries with it an adjustment of all questions involved in the deliberations which led to its adoption; and that the compromise of interests in which it was founded, binding in honor and good faith, independently of the force of agreement, on all who live under its protection and participate in the benefits of which it is the source"—"That the relation of master and slave is a matter exclusively belonging to the people of each state within its own boundary, and that any attempt by the government or people of any other state, or by the general government, to interfere with or disturb it, would violate the spirit of that compromise which lies at the basis of the federal compact"—"That we can only hope to maintain the union of the states by abstaining from all interference with the laws, domestic policy and peculiar interests of every other state"—"That all such interference, which tends to alienate one portion of our countrymen from the rest, deserves to be frowned upon with indignation by all who cherish the principles of our revolutionary fathers, and who desire to preserve the constitution by the exercise of that spirit of amity which animated its framers"—"That they deprecated the conduct of those who are attempting to coerce their brethren in other states into the abolition of slavery, by appeals to the fears of the master and to the passions of the slave; and that they could not but consider them as disturbers of the public peace, and would by all constitutional means, exert their influence to arrest the progress of such measures"—"That whilst they would maintain inviolate the liberty of speech and the freedom of the press, they considered discussions, which, from their nature, tend to inflame the public mind and put in jeopardy the lives and property of their fellow citizens, at war with every rule of moral duty, and every suggestion of humanity, and would be constrained, moreover, to regard those who, with a full knowledge of their pernicious tendency, persist in carrying them on, as disloyal to the union"—"That the people of the south would do great injustice if they allow themselves to believe, that the few who are interfering with the question of slavery, are acting in accordance with the sentiments of the north upon the subject; and finally, "that they made these declarations to their southern brethren in the same spirit of amity which bound together their fathers and ours, during a long and eventful struggle for independence; and that they did, in full remembrance of that common association, plight to them their faith to maintain in practice as far as lies in their power, what they had solemnly declared."

These views, thus expressed and sanctioned by myself, appear to me to cover the whole ground, save the abstract question to which you have been pleased to call my attention, and I cheerfully embrace the opportunity you have felt it your duty to afford me, to explain myself fully on that also. As anxious as you can possibly be, to arrest all agitation upon this disturbing subject, I have considered the question you have propounded to me, with a sincere desire to arrive at the conclusion, that the subject, in respect to the District of Columbia, can be safely placed on the same ground on which it stands in regard to the states, viz: the want of constitutional power in congress to interfere in the matter. I owe it, however, to candor, to say to you, that I have not been able to satisfy myself that the grant to congress, in the constitution, of the power of "exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever" over the federal district, does not confer on that body the same authority over the subject that would otherwise have been possessed by the states of Maryland and Virginia; or that congress might not, in virtue thereof, take such steps upon the subject in this District, as those states might themselves take within their own limits, and consistently with their rights of sovereignty.

Thus viewing the matter, I would not, from the lights now before me, feel myself safe in pronouncing that congress does not possess the power of interfering with or abolishing slavery in the District of Columbia. But, whilst such are my present impressions upon the abstract question of the legal power of congress—impressions which I shall at all times be not only ready, but disposed, to surrender upon conviction of error—I do not hesitate to give it to you as my deliberate and well-considered opinion, that there are objections to the exercise of this power, against the wishes of the slaveholding states, as imperative in their nature and obligations, in regulating the conduct of public men, as the most palpable want of constitutional power would be.

You have alluded in your letter to the conspicuous situation in which I have been placed before the public; and I take it for granted, that it is to that circumstance, rather than to any other, that I am to ascribe the solicitude felt by yourselves and your fellow citizens in respect to my views on the subject. I recognise, to the fullest extent, the propriety of this desire on your part, and although there is nothing in your letter making the avowal necessary, I prefer that not only you, but all the people of the United States shall now understand, that if the desire of that portion of them which is favorable to my elevation to the chief magistracy, should be gratified, I must go into the presidential chair the inflexible and uncompromising opponent of any attempt on the part of congress to abolish slavery in the District of Columbia, against the wishes of the slaveholding states; and also with the determination equally decided, to resist the slightest interference with the subject in the states where it exists. In saying this, I tender neither to them nor to you, any pledges, but declare only settled opinions and conviction of duty. Those who doubt that it will be carried into full and fair effect, are under no obligations to trust me. An opportunity is afforded them to exercise their free choice in the matter, and they may be assured, that there is no one less likely to complain of its exercise than myself.

The peculiar importance of the subject, and a desire (which will allow me to feel) that my views of it should be correctly understood, make it proper that I should explain the grounds of the opinions above expressed. They are founded, amongst others, on the following considerations, viz:

1st. I believe that if it had been foreseen, at the time of the adoption of the constitution, that the seat of the federal government would be fixed in a slaveholding region, that the subject of slavery would be there agitated to the prejudice of those holding this species of property, the right to do so, would, with the assent of the non-slaveholding states, have been made an exception to the unrestricted legislative power given to congress over the District to be ceded.

2dly. I cannot but regard the agitation of this subject in the District of Columbia, as a surprise upon the people of Maryland and Virginia, being very confident that if the state of things which now exists, had been at all apprehended by those states, the cession of the District would not have been made except upon the express condition that congress should exercise no such power; and that with such a condition the cession would, in the then state of public opinion, have been readily accepted.

3dly. I do therefore believe, that the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia, against the wishes of the slaveholding states (assuming that congress has the power to effect it) would violate the spirit of that compromise of interests which lies at the basis of our social compact; and I am thoroughly convinced, that it could not be so done without imminent peril, if not certain destruction, to the union of the states. Viewing the matter in this light, it is my clear and settled opinion, that the federal government ought to abstain from doing so, and that it is the sacred duty of those whom the people of the United States entrust with the control of its action, so to use the constitutional power with which they are invested, as to prevent it.

I think it due to the occasion, and only a simple act of justice to my fellow citizens of the north, of all political parties; to add the expression of my belief, that the opinions above expressed, accord in substance, with those entertained by a larger majority of the people of the non-slaveholding states than has ever before existed in those states on a public question of equal magnitude. It is also due to them to say, that their sentiments on this subject spring out of considerations of too high a character, and look to consequences of too solemn an import, to be shaken by slight causes. With only a generous confidence on the part of the south in their brethren of the north, and a firm determination on the part of each, to visit with their severest displeasure any attempt to connect the subject with party politics, those sentiments cannot be overthrown. All future attempts on the part of the abolitionists to do so, will then only serve to accumulate and concentrate public odium on themselves. That there are persons at the north who are firmer in concurring in the prevailing sentiment I have described, is certainly true; but their numbers, when compared with the rest of the community, are very inconsiderable; and if the condition of things be not greatly aggravated by imprudence, many of them I have no doubt, will ultimately adopt sounder views of the subject; and the efforts of those who may persist in the work of agitation, may be overcome by reason, or rendered inoperative by constitutional reneidies.

To one class of those who have hitherto petitioned congress for the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia, I cannot forbear to refer: I allude to the society of Friends, or the people usually denominated Quakers. The uniformity of their course upon this subject, the temperate manner in which it has been manifested, and the marked excellence of their conduct and character, appear to have conciliated respect for their motives, even from those who differ with them in opinion. As far as my observation has enabled me to judge, it is due to them to say, that as there has been no indication of any change of opinion upon their part during the present excitement, so has there been no evidence of a disposition to lend themselves to the undue agitation of the public mind attempted by others. There is certainly no class of people in this country, who have a deeper interest in the preservation of the union and of the happy system of government which it upholds, than they; and it has now become very apparent to all reflecting and observing minds, that the question of slavery in the District of Columbia cannot be pressed to the result they desire, with safety to those paramount objects. Do not these considerations justify the hope that from them, at least, we may reasonably expect, for the future, a mode of dealing with the subject, which, whilst it does no injustice to their principles, shall repress instead of increasing agitation, and not endanger the great interests to which I have referred? To doubt it, would be to distrust the influence which industry, morality, intelligence and republican habits—qualities which all admit them to possess in a high degree—are calculated in great emergencies to exert upon the conduct of their possessors. And for the like reason, it may certainly be expected, that well disposed persons of other religious denominations, who, without a full consideration of the difficulties which surround this subject, and of the dangerous consequences to which the efforts of the abolitionists so evidently tend, have lent to those efforts the influence of their names and character, will be careful hereafter to avoid the repetition of an error so unfortunate and mischievous.

In every view of the subject, therefore, it does appear to me, that, although there certainly is in the present condition of the country, in relation to it, sufficient to excite the most serious attention, there is nothing in the state of public opinion in the United States, to justify that panic in the public mind which invariably disqualifies those who partake of it, from dealing wisely or successfully with the circumstances by which it is produced. From abroad we have, I think, some right to expect less interference than heretofore. We shall, I am confident, for some time at least, have no more foreign agents to enlighten us on the subject. Recent results here, and the discussions with which they have been attended, cannot fail to attract the attention of the reading and reflecting portion of the foreign public. By these means they will be made to understand our real condition in this respect, and they will know that the unchangeable law of that condition is, that the slave question must be left to the control of the slaveholding states themselves, without molestation or interference from any quarter; that foreign interference of every description, can only be injurious to the slave, without benefit to any interest, and will not be endured by any section of our country; and that any interference, coming from even the non-slaveholding portions of our territory, is calculated to endanger the perpetuity, and if sanctioned by the general government, would eventually occasion the dissolution of our happy union. Seeing the subject, in this its true aspect, and conscious as they must be, that the downfall of this republic would be the severest blow that the cause of liberty and self-government could receive, and from which its recovery would be hopeless, the wise and the good among them—those who are really guided by the principles of justice and humanity—will pause and acknowledge, that they have misapprehended the true bearings of this question. Instead of accusing our countrymen who hold property in slaves, with disregarding the general principles of liberty and the dictates of a pure religion, they will recognise, in this class of our citizens, as sincere friends to the happiness of mankind as any others, and will become sensible that this species of property, the result of causes over which they had no control, is an inheritance, which they only know how to dispose of. Instead of charging the people of the non-slaveholding states, as has often been done, with hypocrisy in professing an ardent love of freedom, they will find that the free citizens of the north are only acting upon the principles of fidelity to their most solemn engagements; that if they were to attempt the accomplishment of what is desired of them by those who regard slavery as inconsistent with the equal rights on which our institutions are founded, they will involve themselves in the odium, either of seeking to evade a compact which was the means and the pledge of our national existence, or of availing themselves of their present power and unexampled prosperity, to dissolve a connection with their southern brethren, formed at a period of mutual adversity, for a cause which was then not only known to exist, but the continuance of which was expressly recognised in the bond of their union.

I have thus, gentlemen, been compelled to extend my remarks considerably further than I intended, when I commenced to answer your inquiry. As, however, the subject was delicate and important, I feel that I have not trespassed more upon your time in its examination than was proper to enable you to comprehend the views I entertain of it, or than was respectful to the considerations which justified your call for those views. And I feel assured, whatever may be the difference of opinion, if any, which exists between myself and any other portions of my fellow citizens, that the issue of this matter as of all preceding questions which have agitated the public mind, and have been thought to be pregnant with danger, will, in their hands, be such as to strengthen the bonds of their union, and to increase those fraternal and patriotic affections which our past national history has so often and so honorably illustrated. I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. VAN BUREN.

LETTER FROM GEN. HARRISON.

North Bend, 9th Feb. 1836.

GENTLEMEN: Your letter, covering the proceedings of the convention by which I was nominated their candidate for the presidency of the United States was received in the due course of the mail, and the resolutions they contained, are such as to create in my bosom feelings of gratitude towards the people of Maryland, which will be cherished to the last moment of my existence. These feelings were greatly increased from the reflection that, with a very few exceptions, I was personally unknown to the members of the convention, and, exclusively of some of her statesmen, with whom I have served in the national councils, but to a few others of her citizens. With thousands of those of some other states I have been associated in scenes, where the difficulties and dangers, to which we were in common exposed, have created a feeling of attachment and partiality, which is often found to warp the judgments of good men and induce them to bestow their confidence and suffrages on those possessing inferior qualifications. Having no advantages of this kind to boast of in relation to my fellow citizens of Maryland, I am gratified with the reflection, considering the pre-eminent talents of several of those from whom their selection might have been made, that I am indebted for the distinction with which they have honored me, to the greater length of my public services, and the belief that in the discharge of the various and important trusts which have been committed to me, the confidence of my country has never been betrayed nor its interests sacrificed. This is precisely the ground which I wish to occupy. Conscious of many deficiencies and imperfections, I have endeavored to supply the place of the qualities I wanted by unweared zeal and undeviating fidelity.

How delightful is the reflection that by an assembly so enlightened and free as that of the late Maryland convention, the character in which I so ardently desire to stand before my countrymen, should be accorded to me. In relation to the freedom with which the choice was made, gentlemen, I venture to assure you, that should your efforts to place me in the executive chair of this great nation, prove successful, that the influence and patronage of that office shall never be used to control or impair it, in any of your future deliberations. And that if in the year 1839 your own great emporium or any other place, should be the theatre for the exhibition of another national convention, it shall be, as far as my efforts can effect it, what that of 1835 purported to be, "an assembly fresh from the people, the true representation of their unbiased wishes, the faithful echo of their opinions."

This declaration is made with a perfect consciousness of the little confidence which is given to pledges of any kind, made by persons situated as I am. I know that they have been made and violated in every age and in every country, where men have depended for their advancement to the highest offices on the good opinion of their countrymen. But almost every instance the deceiver has been found possessed of grasping and insatiable ambition (of which the germs might have been discovered in his previous conduct) and generally united with commanding genius and splendid talents. There is, I trust, nothing in my previous conduct to show that I possess the former character, and utterly disclaiming the latter, my sole reliance, for preserving the good opinion of my countrymen is the preservation of that character for fidelity to my engagements, which the convention, which you, gentlemen, represent, as well as others of my fellow-citizens have been pleased to allow to me.

With high consideration, I am, gentlemen, your humble servant,

WM. H. HARRISON.

LETTER FROM JUDGE WHITE.

Washington, March 17, 1836.

DEAR SIR: I have this moment received your favor, under date of the 15th inst. In answer to the question put to me, I say, I do not believe congress has the power to abolish slavery in the District of Columbia, and if that body did possess the power, I think the exercise of it would be the very worst of policy.

Holding these opinions, I would act upon them in any situation in which I could be placed, and for both reasons would, if called on to act, withhold my assent to any bill having in view such an object.

I take the liberty of forwarding to you a pamphlet containing my sentiments on this subject. And am, most respectfully, your obedient servant,

John B. D. Smith, esq. Richmond.

HUGH L. WHITE.

GOVERNOR DUNCAN'S LETTER

Vandalia, December 20, 1835.

GENTLEMEN: You will see by the enclosed resolutions of the legislature, instructing you to vote for expunging the "Resolutions of the United States senate of the 25th of March 1831, declaring that the president of the United States in his late executive proceedings in relation to the public revenue, had assumed upon himself, an authority and power not conferred by the constitution and laws, but in derogation of both," that they have made it my duty to furnish you with a copy of them. While I acknowledged the obligation of every representative in our government to obey the instructions of his constituents, or resign, and by no means desiring that you should do otherwise in this case; yet believing as I do, that the independence of congress, and more especially of the senate, which is made by the constitution a check upon that executive patronage, which has been the lever, or chief power in the hands of all governments to overturn the liberties of the people, and which is now threatening the peace and safety of our own, I should be faithless to my country, and recreant to the people who have placed me among the guardians of their rights, if I were, by silently transmitting or in any other way, to give the slightest sanction to the principles those resolutions contain, or the objects they appear to have been designed, by the agitation of them, ultimately to accomplish: which is to censure and degrade this department of our government. Destroy public confidence in the senate, let the legislature rebuke them for warning the people, that a new, dangerous and unconstitutional power had been asserted by a co-ordinate and powerful branch of the government; let the right be fully established that any power or person, except the immediate constituents of each separate member of congress, shall have authority to call their acts in question; or that a man at the head of our government, at whose command six thousand bayonets will bristle in an instant, surrounded immediately and remotely, by one hundred thousand organized officeholders, and numerous patizan office-seekers, ready to obey his will, shall have authority to protest against, interrupt or question, any of the people's representatives, who are sitting in the presence of this mighty power, unarmed and unprotected, and who should look alone to the approbation of their constituents at the ballot box, for all favor and all rebukes; in a word, let the senate of the United States lose its independence by the loss of public confidence—the corrupting practice of members of the senate asking and receiving favors from the executive in employing its patronage to secure their re-election, by the appointment of their partizans and relatives to office, or placing over it a master, and you must perceive that all power will soon be centered in one man, and that our march to despotism is inevitable.

This contest between the president and the senate, as a party measure, to my mind, is assuming the most alarming aspect; the one possessing all power, the fount of all honor, the dispenser of all favors, holding the absolute power over the will of one hundred thousand dependents, whose patronage makes him the idol of all the ambitious, hungry office-seekers in the land; the other having no benefits to bestow, no mercenary dependents wielding the press or the bludgeon in their defence, and required by the constitution to perform the odious duties of rejecting bad men from office, and resisting executive encroachments—in such a contest, unless the people rally to the defence of the senate, who can doubt that the result will be its total prostration?

When we view the attacks now making by this party upon the supreme court, as well as the senate, and their attempts to bestow such power upon the executive, it is impossible to doubt, whatever may be the design, that their success must end in despotism. That any unprejudiced man, who ever read our constitution, or thought one moment about the character of our government, doubts that it was both the right and duty of the senate to pass the resolution in question, is more than I believe. Silence the warning voice of either branch of the legislature, and especially the senate, which is bound to know the public will as well as the secret action of the government, and who does not see every barrier to arbitrary government laid low? The flimsy pretext for the attack upon the senate, that it is clothed with judicial as well as legislative powers, is a striking evidence of the contempt, that those who urge it have for the safety, as well as intelligence of the people. Does not every one see that no criminal intention was charged upon the president? He had been guilty of an assumption of powers (for a good purpose, if you please), that was unauthorised by law, in violation of the constitution, and against the genius and spirit of all limited governments; and which power, when the present patriotic, but misguided incumbent, shall have shed his mantle upon a successor, if he be an ambitious bad man, might, and if this power is sustained now by the people, will, in my opinion, sooner or later, overthrow the liberties of our country.

Wishing that every man, honored by a seat in the distinguished and responsible body, of which you are a member, may justly appreciate the blessings of our free institutions, I will close this communication, which I assure you, has been prompted alone by the spirit of patriotism. With great respect, your obedient servant,

JOSEPH DUNCAN.

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY H. NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

We publish a variety of articles relating to the currency—contained in the proceedings of congress, and otherwise. It is evident that we are approaching a “momentous crisis,” as the “see-saw” word of the Richmond Enquirer used to be. As to ourselves—“we say nothing.” The pressure is exceedingly “tight”—though we do not fully believe to the extent stated in some of the papers that we have published; but of this we are satisfied, that the gathering-up of money, in the treasury of the United States, or rather in certain banks, will, and must be attended with a great shock to the business and prosperity of our country.

It is our intention, pretty soon, to copy the speeches of Mr. Rives and Mr. Leigh, the opposing senators from Virginia, on the expunging resolution. They will, together, as we suppose, present a fair and full view of it.

A fact is stated in the Louisville Advertiser, which strongly illustrates the growing necessity for making use of the rail roads for the transportation of the mails. The mail for St. Louis and New Orleans, despatched from Louisville a few days ago, weighed more than a ton. The carriage of such a weight, with any thing like the desirable expedition, would be next to impossible, in the winter months, by the ordinary mode of stage transportation. On the other hand it could be whisked along upon a rail road, over the Alleghany, with as little difficulty as a barrel of flour or pork, and at a rate which would set all private competition at defiance.

We have a great flood of murders, suicides and other acts of violence, just now running through the newspapers. We are certainly losing character. Executions, in pursuance of law, are more numerous now in the United States (“the freest and most enlightened nation in the world”) than, under the “bloody code,” of England.

Died, at an advanced age, in Philadelphia, last week, the well known and respected “father of the Philadelphia bar,” William Rawle, esq.

The Alexandria Gazette says—“If those members of the house of representatives who, during the prayers in the morning, retain their seats, with their hats on, reading newspapers or writing letters, would only look up at the galleries and see how their conduct is observed and commented on by the spectators, they would alter their course. Either abolish the custom of opening the day’s business with prayer, or pay the public and religious service at least the show of decent respect.”

The Albany Evening Journal of Tuesday says the steamboat Constitution left that day for N. York with one hundred passengers and six towboats, belonging to the Eckford, Swiftsure and Albany transportation lines, the freight of which amounted to twenty-four hundred tons.

Of 385 cases which have been admitted into the asylum at Worcester, Mass. 96 were supposed to be caused by intemperance, 25 by religious feelings, and 24 by disappointment or apprehension in regard to property.

A select committee of the house of commons were in session on the subject of the money which Mr. Raphael asserted he had paid Mr. O’Connell to obtain a return for that place to parliament. The examination of Mr. Raphael had begun, and thus far nothing more had been elicited than a confirmation of what he stated in his published letters, except one important point, which was that O’Connell, in a letter to Raphael, asks him “will you let me know if you would like to accept of a baronetcy? I do not make this offer without authority.”

The United States frigate United States, is now fitting at New York, and will soon sail for the Mediterranean, under the command of capt. Wilkinson.

We learn that a robbery was committed on the Merchants’ bank of Providence, sometime between Saturday night and Monday morning last, and that the amount then ascertained to be stolen was $150,000.

It is stated from New York, that bills on England, owing to the “scarcity” of money, are at five per cent. advance; that is, three and an half per cent. below the real par. The practice of measuring the £ sterling by the old law, which rated it at 4.44, seems to be generally continued in that city, though the present legal value is 4.80 and its real value somewhat more—say, 4.85 to 4.88. See discussions on this subject in the REGISTER of 1831-32, passim.

We do not suppose that there will be any large sales, at this great loss of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. seeing that in 90 days or less, specie may be imported by the drawer of good bills, having present funds in England. If true, it only shows the extreme pressure for money that prevails. The “deposit banks” have discounted on the public money—it has been scattered to the “four winds of heaven” by speculations, and cannot be gathered together—and these banks must and will be favored with “time and opportunity” to pay the people that which is owing to them—and the end of the pressure is not ascertainable. Hence, they have nearly stopped their “accommodations” to new business, and the difficulties go on to increase, so as to bring about the results stated.

We have heard that the United States bank has been required to reduce its circulation between five and six millions, within a few months—and, from the doings in congress, it seems resolved that it shall, suddenly, do more. The bank can—but are the people able to bear it?

There are many reports and speculations from Texas; but nothing important, as we believe since the particulars that we have published.

LATER RUMORS.

From the New Orleans Bee. The rumor that had been current in this city for a couple of days, was confirmed by the arrival last evening of the schooner Equity from Brazoria. Capt. Martin of that schooner states, that col. Fanning preferring to join the Texian army, then concentrating at Montezuma on the Colorado river, had blown up the fort at Goliad where he was garrisoned, and completely demolished the town. With the 500 troops under his command, he then cut his way through the Mexican army, encamped in the neighborhood; and effected a junction with the Texians under general Houston. A decisive action was daily expected between Santa Anna and Houston. The Mexican army amounts to nearly 5,000 men, infantry and cavalry; the Texians to about 2,500, more determined than well equipped.

Santa Anna has prosecuted his intention of exterminating the Texians. Agreeably to his positive and personal orders, none are exempted from slaughter, of any sex or age over ten years. Several women and children have therefore been brought hither in the Equity, as a refuge from destruction. All the Texians capable of bearing arms have volunteered or been summoned to the conflict, but as Houston and his forces are anxious for vengeance as well as victory, he has resolved if possible to bring the war to a speedy issue; and expel the invaders from the country.

Previous to blowing up the fort at Goliad, on the 23d March, the Georgia volunteers, consisting of 150 men under col. Ward, attacked a body of 600 Mexicans at Refugio, 250 of whom are reported to have been killed and the rest routed. It is also stated that on the 29th ult. general Houston attacked the advanced guard of the Mexican army, which was repelled on the main body; and some prisoners were taken, among whom were 2 spies of the enemy.

It is also stated that the brig Privilege, which sailed hence with provisions for the Mexican army, had been captured by the Texian cutters.

It had been rumored that the Mexicans had captured Matagorda; but this is doubted.

The New Orleans Advertiser says—Candor obliges us to say that some passengers in the above schooner doubt the fact of Fanning having succeeded in his glorious enterprise; and it is further observed, that the Texian force is deficient by 2,000 of the number above stated. But all are agreed that the feeling was good, high-spirited and sanguine as to the result, except as regards agonizing apprehensions for the wives and children of the soldiers. We still hope, for the cause of humanity, that the above information respecting the cruelty of the Mexicans, may be exaggerated.

Other accounts state that col. Fanning had, by orders of gen. Houston, demolished the fort himself, and effected a safe retreat. These conflicting statements are, however, not calculated to benefit Texas, and should be cautiously put forward by those having the interest of the country at heart.

The Bunker Hill "Aurora" says, on the authority of professor Hitchcock, that several submarine forests exist in the waters near Cape Cod and Martha's Vineyard.

Incredible as it may appear, we have now in New York more foreigners than are to be found in the whole of the southern states. In the summer of 1830 there were in the state of New York forty-eight thousand and some odd hundreds more aliens than were contained in Virginia, North Carolina, S. Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Kentucky, Missouri and the territory of Florida.

AMERICAN CONVICTS. Of 213 convicts received into the state prison at Sing Sing, during the year ending 30th Sept. last, 70 or about one-third, are foreigners. And of these foreigners, at least 68 are from the British dominions. Of the 143 American-born, a large number are colored. Deducting these, the number of foreigners would be nearly equal to that of the Americans.

A steamboat plies regularly every fortnight between Athens and Constantinople.

Another revolutionary centennarian gathered to his fathers. Capt. Charles Miel, aged 102, a revolutionary patriot, departed this life in the town of Grove, Alleghany county, on the 11th of March. He was a native of England, served in the old French war, on the plains of Abraham, with Wolfe, and afterwards entered the revolutionary service as lieutenant. He was in the battles of Lexington and Bunker Hill, and was a captain under Montgomery before Quebec—afterwards in the battle of Monmouth, and served to the end of war. He has received his pension from government.

How much wisdom in the following remark of Gibbon: "The English dwell with rapture on the trophies of Edward 3d, and his gallant son, the black prince, on the fields of Crecy and Poitiers; and on the kings of France and Scotland, at the same time prisoners in London. To a thinking mind, Edward's encouragement of the woollen manufacture is of greater value than all these barren laurels."

RAIL ROAD FROM NEW YORK TO PHILADELPHIA. Important.—It is rumored, and we hope it is true, that the joint companies have determined to make their branch rail road from New Brunswick through Trenton.

[Trenton paper.]

The above intelligence will be highly gratifying to the people of New Jersey. By the connection of the Trenton and Philadelphia rail road with the New Jersey rail road, a complete line will be formed between New York and Philadelphia, capable of being traversed in five or six hours. Not only the citizens of New Jersey, but the whole travelling public, will rejoice in the consummation of this event.

The fact above stated is more than mere rumor. From information deemed to be authentic, we learn that at the meeting of the stockholders of the Camden and Amboy rail road and Delaware and Raritan canal, on Tuesday last, it was resolved to construct the branch rail road direct from New Brunswick through Trenton. This is a chain of rail road destined soon to be constructed from Boston to Washington, and probably before many years have rolled around, from Maine to Florida.

We were invited this morning to view three sheep at Mr. Stearns' tavern, raised at the Shaker village in Watervliet. They exceed any thing of the sheep kind we have ever seen. We were informed that one of them weighs 265 pounds, and was sold for thirty dollars. The other two weigh each 188 and 195 pounds, and were sold for 22 dollars, making fifty-two dollars for three sheep! They were fatted by Dean Guage of the above mentioned village, are to be sent to the New York market.

Compliment to Baltimore. At a dinner given to captain Purcell, chief engineer of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal company, at Cumberland, Md. the following toast was given—

By Thos. F. Purcell. The city of Baltimore—In the march of improvement she has ever led the van! The first water works in the United States!—the first exchange for mercantile convenience!—the first introduction of gas light!—the first turnpike to pierce the Appalachian chains of mountains!—the first monumental pile reared in honor of the glorious deeds of our illustrious ancestors!—and the first great railway to connect the east with the west—have all resulted from the enterprise and intelligence of the citizens of Baltimore.

[Com. Herald.]

Notwithstanding the reported "scarcity" of money in New York, the people of that city continue to be much disturbed by "strikes" among the working classes—some of which appear to be going a great deal too far. It is true, that house rent, and other necessary family expenses, are, every where, too high; and have an artificial or factitious value—and there is a great demand for labor in New York, and, generally, elsewhere, in almost all its departments—but the creative power in the people is much checked by these "strikes," which add much to the difficulty about money, as affecting almost every pursuit, the circulation being lessened. "A nimble sixpence is better than a slow shilling." And the "operatives" should recollect, also, that they certainly abridge their several businesses, at large.

The New York Commercial Advertiser, speaking of a late "strike" among the tailors, and of a procession of several hundred who paraded the streets with banners, and music, &c. says—"It was truly painful to see such a procession, marching for such a purpose; and, in some instances with profane mottoes upon their banners. One of these mottoes was—NO SURRENDER, BY THE ETERNAL!" Another was, "Mechanics' Rights," and others of a kindred character.

And the Journal of Commerce referring to the "strike," says—

Some days back the journeymen tailors made out a new tariff of prices to be paid by their employers, and also laid down certain rules relative to the manner in which master tailors should give out work. According to one of these rules every master tailor should keep a slate hung up in his store and enter on it every piece of work which he gave a journeyman to make, and that no journeyman should get work to do except in his turn. For example, if two journeymen successively got each a coat to make, and the one who received the second was more industrious, or a more expeditious workman than the first, and finished his work sooner, he must wait idle until the other man had also finished his work, and was given another job. So that the idle and industrious, or awkward and expert workmen, were put completely on a par by these absurd regulations, to the monstrous injustice of the operative, and serious inconvenience and loss of the employer. The master tailors very properly refused to adopt so ridiculous a rule, or comply with the new scale of prices dictated by the journeymen, and the latter very generally turned out and refused to work. Some of the journeymen tailors were, however, willing to work at the old prices, and among them was a man named William Wright, in the employment of Messrs. Stokes & Co. Broadway. This man could earn twelve dollars a week; and having a large family to support, was unwilling to remain idle, but was obliged to do so from downright fear, as some of the other journeymen tailors called on him and threatened him that if he did not leave his employment, they would cut off his hands or kill him. Intimidated by these threats, Wright left his work; and his employers, in whose service he had been for many years, and who had a great respect for him, having discovered that he left them solely from intimidation, determined to prosecute the lawless ruffians who had driven him away, and summoned Wright to the police office yesterday evening, in order to obtain his testimony against them. Such a complete system of terror, however, have the journeymen tailors established in their body, that Wright was afraid to tell the names of any of the aggressors, and though Mr. Wynan said all he could to persuade him to it, promising him full protection against any consequences, and threatened to commit him if he refused to give evidence, Wright still declined mentioning any names, lest his doing so might cause his destruction. Finding that threats or promises were alike unavailing to make him mention the names of the persons who threatened him, Mr. Wynan was obliged to commit him to prison for refusing to give evidence, and thus an honest, industrious, poor man, with a large family, has been obliged first to remain idle, and is afterwards committed to prison for fear of disobeying the dictates of a lawless combination.

A manufacturer in New Brunswick (N. J.) thus advertises in the newspapers:

The public in general, and my binders in particular, are hereby informed that I have now at work four and twenty good permanent workmen, and several more engaged to commence the first of May; all of whom are alike unaffected with the brutal leprosy of late Monday habits, and the moral gangrene of "Trades' Union" principles. Hence my binders may rely upon steady employment, and the public upon good work, punctually performed; and they and myself find just cause to felicitate ourselves, upon the prompt and effectual disposal, at once and forever, of the inconvenience, injustice and nuisance of perpetual vexations, regular combinations, and periodical strikes from marauding gangs of transient and tramping Trades' Unionists, who have proved themselves as destitute of every moral principle, as they have become notorious for their wickedness and folly, their presumption, their insolence and audacity.

HORACE H. DAY.

Shoe, cap and hat manufacturer.

New Brunswick, April 6, 1836.

The Virginia election. Returns from about forty counties have been received. The "Compiler" sums up the returns as amounting to 25 Van Buren members of the legislature chosen, and 24 whigs: the Enquirer as 26 "republican" and 22 whigs. The great result is considered by many as doubtful. But it is said that the aggregate majorities of the people in the several counties which have voted, shew a general whig majority of the votes of the state of more than 3,000.

From the Lynchburg Virginian. It is really distressing to all sober and peace-loving minds to witness the military fury of the Richmond Enquirer. It seems to imagine that the exercise of the right of suffrage is a war of battle, and that our court-greens are miniature Waterloos, resounding with the roar of artillery and the clash of swords. "To arms! to arms!" it exclaims in one column, and "charge bayonet!" in another, with all the fury of an old Suwarow, chin-deep in the blood of the soldiers of freedom. This comes of serving a "military chieftain" so long. The Enquirer was formerly as peaceable a journal as is to be found in Virginia, except during the last war, when its tone was naturally somewhat bellicose, in accordance with the spirit of the times. But now, when the French quarrel is adjusted, and peace reigns within all our borders, Florida excepted, the appeals to our martial propensities are rather mal appropos.

A Virginia paper, speaking of the vote of Kanawha county, says—Kanawha—A Donnelly, (W.) 435; G. W. Burster, (V. B.) 274. Mr. Sumner, (W.) was elected last year by only 13 majority.

The aggregate of the returns shows—whigs 29; Van Buren 31. The same counties last year returned 25 whigs and 34 *Van Buren*ites.

The election in most of the counties has been very close—several of the large counties will give overwhelming majorities for the whig ticket, and secure the success of their electoral ticket next November.

New York election. There was no regular opposition made to the re-election of Mr. Lawrence, mayor. It appears that of the board of aldermen, the whigs obtained 9 out of 16—and that of the assistant alderman stands 8 against 3. There is a controversy, however, as to the politics of one of the aldermen—but the Courier says "Mr. Waterbury was the candidate of the whigs and such Jackson men as are opposed to Van Buren." We shall see how it is—bye and bye. If otherwise—both boards are tied.

Cincinnati. The Harrison ticket shews a very large majority for Harrison, at the late election for members of the city council. The whigs have 13 out of the 15 members.

Mobile. A whig mayor, Mr. George W. Owen, has been chosen in this city. Whole number of votes, 852, of which George W. Owen (whig) 516—T. Sanford (V. B.) 336—majority for G. W. Owen, 180.

FOREIGN ARTICLES. By the arrival of an Havre packet, at New York, we have London dates, of the 1st ult. and Paris of the 2d. The following are the only articles of interest.

London, March 1. The army estimates have been published this morning; but they differ little from those of last year. It was stated some time ago, that the army was to be reduced 10,000 men, which now turns out to have been "too good to be true." By the estimates for 1836-7, there appears to be, of all ranks, 101,039—being 48 men more than last year. Of this number, 19,720 are for India; leaving 81,319 for the United Kingdom and the colonies for effective service.

Paris, March 2. The following telegraphic despatch from Toulon was received yesterday by the government—it is addressed by marshal Clausel to the minister of war, and is dated Tremecen, Jan. 17.—"Two brigades under the orders of general Peregrau went out yesterday from Tremecen following different routes, in order to come up, by a covering movement, with the troops of Abdel Kader and the Moors of Tremecen, who were encamped in a gorge of the mountains, and two leagues and a half from us, between the sources of the Sisek and the Amighiera. A combat took place between our Arab auxiliaries and the soldiers of the Emir: 50 foot soldiers out of the 200 who followed him, and who with the 12,000 armed Moors of Tremecen formed all his force, had their heads cut off. All the tents of Abdel Kader, 30 mules, and a standard, fell into our power, as well as a part of the population that had fled from the town. Many of the principal Moors, who had followed the Emir, came to make their submission. The promptitude of our allies to advance did not allow our infantry time to take part in the engagement. In this affair we had for auxiliaries 400 horsemen of the desert of Angard, and 400 Donaires of Semels, who, with the 3d regiment of Chasseurs, amounted to 1,300 horses: we have never had here so great a force of cavalry. The chef d'escadron, Yousouf, whom I had fetched from Bona, was at the head of the native horsemen, commanded by El Mezara. Six times, while pursuing Abdel Kader, he succeeded in cutting him off from his men; he was afterwards separated from him only by a distance of forty paces, and, if his horse had not been exhausted by a gallop of three hours, he would certainly have taken him prisoner.

The legion of honor. The entire number of the members of the legion of honor was, on the 1st of October last, 50,195. On the 1st of January, 1831, it was 42,894, being an increase of 7,209 under Louis Philippe.

[London papers of the 5th March have been since received. But they do not appear to contain any news.]

BURNING OF A THEATRE. One hundred and twenty-six lives lost. A dreadful catastrophe occurred at Lahaman's theatre booth, in St. Petersburg, on Sunday, the 14th of February. A beam took fire from a lamp during the performance, when the building was soon enveloped in flames. The greater party of the audience in the boxes effected their escape without injury, but those in the pit crowded into a narrow passage, which was soon blocked up, when the roof fell, and covered them with fire brands; of above four hundred persons who were in the booth, one hundred and twenty-one males and five females perished, and about ten more were severely injured. The emperor himself assisted at the fire.

STATISTICS OF NEW ORLEANS FOR 1835. The report of the city treasurer is an instructive document, and an authentic picture of the prosperity of this great emporium, and of the peculiar features which distinguish its Gallo-American population from all other cities in the United States. The balance in the city treasury at the end of 1835 was $157,714. The rent of the beef market was $37,500—the vegetable $19,300—the lease of the oyster stands $14,163—levee duties, and those on steam and flat boats, $76,981—on cabarets (small taverns) and billiards $66,391—an increase from last year; taxes on carts $20,811, one third more than the previous year—hawkers and pedlars' licenses $4,811, decreased one half—cost of paving the city $308,409—lighting $27,290—city guard $45,370—charitable appropriations $14,842, &c.—value of real estate of the corporation $1,250,000.

THE MOSIER ESTATE IN ENGLAND—valued at thirty-two millions of dollars. The New York Sun, speaking of this estate, says, that it has in its possession a letter from Mr. Caleb Mosier, jr. of Providence, R. I. who says that "the rightful heirs to the said property of the Mosier family in England, reside in that city"—being no other than the family of his father, Caleb Mosier, sen. Mr. M. adds:—"We are at all times ready to satisfy any person of our proper right in this property who may call on or write to us, should such person have any right to know." Mr. Mosier refers to the governor and some of the most respectable men in Rhode Island. He has retained attorney general Greene as his counsel.

VALUABLE STATISTICS. Mr. Force's "National Calendar," for the present year, has been published, at Washington. All the heads of departments have examined it, and give a high testimony in its favor. It is a truly valuable work; and we may say almost indispensable to the use of political men. It maintains more than its old and established reputation.

Williams' (New York) Register for 1836 will be published on the 1st of May. It will abound with statistical tables and statements, rendered exceedingly important from the various facts ascertained by the taking of the census of 1835, giving most of the particulars that belong to the "empire state." The industry and fidelity shewn in this compilation, as well as in the "National Calendar," are exceedingly interesting to those who desire an intimate acquaintance with the concerns of our country. We much wish that such a work was published in every state! Statistics are of great importance to a discreet and sound legislation.

A list of the subscribers in the city will be inserted in Williams' Register, alphabetically arranged, according to their professions and trades, forming an additional inducement to all business men to subscribe to this useful manual.

CANADA. The following article, published in the Montreal Vindicator, the editor of which is a member of the parliament of Lower Canada, clearly indicates that the political affairs of the province are likely to be seriously disturbed before the dispute between the two great parties is finally settled.

"While, however, I deem the party thus insignificant, I must impress upon the people of Canada that they will become powerful, if the people become apathetic. It is the duty of the Canadians to act at once upon the threats of the 'constitutionals.' Their foes tell them that they are preparing for action; the association reports on the necessity of organization; and I therefore say that it is incumbent on the people to be prepared to defend their rights to the utmost. It should be explained at the door of every church in the province, that the bureaucratic party have threatened to resort to force; that, consequently, every man of mature age should possess himself of a good gun, and should familiarise himself with the use of it. This should be impressed upon them as a great duty, and not as the mere idle soldier-play of a militia muster. Having convinced every Canadian that it is his duty to arm effectually, it should be further explained, and in fact arranged, that every parish should furnish a certain quota of well armed men, who in case of emergency, might rally round the executive or the popular branch of the legislature, and protect both or either from the attacks which are threatened.

"Means of communication should be agreed upon. At present I can think of no better than a number of fires lighted at posts agreed upon, at about 5 miles (or less) distance from each other. A few hours would spread the desired intelligence through the country, and a large force might be brought to bear upon a given point in a very short time. Take as an example, Montreal. Suppose the Tories were to turn out, as they threaten, you might bring in from the parish of St. Laurent alone, a sufficient number of brave and hardy men to destroy every belting Tory in the city, and to make poor Mr. Adam Thom die of fear.

"You may however give to the Tory party all the benefit they can possibly derive from the king's troops. Remember that there are only 2,900 of all sorts in Canada, and these 2,900 are scattered over a vast extent of country. Montreal has less than one regiment and a few artillery. With vigor they might be cast into the St. Lawrence with ease.

"Other means will suggest themselves to you; my only object is in urging you to be prepared in case my estimate of the vain glorious Tories should turn out false, and they should really determine on a fight."

Philadelphia, April 11. The will of our late esteemed fellow citizen, Dr. Jonas Preston, after disposing of portions of his estate to members of his family, and giving considerable sums to many existing institutions for public good, provides that the remainder of his estate, thought to be about two hundred thousand dollars, shall go for the endowment of a lying-in hospital for married women, an institution much desired by many philanthropists, but hitherto unprovided for in this city. A society has for some time existed in Philadelphia, for aid to families under the above circumstances, but no extensive means were obtained, nor any hospital procured.

SHIPPING AT NEW YORK. The Mercantile Advertiser of that city, gives the following enumeration made the beginning of the last week—

Vessels on the north side of the city, from the battery to 20th street—ships 22, brigs 17, schooners 89, sloops 132, steamboats 40, towboats 20.

Vessels on the eastern side of the city from the dry dock to the battery—ships 131, brigs 174, schooners 251, sloops 310, steamboats, 28, towboats 27.

Besides the above, there were from 16 to 18 vessels, large and small, on the stocks building.

PENSACOLA HARBOR. The following is an extract from a letter received from an officer in the service of the United States, now at Pensacola, dated March 28th, 1836:

"The Constellation frigate entered this harbor without difficulty, having 23 feet 6 inches of water at low tide. This would give 26 feet at high tide on the bar, and corresponds with the report of Stidell."

THE FRIENDS OF INDIANA. The Quaker population of Indiana are a frugal industrious people; they are mostly farmers and mind nobody's business but their own. Look at their farms, their orchards, their gardens, their cattle and horses, and you will see what they are about; they are among the best practical farmers in the state; there is a neatness about their premises, which proves them to have been well instructed in the business of agriculture, and to understand the most profitable mode of cultivating the soil. Though generally well informed, they make no parade of their knowledge; they are never found intruding for office; they meddle little with politics, and yet no one sect among us are more firmly established in their opinions; they seek for correct information, are plain and economizing in all their motions; they despise extravagance in every thing; their barns are usually well filled and their houses abound in plenty; they drive fat horses, live honestly, and are, finally, an honor to any state or country they inhabit.

THE ROYAL LIBRARY AT PARIS. From an inspection recently made at the royal library in Paris, it appears that it now contains 600,000 printed volumes, 100,000 manuscripts, and 1,000,000 historical documents. Taking the average, 15,000 volumes are annually added, exclusive of pamphlets.

The National Intelligencer, of Saturday, says—The house has not yet acted upon the senate's proposition to adjourn on the 23d of May. Any thinking reader will be able to determine what probability there is of an adjournment at that day, when he is informed that, besides the business yet before committees, there are no fewer than seven hundred bills depending between the two houses of congress, some of them of momentous importance and great urgency.

By the table it will be perceived, that there are, in this state, upwards of 100,000 souls under the age of 10 years, and but 33 over the age of 90. The instances of extreme longevity are rare, and may be accounted for from the fact of the recent settlement of the country, and affords no argument against the salubrity of our climate. [Mt. New Jersey marl-beds—better than gold mines. Professor Rogers, in his late report on the geology of New Jersey, ascribes the usefulness of the marl or green mineral, as a manure, to its potash, which is always present and essential to its composition. The efficacy of the article lies mainly in the green granules, and not, as many imagine, in the shells and other foreign substances discovered occasionally in the beds. He moreover says that the more essential and permanent properties of this mineral are in no way connected with the gypsum or with the carbonate of lime, which so frequently forms a coating upon the green grains.

Between Long Branch and Deal, along our coast, the marl stratum has been penetrated thirty feet. The upper two feet consists of a green clay, seemingly derived from the disintegration of the green grains, intermixed with a large proportion of yellowish white clay. The main marl bed having a thickness of about 26 feet, contains several subordinate layers, but all contain a large share of the green granules. Beneath the whole is a grey yellowish clay, in which the grains abound, but they are remarkably large, and are associated with numerous casts of shells. A similar layer is seen in Jacob Curli's pits, where it contains beautiful casts of the nautilus and several shells, and also shark's teeth. [Newark Daily Adc.

A New York paper says—The sale of the stock of old wines, which had been accumulating at the City hotel for many years, was well attended, and went off briskly. Some of the choicest lots were sold as high as fifty-two and three dollars per dozen. About thirty-four thousand dollars' worth were sold, and there is to be another sale, as we are informed, of very excellent wines in reserve.

THE DUTY ON WINES. By the bill reported by the committee on commerce, and which has passed the senate by a unanimous vote, the duty on wines, after the 30th of June next, will be substantially as follows:

Red wines of France, in casks	1 cent per gallon.
White do do	2 " "
French wines, in bottles	1 cent per bottle.
Wines from Germany, Spain and the Mediterranean, unless otherwise specially enumerated	1 cent per bottle.
Red wines of Spain in casks	2 cents per gal.
Wines of all countries, in bottles, unless especially enumerated	3 cents a bottle.
Sherry and Madeira wines	10 cents a gallon.

The above duties will be gradually still further reduced at the rate of 10 per cent. a year, under the compromise act.

MALVERSATION OF A NEW YORK SENATOR. In the New York senate, on Tuesday last week, a letter was read by the chairman of a committee appointed to investigate the alleged conduct of certain senators in abstracting the funds of the Commercial bank at Albany, the cashier of which, it will be remembered, some months ago absconded. The letter was from an individual named Davis Benedict, who stated that the hon. I. W. Bishop, senator from the 4th district, had, in the spring of 1835, a debt against a gentleman who was an applicant for the appointment of auctioneer, and who had been nominated by the governor; that the hon. I. W. Bishop told the applicant, or his friends, that he should not have the office, or that he would oppose his appointment, unless he paid him, the hon. I. W. Bishop, the four hundred dollars he owed him. Not having the money with him, he applied to a friend, who lent him the money to pay the hon. I. W. Bishop, and then he, the hon. I. W. Bishop, withdrew his opposition to the appointment, and it was confirmed. The letter also stated that the debt was contracted at the gambling table, and the circumstances were known to Mr. Livingston, senator from the 1st district.

Mr. Livingston, in his place, confirmed the allegations contained in the letter, and Mr. Bishop, in his place, admitted them to be substantially true.

The letter was then referred to the committee, of which Mr. Young was chairman, with all necessary forms in relation to it.

POLITICS AND BUSINESS. A Mr. Joseph W. Walker, of Nashville, publishes the following card, in reply to a notice published in one of the papers of that city, requesting him to become a candidate for a high military office:

"Mr. Editor: I was as much surprised as flattered at seeing in the Union of this morning a notice requesting me to become a candidate for colonel commandant of the Nashville regiment. In conjunction with Mr. A. B. Robertson, we have purchased the very extensive and general assortment of shoes, boots and hats of Messrs. H. T. Yeatman & Co. and wish the undivided support of all my friends in that line of business. We will give great bargains, for cash, or to punctual men, on the most liberal terms. I decline running for the office.

"JOS. W. WALKER.
"P. S.—I would prefer the office of major general for this division, as he has to turn out only once a year.

BANKS, CURRENCY, COIN, &c.

"There has been coined already upward of six millions of dollars of the new gold coins. The whole of the Neapolitan and French indemnification money has been ordered home in gold. This will give five millions more to be coined and circulated this year. Besides adding this sum to the gold circulation of the country, it is such the most beneficial mode for the claimants, of withdrawing the money from abroad."

[Washington Globe.

The N. Y. Commercial Advertiser remarks on the preceding—

And yet, notwithstanding all the boastings of the executive organ on the subject of the gold currency, what are the facts? Last week a government agent came to this city to obtain from the deposit banks, gold to take to Florida to pay the troops. He could not get it. Ten thousand dollars in gold was all he could obtain. The bills of the deposit banks he well knew would not be received in the far south; and as the U. States bank, as such, has been killed, he could not get exchange. The consequence was, that he had to ship one hundred and fifty thousand dollars in silver by the steamboat for Charleston, to be transported thence to the places where wanted, as best it can.

[The fact is, we suppose, that a large part of the gold that has been coined, is locked up from circulation, in the dark vaults of the banks that are independent of the government, or in the private stores of the women of our country, or kept in reserve for pocket pieces, or for exhibition, as the case may be.]

"Aha! it's a most 'lection time," said a farmer the other day, as he took pay for his load of wheat. "How do you know?" inquired a by-stander. "'Cause here's a yellow boy—the first one I've seen since last governor's 'lection."

[Rochester Democrat.]

In spite of the Globe's demonstrations of the impossibility of the fact we mentioned the other day, that Ohio bank notes are at three per cent. discount in Philadelphia, we repeat the statement, and ask the official's brethren here to disprove it, if they can, for the comfort of their friend. [Nat. Gazette.]

THE CURRENCY. From the Globe. This is a subject which concerns the public so much, that every individual, be he of what political party he may, must wish to have correct information of what is done, or intended to be done, or attempted in congress towards redeeming the promises which the friends of the administration have made in favor of gold, and against a small paper currency. Acting under this impression, we collect into one article all that our congressional proceedings afford, and will note from time to time the progress of such measures as are yet in embryo.

1. The amendment of Mr. Benton to the pension bill. This has been agreed to by the house of representatives, and may be considered as a law. Its provisions are threefold: 1. That no bank note shall be offered by the federal government or the post office department, of less denomination than ten dollars, from and after the passing of the act; 2. That no note shall be so offered after the 3d day of March next, of less denomination than twenty dollars; 3. That no note of the prohibited denomination shall be so offered, unless, it is payable and paid on demand in gold and silver at the place where issued, and equivalent to specie at the place where offered, and convertible into gold or silver upon the spot, at the will of the holder, and without loss or delay to him. This amendment is a general and permanent law, and passed the two houses with great unanimity; the gentlemen of the opposition voting for it with no other objection, than that of showing a preference for it as it originally stood, namely, the prohibition for off-lying notes under twenty dollars, to take effect at once instead of being divided into two stages.

2. The report and bill of Mr. Gillet, of N. York, chairman of the select committee of the house of representatives on the gold coinage. This report contains a great many valuable facts and suggestions both on our coinage and paper currency. It states that on the first of January, 1835, there were seven hundred and four banks, including branches, in the United States, with an aggregate chartered capital of $231,000,000, and well supposes that the banks chartered since will swell this capital to 300 millions. These banks, as near as can be ascertained, have the privilege of issuing 750,000,000 of dollars in paper. It states that these banks have enormously increased their paper issues within two years past—five of them have added above fifteen millions to their circulation. The report then enforces the necessity of diminishing the paper circulation, especially small notes, and increasing the gold circulation, and recommends the coinage of one, two, three and four dollar pieces.

3. Mr. Benton's bill for better supplying the mint with bullion and metals for coining. The main object is to obtain adequate supplies of gold for the gold coinage. The means proposed are, 1. To make the public revenue subservient to that object; 2. To induce individuals and banks to send in better supplies, by repealing the tax of one-half per cent. on the coinage. With respect to the revenues, the plans is only giving effect to a law of 1793, which, though still in force, has become inoperative, by change of circumstances. That act directed all the foreign coins, except Spanish milled dollars, which were received in payment of revenues, to be carried to the mint, and re-coined anew before they were put into circulation; and as nothing but gold and silver was then receivable, this law was well calculated to supply the mint abundantly; but the calculation soon failed: the bank of the United States was chartered, and its notes made receivable; and the bank was not required to furnish bullion to the mint. The consequence has been, that the mint, in forty years, has coined but 17,956,335 dollars in gold, and $43,133,082 in silver, of which the two last years have been far the most abundant, producing 6,140,445 dollars in gold, and $6,858,005 in silver; the aggregate for the two years being $12,998,410, say thirteen millions. The whole coinage for thirty years is shown in Mr. Gillet's excellent report, from which these details are taken, to be $51,816,650, of which thirteen millions is more than the one-fifth part.

4. Mr. Benton's propositions for requiring the deposit banks to come into the policy of suppressing the small note currency, and promoting the circulation of gold.

The following are his propositions, as heretofore printed under the congressional head:

"Mr. Benton submitted the following amendment to the bill to regulate the deposits of the public moneys, and moved that it be printed for the information of the senate; which motion was agreed to:

"Sec. — And be it further enacted, That no bank shall hereafter be employed or continued as a depository of the moneys of the United States or of the post office, which shall not, by an authentic act, filed with the secretary of the treasury before the next stated meeting of congress, agree to the following terms and conditions:

"First. To proceed in good faith, and as speedily as possible, to make its specie capital consist of gold and silver, and as nearly as may be of equal proportions of each.

"Second. To pay the demands of the United States and of the post office department in gold and silver; the proportion of gold to be as large as the bank, in good faith, can pay, until the 3d day of March, in the year 1838, from and after which time the proportion to be paid shall be one-half in either coin, at the option of the demander; the other half at the option of the bank.

"Third. To pay all the notes or paper currency issued or put in circulation by it, in gold and silver; the option of the demander, from and after the third day of March, 1837, being for one-half of either, and of the bank for the other half.

"Fourth. To discontinue the use and circulation of all paper currency of less denomination than twenty dollars, as follows, less than five dollars, immediately; less than ten dollars, from and after the third day of March, 1837; less than twenty dollars, from and after the third day of March, in the year 1838."

5. Mr. Benton's bill for re-establishing the currency of the constitution for the federal government. Notice for the introduction of this bill was given on Thursday, and from what could be obtained of its provisions it seemed that the author proposed to take the twenty dollar limit, which has become a law, as his starting point, and to cut off different denominations of bank notes, gradually and periodically, until the act of 1789 can be re-established and nothing but gold and silver be receivable or payable on account of the United States or the post office.

6. The select committee of the house of representatives on the re-charter of the District banks, of which Mr. Thomas, of Maryland, is chairman. This committee is known to be highly favorable to a metallic currency, and it is believed that they will report provisions to encourage gold and discourage small paper.

This committee and its laborers may then be looked upon as one of the most important currency operations of the session; for although nominally charged with the banking of a district, yet that District is the seat of government, and the banks chartered for it may become the standard for all deposit banks, and the model for all state banks; and thus a great reform be indirectly effected upon the whole banking system of the union.

In conclusion, we have to congratulate the country upon the effect already produced upon the public mind on the subject of currency, and also on the currency itself. The public mind has never, since the paper times of the revolution, been as wide awake and as justly jealous of the evils of the paper system, as at present; the hard money currency has never before been as abundant. Now, for the first time in thirty years, congress is paid in gold. It has been so paid for two sessions.

The desperate attempts of the Washington Globe, to excite the other states of the union against Pennsylvania, on account of the passage in her legislature of the United States bank bill, are strongly rebuked in many of the most devoted administration journals. The Mobile Register observes—"So far as this is a Pennsylvania measure of finance, it is not for others than Pennsylvanians to remonstrate against it. There is no right on their borders to interfere with their privilege to act as they please."

[Philadelphia Gaz.]

New York, April 15. We yesterday stated that money was at present bringing an interest at the rate of from 30 to 40 per cent. per annum. This was upon the notes of men of business, widely known in the community, and whose paper was just as good by that of any bank in Wall street. In other cases the rate of discount is far greater. We have been informed by one of the brokers of this city that the notes of good men, but who were not known as men of business, were selling at the rate of one-half per cent. per day, or fifteen per cent. per month. One thousand dollars loaned out at this rate, with the interest paid every month and added to the principal, would in one year amount to $5,300. What an enormous interest.

United States branch bank at Erie, Pennsylvania. Among the acts recently passed by the legislature is one authorizing the establishment of a branch of the bank of the United States at Erie. It was approved and signed by the governor the last night of the session. The great and growing trade of the lakes will make this branch a most important one. The branch recently sold out at Buffalo was valuable, but will be far exceeded in usefulness to the commercial community by the one now authorized.

The Baltimore Chronicle says: We learn from a source of undisputed accuracy, that drafts to a very large amount, drawn by one of the pet banks in the west, upon the Girard bank of Philadelphia, were sold in this city, a few days ago, at a discount of the cent. How much better than the drafts of the branches of the monster, which are at par!

From the National Intelligencer of Tuesday last:

The secretary of the treasury sent to the senate yesterday his answer to the call made by the resolution of Mr. Calhoun last week, for a statement of the amount of money in the treasury on the 1st of the present month, where deposited, and the amount of liabilities of the several banks of deposit, respectively, with their means of meeting the same; and also the receipts of the treasury for the quarter ending the 31st of last month.

We shall endeavor to insert the report at large as soon as it is printed. At present we are enabled, from a hasty examination of it, to give only the two principal facts disclosed by it—namely, the amount of the revenue for the last quarter, and the total amount of unappropriated money now in the treasury.

The secretary states that the receipts into the treasury during the quarter ending the 31st day of the last month, were—

From customs.....	$5,006,050
From the public lands.....	5,439,650
Miscellaneous.....	280,000

Total for the quarter.....$10,725,700

And that the amount of public money in the treasury (that is, in the deposit banks), on the 31st day of the last month, was $31,895,155.

Thus, it appears that the revenue of the government for the first quarter of the year was near eleven millions of dollars, and the amount of the public money now lying in the pet banks is thirty-two millions of dollars—and this enormous, this unheard-of surplus daily swelling by fresh payments into the treasury.

The disposition of this immense sum presents a question of the deepest concern to the people and of the deepest responsibility on those to whom the disposition of it belongs: but the custody of so vast an amount of public treasury involves a question of still greater import.

We are informed that the corporate authorities of the city of Washington have recently burned $43,979 of due bills, and passed a law prohibiting a further issue, and to break up the plates for printing them.

The New York Star says that on Saturday last five hundred dollars were given for the loan of thirty thousand dollars for one day!

From the National Intelligencer of Wednesday last. It is remarkable that while money is so scarce as in New York to command, in some cases, a premium of ten per cent. a month from the safest borrowers, the prices of labor and subsistence are unusually high. This is a very curious fact, and is without precedent, we believe, in the history of this country. It can only be accounted for by the circumstances equally unprecedented of the government having thirty odd millions of dollars locked up in the deposit banks, and a large proportion of that amount of the currency consequently withheld from circulation. In fact, the government is rapidly absorbing all the money of the country, and if something be not done, and done speedily, to restore to circulation and usefulness a part at least of the enormous sum which has accumulated in the treasury, the most distressing consequences to the community must ensue. Mr. Webster pressed the consideration with great force, in the senate of Monday, to show the urgency of immediate and effectual legislation in regard to the disposition of the surplus revenue.

As a matter connected with this subject of the revenue, we may refer to the developments made in the senate on Monday by Mr. Ewing, of Ohio, of the effects which are beginning to manifest themselves in the west, from the system of bank favoritism adopted by the executive government in regard to the custody of the public revenue.

The whole specie of New York, Philadelphia and Boston is constantly in transitu. The New York Star states that the same boat which carries half a million of specie to Boston, will, within two days, bring back a like sum. The rail road cars between New York and Philadelphia, are carrying specie backward and forward every day. We call upon a broker in Wall street for a draft on Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Charleston or New Orleans; he sells it at one, two, or five per cent. premium, or at a discount, receives the money, and at once presents the bills at the banks for specie, which is transmitted to the point at which the draft is payable, to meet it on presentation—and in this manner the specie is in the constant progress of transmission, without affording any substantial basis for bank note circulation. [Chronicle.]

The Boston Daily Advertiser of last week, commences its review of the market with the following remarks:

"There has evidently been a great falling off in the amount of business transactions for three or four weeks past, solely on account of the scarcity of money, and the difficulty with which negotiations are effected. The lowest street rate for the best of notes has been, during the present week, one per cent. per month, and no doubt much has been done at a higher rate. So long as this pressure upon the very vitals of trade continues, a comparatively meagre detail of weekly operations in merchandise, generally, must be expected."

MR. VAN BUREN AND THE BANK, &c.

Washington, Feb. 23, 1836.

GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, inviting me in behalf of the friends of free principles in Cincinnati, Hamilton county, to attend their proposed celebration of the deliverance of our country from the thralldom of the bank of the United States, and asking from me, in case it should not be convenient for me to attend, a sentiment appropriate to the occasion.

There have been, in my opinion, few incidents in our political history, more worthy of notice, by means of a public celebration, than the one you are about thus to distinguish. The successful resistance to the Herculean efforts brought to bear upon the bank question, was a result most honorable to those by whose immediate agency it was effected, and certainly not less so to a virtuous and patriotic people, by whom their faithful representatives were cheered and sustained.

However plausible the speculations, or successful the concealments of the day, the design of the bank to extort a renewal of its charter from the apprehensions and distresses of the country, has been rendered too clear by time to be any longer contested. To speak of the mighty means which this aristocratic institution called to its aid in the great struggle through which we have passed, would be to suppose, what is scarcely possible, that the dark traces of that gloomy period can ever be obliterated from the public remembrance. But the bank mistook the character of that people whose stubborn neck it proposed to bend to its selfish interests and sinister designs. It was rebuked and discomfited—but by no means discouraged. The people triumphed in that open contest, but before time had been allowed for seasonable celebrations of that triumph—even since your festival has been appointed, and before the day has arrived for the expression of your joy—the same power, fighting under the same panoply, but changing altogether the character of its approach, has again entered the field, and gained a victory over the popular will, which it doubtless considers brilliant and resistless. But how changed the mode of warfare in this last effort! Instead of commercial distress, public and private embarrassment, and all the concomitants of an uncontrollable panic in the public mind, plenty and even profusion pervaded the city of the bank, while its noiseless approach to the legislative power was characterized by a despatch altogether unprecedented, in so important a matter, in the history of legislation. Before even the movement is known in the remote quarters of the union, the public mind is astounded by the acquisition of a charter from the government of a single state, the apprehended grant of which by congress had filled the minds of a vast majority of the American people with dismay; and for the attainment of which from that body, all the powers of earth had been invoked in vain.

You will do right not to suffer this event, untoward as it is, to deter you from rejoicing at the victory which the whole people have won. Leaving the partial success of the bank and its consequences to the consideration and disposition of a virtuous and justly offended public, it is a matter of the highest congratulation, that the advances of this presumptuous institution upon the federal government, at least, have been successfully arrested. In that quarter our victory is, to all appearances, complete, but whether or not it is to be permanent, must depend in a great degree upon the states. Nothing short of the madness of state legislation can prevent it being so. It was in the inexcusable improvidence of state legislation that the present bank found its origin, and it is to the same source, doubtless, that it looks for a resuscitation. Time will soon determine whether the well disposed men of the present day are wiser than were their predecessors; or whether the lights of a most severe experience have been shed upon this subject to no good purpose.

As far as your growing and patriotic state is concerned, the prospect is cheering indeed. From the bottom of my heart do I congratulate you upon the noble stand which Ohio appears to have taken, at this critical moment, upon the subject of banks.

Her course is deserving of all commendation, and may well be looked to by her older sisters in the confederacy, not only with admiration, but with profit. Who can have forgotten the intense anxiety and warmly cherished hope with which Mr. Jefferson looked to his favorite west, to the hard yeomanry of the new states, for the preservation of the simplicity and purity of our republican institutions, against the seductive influences, and artificial distinctions in society, to which the Atlantic states were peculiarly exposed? Who can forget the deep tone of regret with which he contemplated a disappointment? May we not safely look upon the noble example which the largest, and certainly not the least patriotic of the new states is now offering to her confederates, as the sure promise of a new and brighter day than that foreboded by this great and good man? May we not further hope that those who, by their position, by their pursuits, and by their every interest, have the greatest stake in the greatest cause of equal rights, will also make it the object of their highest ambition to be among the foremost to uphold the constitution in the letter and spirit of that sacred instrument; and to preserve in its entire purity the simple but happy system of government, under which we have hitherto so securely lived and so greatly flourished?

To have been first selected by your state as a candidate for the presidency, I shall ever regard as one of the most gratifying incidents of my public life; yet I cannot adequately express to you how much this distinction, so well calculated in itself to command my unceasing gratitude, is enhanced in my estimation, by the conviction that Ohio will maintain this high stand upon this all important subject.

Nothing would give me more unfeigned pleasure than to assist in person in your commendable effort to rivet upon the public mind the vast importance of the great event you commemorate, were it in my power to do so; but I regret that it is not in my power.

In complying with your request to furnish a sentiment for the occasion, my mind is necessarily turned to him, who, during the stormy period to which your attention is directed, was emphatically the helmsman of the ship, without whose quick eye and strong arm, she must have yielded to the tempest. I know well that where so many did their duty firmly and fearlessly, this is saying a great deal for the service of any one man, and yet I am fully convinced I do no more than simple justice. Such was the opinion formed from my own observation, with the best possible means of coming to a correct conclusion. Such I believe to be the undisputed opinion of his contemporaries such must be the judgment of posterity. I therefore give you, gentlemen,

Andrew Jackson. No one has done more than he, to advance the great principle of self government, expounded by Jefferson, and established on the battle field by Washington.

I have the honor to be, gentlemen, very respectfully, yours,
MARTIN VAN BUREN.

A GOOD ACT—OF NEW JERSEY.

AN ACT TO RELIEVE THE POOR.

Sec. 1. Be it enacted by the council and general assembly of this state, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, That from and after the fourth day of July next, one cow, one bed and bedding, one cradle, one stove, one half cord of fire wood, one half ton of stone coal, one spinning wheel, one table, six chairs, one hog, one hundred weight of flour, one iron cooking pot, one dozen knives and forks, one dozen plates, one dozen spoons, one half dozen bowls, two pairs, one barrel, one coffee pot, one tub, one frying pan, the necessary tools of a tradesman not exceeding in value ten dollars, and all wearing apparel the property of any debtor having a family, shall be reserved for the use of the family against all creditors; and shall not be liable to be seized or taken by virtue of any process whatever, issued out of any court in this state, for any debt contracted after the passage of this act.

COL. FRANCIS VIGO.

From the Terra Haute, (Indiana), Courier.

It is with the deepest regret we announce the death of the venerable and patriotic FRANCIS VIGO, who departed this life at his late residence in Knox county, on the 22d ultimo. Few men have done more for their country than colonel VIGO, and none, perhaps, no not one, have met with a poorer recompense for his many sacrifices to the public cause. A native of Sardinia, he early emigrated to America, and, by his industry and public spirit, amassed a princely fortune, every dollar of which, long since, has either gone to support the starving and perishing army of general George Rogers Clark, in the conquest of our present soil, or been expended in the exhibition of those hospitalities for which the old man was so long proverbial. Though born the subject of a king, FRANCIS VIGO was by nature a republican, and through a long life of chequered prosperity and adversity, maintained that character to the last moments of his existence. The early settlers of this country knew him well, and though the writer of these few lines had but a slight knowledge of him, personally, his history—his patriotism—his sacrifices—and his misfortunes, are deeply engraven on his mind. His purse, in early life, was cast at the feet of his adopted country—his credit was her's—his services and even his life, was thrown into the scale of American liberty and independence. When the army was without a dollar, colonel VIGO was its banker—when it had no credit, he was its endorser—when it had no friend, he was its guide through the wilderness, and in its defeats and its triumphs, the daring Sardinian was always at his post. The public archives of Virginia bear testimony to his devotion to the cause of our common country, and that ancient commonwealth has already acknowledged the justice of colonel VIGO's claim to pecuniary remuneration. Though living in comparative indigence for many years—almost depending on the hand of charity for sustenance—it has been found that government was his debtor to the amount of thirty odd thousand dollars, for money advanced and necessities furnished the Virginia troops during the early wars of the west. Too patriotic to urge his claims, or too proud to beg at the door of congress for his rights, the venerable man has been dragging out a life of poverty and want, while hundreds of miscreants have fattened on the spoils of the treasury, and rioted on the plunder of the public service. The plentiful and profuse board had long since given way to the scanty repast, and the silence of the halls where he once entertained his friends, was only broken by the solitary step of some kind citizen who bent his way to the "earthly house" of the afflicted but unyielding patriot. The man who once sustained armies—whose private munificence and public spirit made glad the heart of the suffering soldier—closed his eventful but virtuous life without a vestige of the wealth he so freely dispensed to others. An enterprising citizen or two of Knox county, lately undertook to prosecute his claim on the government, and, much to the gratification of colonel VIGO's numerous friends, have succeeded in getting its justice acknowledged. When the old man heard that his claim was allowed—that his country was just—and the remainder of his days would be rendered comparatively comfortable, he calmly replied: "I always knew my country was just—that she would indemnify her citizens for every sacrifice made in her behalf; but in this case, it comes too late. It is like furnishing a guest with mustard after dinner!" So, indeed, it was. The frosts of more than ninety winters had shaken the iron constitution of the deceased patriot, and after a short struggle, the good old man went to the "house appointed for all the living," with the benedictions of all who love their country, and the regret of those who honor its defenders.

A CAPITAL PORTRAIT. From the Cincinnati Farmer.

PETER BRUSH was in a dilapidated condition; out at elbows, out at knees, out of pockets, out of spirits, and out in the street; an "out and outer" in every respect. He sat upon the curbstone, leaning his head upon his hand, his elbow being placed upon a stepping stone. Mr. Brush had for some time been silent, absorbed in deep thought, which he relieved at intervals by spitting through his teeth forlornly into the gutter. At length, heaving a deep sigh, he spoke. "They used to tell me—put not your trust in princes—and I hav'n't. None of 'em never wanted to borrow nothing of me. Princes! pooh! Put not your trust in politicians! them's my sentiments. There's no two mediums about that. Hav'n't I been serving my country these five years, like a patriot; going to meetings and huzza-ing my daylight out, and getting as blue as blazes; hav'n't I blocked the windows, got licked fifty times, carried I don't know how many black eyes and broken noses, for the good of the commonwealth and the popularity of our illegal rights, and all for what? Why, for nix.

"If any good has come out of it, the country has put the whole of it in her pocket, and swindled me out of my earnings. I can get no office! Republics is ungrateful! I didn't want no reward for my services, I only wanted to be took care of and have nothing to do; and I've only got half nothing to do! Being took care of was the main thing. Republics is ungrateful, I'm swaggered if they ain't!" "Come with me," said Charley, helping him along, "I'll take care of you. But what made you a politician; haven't you got a trade?" "Trade! yes; but what's a trade when a feller's got a soul—a whole soul? Trade! I loved my country, and I wanted an office; I didn't care what, if it was fat and easy. I wanted to take care of my country, and I wanted my country to take care of me. Head-work is the trade I'm made for; talking, that's my line. Talking in the oyster cellars, in the bar-rooms, anywhere. I can talk all day, only stopping for meals and to wet my whistle. But parties is all alike. I've been all sides; tried 'em, and I know; none of 'em gave me any thing, and I've a mind to knock off and call it half a day."

BEET-ROOT SUGAR.

Our eastern brethren have lately paid much attention to a home-supply of sugar, from beets; and, as they seldom fail in any thing which they fully "take hold on," it is most probable that they will succeed.

The extent to which the manufacture of the beet-root sugar has been carried in France, will be understood by the following statements, derived by the Boston Daily Advertiser from a report made by the general council of commerce of France, dated January 25, on the expediency of imposing a tax on the manufacture of domestic sugar.

The changes of trade which success in this project will cause, and has caused in France, may be very important. Sugar is now very high—owing, perhaps, to the short crop of Louisiana; but is clearly shewn that the "abominable tariff" has had very little to do with the price of sugar and coffee and hundred of other articles.

It is there stated, on the authority of "authentic documents furnished by the minister of commerce," that the importation of colonial sugar for consumption, had been either stationary, or had retrograded, from 1829 to the end of 1835; that in the same period there had been so great an increase in the manufacture of indigenous sugar, that in place of 4,000,000 kilograms in 1829, 30,000,000 had been manufactured in 1835, and there was a promise of a great increase in 1836 and 1837. This result, of the inverse progress of the two classes of produce, is attributed by the council, to the forced legislation, which subjects colonial sugar to a duty of 49 francs 50 centimes per 100 kilograms, while indigenous sugar is left free of duty. A continuance of the system they think will cause the complete ruin, or the commercial emancipation, of the French colonies, and consequently a loss to the treasury of 30 to 35 millions now derived from the duty on sugar. They say that the present price of colonial brown sugar in the Paris market, of the quality called good fourth, is 140 francs the 100 kilograms, that is, 90¢. 50¢. for the sugar, with the cost of importation, and 49¢. 50¢. for the import duty. The price of the sugar betterave, of the same quality, at the same time, was 132¢. They state on the authority of agriculturists, and of some of the most celebrated manufacturers of the indigenous sugar, that the betterave sugar may be produced and delivered at Paris, not only at 90¢. 50¢. the 100 kilograms (the price of colonial sugar exclusive of duty) but for a much less price. As the produce of the tax on sugar cannot be dispensed with, they propose that a part only of the duty on colonial sugar should be taken off, and that its place should be supplied by a tax on the betterave. They conceive that the manufacture has not yet reached the state of perfection of which it is susceptible, and that it therefore still deserves encouragement, by being subject to a lighter duty than the manufacture from the sugar cane. They conclude by proposing a tax of 15¢. per 100 kilograms, on sugar of betterave, and a reduction of 10¢. per 100 kilograms in the import duty on colonial sugar.

These facts will serve to show how firmly the manufacture of sugar is established in France, and how rich a source of profit it must be to the agricultural industry of the country. The produce of 1835, amounting to 30 millions of kilograms—equal to more than 60 millions of pounds, is worth, at the price stated, nearly 40 millions of francs, or $8,000,000. In further proof of the importance which is attached to this manufacture in Europe, we publish the following note, which we have just received from a mercantile friend, whose suggestions are always worthy of attention.

To the editor: Sir: I read in your paper of Saturday, the 2d inst. the very interesting letter of Mr. Isaïd on the production of sugar from beets.

On the same day I received the commercial state of one of the great European marts, from a correspondent of high standing. In this he says, "The fabrication of beet-root in France, not exceeding four million pounds, in 1828 amounts in 1835 to *forty million pounds, with the certainty of a further considerable increase, which may in course of time lead to a great crisis in sugars and the West India colonies, should the fabrication of beet-root sugar be followed up in other parts of Europe with the same energy."

Have we not reason to expect that this cultivation may be attempted in some of the western states, where there are millions of acres, having soil so rich, that, here, it would be called good manure. I am not an agriculturist, but cannot but think we have land where beets would grow to the size of handy firewood, and that we could far outdo the French in tons of beets per acre—to others I shall leave the estimate of labor to convert them into sugar.

We were surprised, on looking the other day, at a specimen of sugar, exhibited at the exchange which was manufactured in France from the common beet-root, to find, that the cost per lb. was only ½ cent. What would be the price with the cost of importation added, we cannot exactly tell; but if sugar can be made from the beet root in France, the thing can certainly be done in America, where the esculent is to be found in abundance. A knowledge of the modus operandi in manufacturing, is all that is requisite. Either imported or manufactured, there can be little doubt that it would command a ready sale. The grain is fine, and of the purest white; and the quality of this kind of sugar is, to say the least, for sweetness and strength, equal to any other sort. [Phil. Gaz.]

TWENTY-FOURTH CONGRESS—FIRST SESSION.

SENATE.

April 14. The bill respecting the public lands was amended, in various instances, and then laid upon the table.

The senate proceeded to consider the message from the house of representatives, insisting on their amendment to the bill to establish a territorial government in the territory of Wisconsin.

Mr. Buchanan moved to appoint a committee of conference. Mr. Knight wished to be first assured whether there was not a majority of the senate who would be willing to recede, and called the yeas and nays on the motion, and they were ordered.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. Buchanan, and decided as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Brown, Buchanan, Calhoun, Crittenden, Cuthbert, Ewing, of Illinois, Goldsborough, Grundy, Hubbard, King, of Alab. King, of Georgia, Linn, Porter, Rives, Robbins, Robinson, Ruggles, Walker, Wall, Webster, Wright—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Clay, Davis, Ewing, of Ohio, Hendricks, Hill, Kent, Knight, Mangum, Morris, Naudain, Nicholas, Niles, Prentiss, Shepley, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson, White—18.

It was then ordered that the committee of conference consist of three senators; and,

On motion of Mr. Porter, they were appointed by the chair, and ordered to consist of Mr. Buchanan, Mr. Webster and Mr. Shepley.

April 15. Mr. Goldsborough presented a memorial of the citizens of Baltimore, on the subject of clearing the ice, by means of an ice-breaker, in the harbor of that city.

Mr. Calhoun presented the petition of — Melville, formerly a weigher and gauger in the custom house at Newport, R. I. and who was turned out of office in March, 1835, under circumstances alleged to be of extraordinary oppression.

Some debate ensued on this petition. The case was admitted to be one which required examination, and the petition was referred to the committee on commerce, and, with the documents, ordered to be printed.

Mr. Goldsborough, from the committee on military affairs, to whom was referred the memorial of certain officers and soldiers praying that a chaplain may be allowed, reported a bill to make provision for chaplains at the different military posts; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. Kent offered the following resolution; which lies over for consideration:

Resolved, That the president of the United States be requested to open negotiations with the government of France, as soon as the diplomatic intercourse between the two countries shall be renewed, for the purpose of placing our trade in tobacco with that country upon a more liberal footing than the existing system of administration "en regie" admits of, and corresponding better with the generous spirit exhibited heretofore, as well as at this time, by the United States, in reducing the duties on various products from that country.

*This is one-third more than the crop of New Orleans sugar for the same year.

On motion of Mr. King, of Alabama, the senate proceeded to consider the bill to provide for the distribution of the proceeds of the public lands, &c. when

Mr. Benton addressed the senate at length, for the purpose of showing that the erection of necessary fortifications would absorb the surplus revenue, and that the bill now before the senate was antagonistic to the system of national defence recommended by the president, and the situation of the country.

Mr. Ewing, of Ohio, said a few words, on which he stated that the impression in his mind, from a perusal of the message of the president, was, that the president and the heads of the war and navy departments are not in favor of such extended appropriations as were now recommended.

Mr. Benton made a brief explanation, when the bill was, for the present laid on the table.

The senate adjourned until Monday.

April 18. Mr. Hendricks presented the petition of William Patterson, of the city of Dublin, in Ireland, representing that he has invented a valuable improvement in the art of tanning hides and skins, by an article not heretofore used for that purpose; applicable, also, to tanning ropes and sails, and to dyeing. He wishes to take out a patent from the United States, and, not being a citizen, he prays that that part of the patent law be dispensed with which requires citizenship, and a residence of two years, and that a patent be granted to him, or to his representative in the United States. Referred to the committee on the judiciary.

Mr. Buchanan, from the committee of conference appointed in reference to the disagreeing votes of the two houses, on an item in the bill establishing a territorial government in the territory of Wisconsin, made a report.

The report, which recommended to the senate to recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the house, having been read,

The question was taken on receding, and decided in the affirmative.

Mr. Grundy moved the senate to take up for consideration the bill to authorise the making of contracts for carrying the mails, with the rail road companies, stating that he had no wish to embarrass the progress of another bill. He hoped this bill would be taken up, and that some progress be made in it at this time.

The bill was read.

After a long debate, the bill was laid on the table for the present; and the senate proceeded to consider the bill making a distribution of the proceeds of the public lands.

On motion of Mr. Ewing, the senate took up the bill to provide for the distribution of the public lands; and

On motion of Mr. Mangum, the senate adjourned.

[A good deal of preparatory business was attended to this day.]

April 19. After the presentation of petitions, &c.

Mr. Ewing, of Ohio, offered the following resolution, and asked for its consideration:

Resolved, That the secretary of the treasury be directed to inform the senate what amount of moneys of the United States received for public lands in the states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Missouri, and the Michigan territory, has been, in pursuance of his instructions, transferred to banks in the eastern cities, since the 30th of June, 1835; and that he designate the banks from and to which such transfers have been made; that he also inform the senate whether any such transfers are now ordered; and whether any of the deposit banks in the above-named states or territory have authority to direct what money shall be received for public lands in the districts for which they are the depositories.

Mr. E. said he had received from several quarters a circular directed by one of the deposit banks in the state of Ohio to the other banks in that state, the extraordinary character of which had induced him to make the inquiries specified in the resolution, and ask (said Mr. E.) that the circular may be read.

CIRCULAR.

Clinton bank of Columbus, April 1, 1836.

Sir: The large amount of paper received from the land offices, and the difficulty and expense of converting it into funds receivable by the treasury department in the eastern cities, (whither nearly the whole amount is necessarily required to be transmitted) will compel this institution in future to decline receiving through that channel the paper of all the banks of the state, other than the deposit banks, that will not consent to redeem the paper so received, by DRAFTS on New York, Philadelphia or Baltimore, payable thirty days from date, AT PAR!

Permit me to inquire whether it is the wish of your institution that your paper shall be received upon these terms?

Instances occur daily, of eastern funds being converted, at a profit, into the paper of the local banks, which is paid into the land offices, and the burden of converting the paper again into eastern funds is thrown upon the institutions receiving the public deposits.

You are aware that we have heretofore received the paper of all the banks of the state, without condition or discrimination. We regret that the rapid sale of the public domain, and the premium which it costs to convert such paper into the medium in which our remittances are made, will not permit us to continue to do so.

Be pleased to let us hear from you in reply, as early as practicable.

In the mean time, we have directed the receivers who deposit here, not to receive, after the 20th instant, the paper of any bank of the state, (other than the deposit banks), unless hereafter instructed to that effect by this institution.

Very respectfully,

J. DELAFIELD, jr. cashier.

I wish to know, (said Mr. E.) whether nearly all the moneys received for the sale of the public lands in Ohio are in fact transferred by order of the secretary of the treasury to the city of New York, and the other eastern cities, and, if so, I wish to know why this is done? There is already in deposit in New York a very large amount of the public money, for which there is no present or probable future use; an amount, I believe, exceeding TEN MILLIONS of dollars in that single city, and large sums in the other Atlantic cities. Why is it then, that, of the small amount, the mere modicum of the public moneys which are received in Ohio, "nearly the whole amount is necessarily required to be transmitted" to these same eastern cities? If this be so, as stated in that circular, and I have no doubt it is, for there is no question whatever of the veracity of the gentleman at the head of that institution, I wish to know what public necessity or public convenience has required the secretary of the treasury to drain this money from the west, and lodge it in the deposit banks in the great cities. There are some other matters indicated by this circular, of which I wish to be informed. It is stated there, that orders have been given by that deposit bank to the receivers of public money of the United States, who make deposits at that bank, that they shall not after the 20th of April, receive any notes of the Ohio banks, other than deposit banks, in payment for land, unless thereafter directed so to do; and they make it a condition to such directions, that the banks shall agree to pay the amount of their notes so received—not in specie—no, that will not do, but in drafts on some of the eastern cities at 30 days' date, at par. Such drafts are worth from one to two and a half per cent. advance; and this is the tax that this deposit bank levies upon its neighbors for the privilege of having their notes made receivable by the treasury of the United States. This is a very important power, and a very profitable one, and if it be in fact vested by the secretary of the treasury in the deposit banks, it is time that the public should be informed of it.

There are in the state of Ohio, if I have counted them right, thirty-four banks, with a capital of a little more than nine millions of dollars. Most of them have been in operation about 20 years, and have at all times, since the restoration of specie payments in 1818, preserved the highest character for solvency and stability. I hold in my hand a report of their condition, made to the legislature of Ohio in January last, which is subject to the inspection of any gentleman who wishes to examine it. It shows a strength and soundness in their condition not excelled, and I incline to think, not equalled by any like number of banks in the United States. There is no question about their perfect ability to answer all their engagements.

This bank, which, by virtue of power derived from the treasury, is about to control and limit the circulation of its thirty-two neighbors, all of equal credit and ability with itself, went into operation not more than two years ago. Its capital, amounting to $288,680, is nearly half owned out of the state; and it is not acceptable to the other banks, nor do I think it is to the public generally, that this kind of control should be given to this new institution, so large a part of which is owned by capitalists in the cities, over the other well known and long tried institutions of the state. The banks do not like it; but some of them, for reasons not explained to me, are unwilling to be known as complaining of it. I received this circular, as I observed, from several quarters, and some of them require me not to say who sent it to me. I suppose they are afraid that the deposit bank would resent the communication; and a war with that bank, carried on, as it would be, by ammunition drawn from the treasury of the United States, is rather to be dreaded than rashly incurred.

The banks, however, must, I presume, refuse the terms imposed upon them by the deposit bank, and permit their notes to be so far discredited as a refusal to receive them for the public lands will tend to their discredit. Exchange is high and difficult to be procured; I have been told that it has, within the present spring, come up to two and a half per cent. It ranges, I have no doubt, from one to one and a half in the regular course of business. What this bank then demands of the other banks is this premium upon all their notes that it may receive for lands—so much more than gold and silver, which they are all ready to pay at their counters.

This bank, then, requires the receivers of public moneys to take none of the notes on the banks of the state for lands except the notes of the deposit banks, and there are but two of them out of the thirty-four. An individual who wishes to purchase lands gets his money principally in notes of the banks of the state, part on one bank and part on another. This money will not buy land, and he cannot go round among the banks to get specie for it; and if he could it would be very inconvenient to carry silver, (and there is no gold among us yet), into the woods for such an object. He, therefore, if he knows of this regulation, must go to this deposit bank, and make exchanges for their paper. Thus the other banks lose their share of the circulation; the purchaser pays a premium to the deposit bank for the exchange, or, in the expressive language of the country, he gets his paper shaved, and the notes are returned upon the state banks for specie. Or, perhaps, the farmer, who goes out to purchase land, does not know of this regulation, and takes his money out, as used to be done, in notes on good specie-paying banks. He suits himself in his tract of land and proposes to make the entry. He takes out his cash and is told that it will not do; he must have notes of the deposit banks. What, then, must he return without making his purchase? No, not so. I venture the conjecture that there will be a shaving shop very near the receiver's office, where he can get his money shaved by paying about $5 on the hundred, and receive for it the paper of some one of the deposit banks.

I wish to know, Mr. President, whether this state of things, as set forth in this circular, does exist, and must continue to exist; whether the public money received for land in the west is, and must continue to be, nearly all transferred to the eastern cities. And I wish to know, also, whether the secretary of the treasury has authorized any one or more banks in Ohio to direct what money shall and what shall not be received for public lands in that state and in the neighboring states. To obtain this information I have offered this resolution.

The resolution was then agreed to.

Other business being attended to—

The senate proceeded to consider the bill to provide for the distribution of the proceeds of the public lands among the several states, and granting lands to certain states.

The question being on the motion of Mr. Benton to strike out the clause granting lands to Missouri,

Mr. Southard addressed the senate at length.

About half past 3, Mr. Southard, being fatigued, gave way for a motion to adjourn.

The motion was withdrawn; and,

On motion of Mr. Preston, the senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business; and, after remaining a short time with closed doors, the senate adjourned.

April 20. After some unimportant business had been attended to—

The senate proceeded to consider the bill to appropriate the proceeds of the public lands among the several states, and granting lands to certain states; when

Mr. Southard resumed his observations commenced yesterday, and spoke at some length, in conclusion.

After Mr. Southard had concluded,

Mr. Wright rose to address the senate in reply to Mr. Southard, and continued until after 4 o'clock, when he gave way to a motion to adjourn; and, on motion of Mr. Robinson, the senate adjourned.

April 21. Mr. Webster reported a bill to repeal the 14th section of the act relating to the United States bank, without amendment.

The bill to distribute the avails of the public lands among the several states was taken up.

Mr. Wright resumed and concluded his remarks in opposition to the bill.

Mr. Crittenden addressed the senate at length in reply. After concluding his remarks,

Mr. Grundy rose, and made a statement in relation to the Union bank of Tennessee, to prove that this institution was perfectly able to meet any demands which might be made on it.

Mr. Benton then withdrew for the present his motion to amend the bill by striking out the appropriation of lands to Missouri, because of the absence of his colleague.

Mr. Walker then moved an amendment, the effect of which would be to introduce an established rate of value on the graduation principle.

Mr. Clay expressed his intention of speaking generally to the bill hereafter, and then entered into a brief argument, which was confined to the proposed amendment, and in opposition to it.

Before the question was taken on the adoption of the amendment, on motion of Mr. Porter, the senate adjourned.

[The general appropriation bill was received from the house, read twice, by unanimous consent, and referred to the committee on finance.]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Friday, April 15. Immediately after reading the journal, Mr. Denny rose to make a motion; when

Mr. Howard requested him to yield the floor to enable him to bring a subject before the house, in which he felt a personal interest. Mr. Denny having complied, and leave being granted by the house,

Mr. Howard said that he wished to call the attention of the house, and of the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. Wise) to the imperfect manner in which his (Mr. W.'s) remarks, made on the day before yesterday, were reported in the National Intelligencer of this morning. It would be remembered by the house that considerable debate occurred upon a motion of a gentleman from North Carolina, (Mr. Shepperd), to strike out a part of the contingent fund provided for the state department, and which involved, in its range, the propriety of the appointment by the president of two commissioners to proceed to Ohio and Michigan, after the adjournment of the last congress. Mr. H. said that, as was well known, he had the honor of being selected as one of these commissioners, associated with a distinguished gentleman (Mr. Rush) who had filled many honorable stations under the government. With what success or ability they had performed their duties, it was not for him to judge; being satisfied with the approbation of the president, expressed on the surrender of the trust; but he would say, that they were undertaken with a single eye to the preservation of the peace of the country, then threatened with imminent danger of violation. In the course of the debate, the power of the president to make such appointments had been freely discussed. This was a matter properly open to debate, and gentlemen had a fair right to scrutinize it strictly. He had listened to the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. Wise), as he always did, with attention, and was perfectly sure that the report of them, which he would ask the clerk to read, was not an accurate report. The debate having turned exclusively upon the appointment of the commissioners, the gentleman from Virginia is made to say as follows:

The clerk then read this extract:

"Mr. Wise said, the discussion showed the necessity of examining these contingent appropriations. What would gentlemen say (he asked) if it should turn out that this very appropriation of twenty-five thousand dollars was used to pay some of these secret agents, appointed without any authority of the constitution? He went into the examination of the right of appointment, and contended that the president had no power of the kind contended for. The contingent appropriations (he said) were applied to all sorts of illegitimate purposes; and even one portion of a system of corruption, which had increased to a most enormous extent."

Mr. Howard said that, in the passage just read, it might be inferred by some readers, that the epithet contained in the last sentence was applied to the appointment of the commissioners, which he was perfectly sure the gentleman from Virginia did not do. The remarks which were made by members of the house, in debate, were of great consequence, but those which were reported to have been made were equally so, because they went forth to the nation, instead of being confined to the house; and, having called the attention of the gentleman from Virginia to the imperfection in the report of his remarks, he left it to his own sense of justice what course to pursue.

Mr. Wise said it would give him a great deal of pleasure to explain. He would say that he had spoken on the day alluded to without preparation and extemporaneously, and could not say what his precise words were, but he knew what his meaning was. He meant to instance this appointment of commissioners to Michigan by the president of the United States, not as a corrupt appointment, but as an illegitimate appointment; and he had generally denounced contingent appropriations, as covering illegitimate and corrupt applications of the public moneys. He did not mean to charge the honorable gentleman from Maryland, or the president, with corruption in the appointment, but he charged the president then, as he did now, with making an illegitimate appointment, when there was no necessity for doing so; there was, however, a difference of opinion on that subject. At the time alluded to, he was debating the subject with his colleague (Mr. Mason) of these contingent appropriations covering corrupt appropriations of the public moneys. He did not charge the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. Howard) with corruption; and if such charge was intimated in the report, he would say with great pleasure that he was misrepresented.

Mr. Howard said that he was glad to find that the recollection of the gentleman from Virginia corresponded with his own. The constitutionality or legality of the appointment was properly open to debate, and gentlemen upon all sides had a perfect right to express their opinions upon it. He would no longer detain the house from its ordinary business.

[The house then proceeded to the regular business of the morning.]

Saturday, April 16. Mr. Cane Johnson, with the consent of the house, submitted the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the report of the secretary of state, dated the 22d of December, 1834, numbered thirty-six among the documents of the 1st session of the 23d congress, and the papers accompanying the same, be referred to the committee of ways and means, with the following instructions:

1st. To inquire into the propriety of repealing the act of the 2d of March, 1833, and rescinding the contract made by virtue thereof, by Edward Livingston, on the part of the U. States, and Clarke & Forre, for the publication of the "Documentary History of the Revolution," and to pay the expenditures incurred by said publishers in consequence of said contract.

2d. If that is not proper to be done, then to inquire into the propriety of better regulating said contract, directing the number and size of the volumes, and the sum to be paid for the same, and the time for the completion of said publication, and the best and proper means of superintending said publication, and directing the documents to be inserted in said publication.

On motion of Mr. Whittlesey, the house went into committee of the whole on the state of the union, upon the bill granting half pay to widows and orphans of those officers and soldiers who have died, or shall die, of wounds received in the service of the United States, in certain cases.

After some explanation from Mr. Whittlesey, the committee rose, and reported the bill without amendment, and it was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

The general appropriation bill occupied nearly the remainder of the day.

Monday, April 18. Mr. Reed presented the following resolution, adopted by the house of representatives of the commonwealth of Massachusetts, on the 9th of April instant, viz:

Commonwealth of Massachusetts, house of reps. April 9, 1836.
Resolved, That it is expedient to instruct the senators and request the representatives of this commonwealth, in the congress of the United States, to use their endeavors to obtain the passage of a law by congress to prevent the introduction of foreign papers into this country, or to favor any other measures which congress may be disposed to adopt to effect the object.

Mr. Stale presented petitions of 167 ladies of the county of Addison, and 93 citizens of Middleburg, in the state of Vermont, praying for the abolition of slavery and the slave trade in the District of Columbia which were referred to the committee appointed under the resolution on that subject offered by Mr. Pinckney.

After other business, the general appropriation bill was taken up, and some progress made therein. The house adjourned.

Tuesday, April 19. By general consent, the house then proceeded to consider the following resolution, heretofore submitted by Mr. Dromgoole:

Resolved, That the secretary of the treasury be directed to communicate to this house full information of the mode and manner of selecting banks in the several states or territories for the deposit of the public money of the United States; of all contracts, agreements or stipulations entered into with said banks for the safe keeping of said moneys; that the secretary of the treasury also state what agents have been employed, the nature and extent of their agency, and the compensation which such agents have received in any way from the government of the United States; and that he also state what officers or agents on the part of said banks have in any way participated or been instrumental in the formation of any such contracts, agreements or stipulations concerning the deposit and safe keeping of said moneys in said banks.

The question being on the motion of Mr. Wise to amend the resolution by striking out all after the word "Resolved," and inserting the following:

That a select committee be appointed, with power to send for persons and papers, to inquire into the mode or agency of selecting the banks of deposit for the public money; the contracts with the treasury department, by which they are regulated; the manner in which, and the persons by whom, such contracts are or have been made; into all correspondence whatsoever touching contracts for the deposit of the public money; and into all connexion or relation, official or unofficial, which exists, or has existed, between any person or persons and the treasury department, or between them and the deposit banks, or any individuals or banks, touching the custody and the control and deposit of the public money; or between any department of the executive, and any individual or individuals or banks, touching the disbursements of the public money, appropriated or unappropriated by law; and into the amount of compensation of any or all agents whatsoever, official or unofficial, connected with the said department, or said banks, touching the disbursement, safe keeping, or deposit of the public money; and that said committee have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. Wise resumed and concluded his remarks in support of his motion.

Other gentlemen followed, until Mr. Cambreleng called for the order of the day.

Mr. Mercer, by consent, submitted the following resolution, which he modified at the suggestion of Mr. Calhoun, of Mass. by the addition of the last clause, and the resolution was agreed to.

Resolved, That the secretary of the treasury be directed to lay before this house a statement of the several amounts deposited in the various deposit banks of the government by the several officers thereof, on public account, on the first day of the present month, together with the semi-monthly returns of the deposit banks in relation thereto.

The general appropriation bill was taken up, and some progress made therein. Adjourned.

Wednesday, April 20. Mr. Wise asked and obtained the consent of the house to make a statement relative to a paragraph which appeared in the Globe of yesterday, on the subject of the proceedings of this house.

Mr. Wise said it would be recollected that on Monday last, a gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. Reed) moved the suspension of the rules, in order to call the states for the presentation of such petitions as should not be objected to, nor provoke any discussion. The Globe of yesterday stated, editorially, that he (Mr. Wise) objected to the presentation of a petition by the gentleman from Massachusetts. This, so far from being true, was a total perversion of the facts, as they occurred. He did not object to that petition, and the reason that he objected to the presentation of a petition subsequently presented by the gentleman from Rhode Island, was, that the previous objection had been made to the reception of the petition offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, and that he considered the restriction in the resolution an abridgment of the right of petition.

He offered this explanation, because the Globe attempted to connect its false statement with another falsehood, to wit, that there was an understanding between him and the gentleman from Vermont, as to the presentation by that gentleman of his memorial against the admission of Arkansas. Any and all intimations, by whomsoever made, that he, or, so far as he knew, any of his friends, had any understanding, tacit or expressed, with any gentleman, here or elsewhere, with regard to the introduction of these memorials were false, foully false. He knew not that the gentleman from Vermont had any memorial of this kind to present. He had opposed the presentation and reception of all abolition memorials from the commencement of the session. He hoped that the Globe reporters would note these remarks, in order that the Globe might record the evidence of its baseness in its own columns.

Other minor matters being disposed of—the general appropriation bill again came up, and further amended, after discussions.

Mr. Hannegan moved the previous question on the bill.

The demand for the previous question was seconded by a vote of 95 to 64.

The question being whether the main question shall be now put,

Mr. Mercer called for the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

The question being taken, it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 164, nays 74.

The house then adjourned.

Thursday, April 21. Mr. Ripley, of Louisiana, by general consent, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the committee on roads and canals be instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorising the secretary of the treasury by commissioners (subject to his approbation) to select sites and prepare reports and estimates of hospitals to be built upon the western rivers and lakes for disabled and sick seamen and boatmen on said waters.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. Mercer, by general consent, offered the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the secretary of war be directed to lay before this house a statement of the various surveys made pursuant to the act of the 30th of April, 1824, specifying therein, as nearly as practicable, their respective cost, the date of the commencement, and, where already completed, the report of each survey; and distinguishing such as have had their entire expense defrayed out of the annual fund appropriated by that act, and the several appropriations subsequently made for the same object, from those surveys which have been made at the joint cost of this government, and various states, corporations or associations of individuals.

Mr. Granger said that he asked, and did not doubt that he should receive, the unanimous consent of the house, to present a memorial of the heirs-at-law of baron DE KALE, asking compensation for his sacrifices in our revolutionary struggle. To this petition is appended a memoir presented by Simeon De Witt Bloodgood, of the city of Albany, in behalf of the petitioners.

Mr. G. further said, that, did the rules of the house permit, he should have felt it to be his duty, as it certainly would have been his pleasure, to have made a few remarks upon the character of this gallant German, the story of whose services and death, in the cause of freedom, was so closely interwoven in our country's history; but, under existing circumstances, he must content himself with moving that the petition and accompanying memoir be printed, and that they be referred to the committee on revolutionary claims.

It was so ordered.

The general appropriation bill came up. The previous question was called for, and seconded—88 to 64.

Mr. Williams, of North Carolina, called for the yeas and nays on the question "Shall the main question be now put?" and they were ordered.

The question being taken, it was decided in the affirmative, as follows:

The chair having decided that the main question would be, "Shall the bill pass?"

The question was then put and the bill passed, and sent to the senate.

POST OFFICE CONTRACTS—RAIL ROADS.

In the U. S. senate on Monday, the bill reported by Mr. Grundy, authorising the post office department to make contracts with the various rail road companies for the conveyance of the mail and property of the United States, was taken up, read and considered as in committee of the whole.

Mr. Grundy advocated at large the expediency and necessity of the bill. He argued the impracticability, without enormous expense, of competing in rapidity of conveyance with rail road companies. He admitted that the expense of contracts with such companies would be very great. But he insisted that till 1841, land bill and all, the surplus of the public money would be so great that it could not be expended with all the aid of expenditure that could be derived from fortifications. He thought it would be one of the best ways of distributing the surplus, to employ it in procuring a rapid transmission of information through the mail or rail roads.

Mr. Webster said he had early in the session offered two resolutions of inquiry on this subject, one of which indicated a measure similar to this bill. He was in favor of the land bill, and if he thought this measure would interfere with that, he would not interfere. It appeared from the treasury report of this morning, that on the 1st inst. there were $31,895,000 of surplus money in the treasury. The income of the first quarter of this year, ending on the first of March, had been $10,725,000, and the prospect of revenue for the whole of the present year, is $20,000,000 for land, $20,000,000 for customs, and $1,000,000 from other sources, making an aggregate of $41,000,000 of revenue for the present year. Besides this, there are $7,000,000 in the old United States bank. What could be done with all this money?

The secretary at war had given a judicious and interesting view of the subject of appropriations for national defence, on all the objects of fortifications, armament and naval preparations, and he had justly represented the navy as the main arm of defence in controversies with foreign states. We can properly rely on nothing so well as a superior naval force on our coasts to defend our principal cities. Mr. W.'s views on this subject accorded with those of the secretary. But after all reasonable expenditures on these and other objects, there must inevitably be a large unappropriated surplus in the treasury.

Gentlemen here were not generally aware of the pressure on the money market along the whole coast, and to some extent in the interior. That pressure was singular in its character. Money is scarce beyond all example, and prices high at the same time, beyond all example. There is a tendency, too, to accumulate all the money of the country in the treasury, and hold it in the deposit banks. At a proper opportunity Mr. W. designed to go into the causes of this peculiar and very singular condition of our financial affairs. But for the present he was most happy to give the bill his support, and hoped it would receive it elsewhere.

Mr. Buchanan thought there would be great difficulties attending this measure. He had no constitutional difficulties on the subject of internal improvement. But he thought in this case there would be much danger of rail roads, with bankrupt companies, coming into the hands of the government.

Mr. Clay gave an amusing account of the manner in which rail road projects are in many cases got up. The whole stock is subscribed for by speculators to sell at an advance; and other speculators buy of them to sell at a still greater advance, and so the project grows while the price is rising, with a total uncertainty in regard to the completion of the work when the stock should begin to fall. Mr. C. thought this bill would give a great impulse to this kind of speculation. This speculation was one cause of the pressure on the money market. Property had risen and was still rising; and while it rises speculators will be disposed to buy, and there will be a great demand for money. At the same time money is depreciated, owing to the great quantity of the public money in the deposit banks, and to a want of confidence. The present state of the finances cannot endure. It is seen that there is, there must be an explosion, there is therefore a tendency to hoard hard money. Mr. C. would not now declare for or against the bill; but he thought at such a time the government should proceed with great caution.

Mr. Davis characterized the bill as a measure of mere inquiry as to the kind of contracts which may be made with the various rail road companies. The power would still remain with congress to accept or not accept the contracts. Information on this subject is greatly needed; the mail must run on the rail roads, as all admitted; and viewing the bill in this aspect, which he considered the true one, he was in favor of it.

Mr. Mangum insisted that the bill was a resuscitation of the old system of internal improvement in a much more latitudinous and objectionable form than ever. It would be a greater political instrument of the treasury department than even the deposit banks and the surplus revenue.

After some further remarks by Messrs. Grundy, Mangum, Benton, Webster and Leigh, the bill was laid on the table.

[It is supposed that Mr. Grundy's bill will pass. Indeed, we do not see how the mails, to and from the "great west," are to be lugged, after a little while, over the Alleghanies, unless at a tortoise-like rapidity, without the use of rail roads.]

INDIAN WAR, &c.

The western Indians. We regret to learn from the Washington Globe that information has been received at the adjutant general's office from general Brooke, commanding at Green Bay, stating that a war belt from the Seminoles is circulating among the Winnabagoes, and that there is reason to apprehend that these latter Indians may be induced to commit hostilities against our settlements.

Accompanying the above statement, the Globe makes the following judicious remarks:

"The state of things among the Indians generally seems to render an increase of the army indispensible necessary. We are satisfied that the best arrangement which can be made with respect to all the Indians living within our settled frontier, is to remove them without delay. The proposition made by the secretary of war to the military committees of both houses, seems to us to present the best plan which can be adopted for protecting our settlements against Indian depredations. This plan proposes that a military road should be opened from somewhere near St. Peters, on the Mississippi, to Red river. That a cordon of posts should be established along this road, supplied with proper garrisons, and with all the munitions of war, and means of subsistence, necessary for immediate operations. That the dragoons should be kept ranging along it, during all the open season of the year, and that all the garrisons in the Indian frontier, within this line, should be transferred to it as soon as the removal of the Indians from their neighborhood will permit.

From Florida. Tampa, March 20. A letter from captain Hitchcock says—I obtained from Tuck-austre Har-jo, or Black Dirt, the friendly chief, a list of the Indian chiefs and their forces engaged with general Gaines.

A New York paper gives the following anecdote, on the authority of a brother of the officer to whom it relates—

"In the fight between general Clinch's troops and the Seminoles on the Wythlacoochee, express directions were given by Oceola to his Indians, to avoid shooting lieutenant G—, though leading his men into the front and thickest of the fight—because he and Oceola had been friends, and he had been kind to the 'poor Indian.' The order was strictly obeyed amid chances innumerable for taking off a dangerous enemy—and although finally wounded by a random shot, the gallant youth escaped with life, through the generosity of an Indian foe-man.

"As to the 'imaginary insult' over which Oceola is said 'to brood,' it was the pretty positive wrong and insult of being put in irons by the United States agent, who had no rightful authority over him. His 'revenge' for that is sated, for it was by his rifle that general Thompson, the agent in question, fell."

From the Jacksonville Courier of the 7th of April.

The three divisions of the army must have met ere this. The consequences we are anxious to learn.

Some invalids who arrived a few days since from Volusia, report that, of seven hundred men belonging to col. Brisbane's regiment, three hundred were unable to proceed on their march, through sickness occasioned by the hardships to which the men were unaccustomed, and the prevalence of the measles among them. Poor fellows! they doubtless find that fighting Indians is not "what it was cracked up to be."

The latest. Darton, April 12. The Dolphin steamer, which arrived here on Saturday morning last, the 9th inst. brought the latest news from these places. There was nothing positively known from the army under Scott and Clinch, since they marched for Wythlacoochee. Two of the Macon volunteers returned to Fort Drane the day after the main body had left that place. They reported that the rear guard was attacked by a large body of Indians, while they were endeavoring to bring up a cart that had broken down, laden with provisions. They said that the army was at the time three or four miles in advance. They considered there was no time to be lost, and taking a horse from a light wagon, both of them got on his back, and galloped back to Fort Drane. While they were making the best of their way from the spot, they saw one of the U. States' soldiers dead. The Indians had dispersed. There was not much attention paid to this at Fort Drane; and the men left that place next day to follow the army. Their statement is, however, very probably, true. There was no force left at Fort Drane, excepting the sick and wounded. What makes the Macon volunteers' representations appear like the truth, is the fact, that a number of Indians were seen to enter the field near the fort, the same day, and carry off all the horses that were grazing in it. This they did in the face of the small garrison of sick and wounded. We were not able to obtain any thing more of interest from the passengers in the Dolphin.

Important news may be daily expected from Florida.—Gen. Scott hoped to have met the Indians in the latter part of last month.

THE SAVINGS BANK OF BALTIMORE.

SIXTH EXTRA DIVIDEND.

The president and directors of the Savings bank of Baltimore have this day declared an extra dividend of the profits of its business, for the last three years, amounting to $25,000.

This amount is by law divided to such sums as have been in bank one year or more, in the following proportions:

To sums on deposit for 3 years, an extra dividend of 7½ per ct.

To sums on deposit for 2 years, an extra dividend of 5 per ct.

To sums on deposit for 1 year, an extra dividend of 2½ per ct.

This dividend, added to the regular semi-annual interest of 4 per cent. which is carried to the credit of depositors on the 1st of April and the 1st of October in each year, makes for the last three years 6½ per cent. per annum; and this, without computing the profit of compound interest on the undrawn semi-annual dividends.

Agreeably to the by-laws, the above dividend will be carried to the credit of each depositor, and bear interest as a deposit, from this day, until withdrawn; but payment of the dividend, or of the deposit, will be made on demand, on the day for receiving and paying deposits, which is Monday.

It is to be regretted that many persons, by withdrawing their deposits during the panic of 1834, even where the same were soon after returned, necessarily lost by the withdrawal a considerable portion of the extra dividend, to which they would otherwise have been entitled.

The advantages afforded by the Savings bank of Baltimore, will be apparent from a short statement of the accumulation of deposits allowed to remain in bank. Eighteen years are now completed since it commenced operations; every sum remaining in bank for that period,

Of $20, would now be $52 38, which is 162 per cent. or 9 per cent. per annum.

Of $100, would now be $279 10, which is 180 per cent. or 10 per cent. per annum.

Of $500, would now be $1,414 28, which is 182½ per cent. or 10 1-7 per cent. per annum.

It may be proper here to repeat the remark, that this bank is not intended for men of business; it neither collects notes and bills, nor discounts paper. Its loans are granted only on pledges of stocks, actually transferred, or on mortgages of productive real estate, taken at valuations so low as to preclude, so far as human foresight and caution can avail, the hazard of loss, either by the failure or death of a borrower.

The original object of the bank was to receive and employ the savings of frugal and industrious persons, who have not the opportunity or means of making investments for themselves. This has been constantly kept in view by the directors; and while the profits have exceeded their expectations, security has been their chief aim. Of upwards of two millions of dollars, which from time to time have been entrusted to their care and management, not a dollar has been lost by any investment; and of seven hundred and fifty thousand still so entrusted, which, besides a number of associations for mutual relief, embraces the earnings and savings of more than 2,600 individuals, in very many cases their all, in the best judgment of the board, not a dollar is at hazard.

No emolument or advantage, directly or indirectly, can accrue to the directors from an increase of the funds of the bank, as in the administration of its concerns their services are purely benevolent and gratuitous. The bank therefore seeks not deposits on its own account, but on the contrary, refuses them, where it does not appear that some benevolent aid or protection will be afforded the depositor.

The advertisement of the extra dividend has been thought a fit occasion for presenting the foregoing summary to the perusal and attention of those persons in moderate circumstances, whose sense of obligation to themselves, their families and society, induces them not only to make proper effort for the present support of themselves and those dependent upon them, but also to provide for sickness and old age, and for the wants of their families in case of death. To all such the bank cheerfully continues its services.

By order of the board,
JOSEPH CUSHING, president.

ARCHIBALD STIRLING, treasurer.

"EXPUNGING."

A Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Patriot says:—I am reminded, by this allusion, of a case with which I casually met the other day, in looking over the now printed "secret journals of congress." It seems to me most fully to settle the question of precedent, so far as our legislators should be governed by such authority. It shows what was the opinion of this same doctrine of expunging the records of congress, by the first congress that ever sat in our country—a body which promulgated the Declaration of Independence—composed of the contemporaneous elucidators of the first principles of our government. As such, it seems entitled to peculiar weight and influence.

It appears that in 1777, a lieutenant colonel of the army in Virginia, was complained against to congress, by governor Henry, of that state, for some disrespect, and thereupon congress had passed a resolution declaring that that officer should, within five days after he was notified of the resolution, make a sufficient apology to governor Henry. This resolution was, of course, spread upon the journal, and bears date August, 1777. In the mean time, and before the resolution of congress had reached the colonel, he had of his own free will, gone forward and made an apology to the governor. Congress being informed of this fact, in May, 1778, a member moved that "the resolution of August, 1777, be expunged from the journal." No record exists of the debates that took place at that time, but we may judge as to what they must have been by the proceedings. As soon as that motion was made, another member moved to amend it by substituting two resolutions. The first of these expressed it, as the opinion of congress, that the conduct of the officer had entirely reinstated him in his former position, and that he stood, and deserved to stand, precisely where he did before the passage of that resolution. The second provided that the said resolution should not be published with the rest of the journal, which was contemporaneously printed, I believe, every week. THESE RESOLUTIONS PASSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE "EXPUNGING" RESOLUTION BY A LARGE VOTE; and it is observable that all the Virginian delegation voted for them! I beg Mr. Rices' particular attention to this fact—if this falls under his eye—for it is a Virginian precedent; it originated in the "Old Dominion;" the colonel was a valued officer (now living, I believe) of that state; it was Patrick Henry who complained to congress, and it was by Virginian votes that it was decided that though congress could do every thing else that was necessary to wipe out an undeserved stigma inflicted by itself, IT COULD NOT EXPUNGE ITS OWN JOURNALS. Are the "children of this generation wiser than the children of light?" O.

EXPLORING EXPEDITION.

The committee on naval affairs in the senate have reported a bill directing an exploring expedition to the Pacific ocean and South seas, and authorizing the president to send out a sloop of war for that purpose, together with such smaller vessels as may be required. In showing the importance of such an expedition, the committee say—

No part of the commerce of this country is more important than that which is carried on in the Pacific ocean. It is large in amount. Not less than $12,000,000 of capital are invested in and actively employed by one branch of the whale fishery alone; and in the whole trade there is, directly and indirectly, involved not less than fifty to seventy millions of property. In like manner from 170 to 200,000 tons of our shipping, and from 9 to 12,000 of our seamen are employed, amounting to about one-tenth of the whole navigation of the union. Its results are profitable. It is, to a great extent, not a mere exchange of commodities, but the creation of wealth, by labor, from the ocean. The fisheries alone produce, at this time, an annual income of from five to six millions of dollars; and it is not possible to look at Nantucket, New Bedford, New London, Sag Harbor, and a large number of other districts upon our northern coasts, without the deep conviction that it is an employment alike beneficial to the moral, political and commercial interests of our fellow-citizens.

It is a nursery for seamen for which no substitute can be found; immensely fitted to form precisely such men as the nation requires for times of trial and struggle. The voyages are long, every climate is encountered; every sea, calm or tempestuous, is traversed, and a discipline and subordination enforced, which create a class of men unsurpassed, if they are equalled, by any who have ever made the ocean their dwelling-place. They are adventurous and persevering—hardened by toil and danger—bold, watchful, and skilful. If the encouragement and protection of government should be extended to any portion of our citizens, these have claims which cannot be overlooked. It is to this view of the subject that the Committee on naval affairs have directed their most anxious attention.

The commerce of the Pacific may be greatly extended in all its departments. Of the rapidity of its growth there is abundant evidence in the records of the departments of our government, and the theatre for its enlargement is most ample; but it requires aid and encouragement.

No part of our commerce is so much exposed to hazard and peril. That portion of the globe is less known, and the ocean more filled with danger, than any other that our seamen visit. There are hundreds of islands, reefs and shoals, unmarked upon any chart, and unknown to common navigators. Their location, situation, facilities for commerce, are yet to be explored and exhibited to the world. Many of these islands are inhabited by savages, who render access to them dangerous, and whom it is the duty of the government to conciliate. The loss of property and life in that region has been immense. The committee refer to the accompanying documents to illustrate some of the facts upon these points; and they do not hesitate to believe that an examination of them will satisfy the senate of the policy and necessity of the measure which they propose.

MR. HARRISON'S REPORT ON RECLAIMING THE INUNDATED LANDS.

From the Globe.

Mr. Harrison, of Missouri, reported a resolution from the committee on the public lands relative to the inundated country of the Mississippi, accompanied by a long and interesting report, evincing great labor and investigation.

This is a new subject, of great immediate interest to the valley of the Mississippi, and more remotely, but not less eventually, to the whole nation. The alluvial soil on the great western river is of such inexhaustible fertility, that it must team with population and the richest products, as soon as the annual inundation is arrested. The success which has attended the mode of redeeming the soil in Louisiana by levees, shows that it requires only the fiat of government to rescue the whole upper region of the river from its floods.

Mr. H. is entitled to the thanks of the people in the whole valley, and especially of the people of his own state, who are so deeply concerned in the subject. We do not think the calculations made by Mr. H. both as to the cost of the work and quantity of land that may be reclaimed, at all extravagant. In saying this, we mean the increased amount which Mr. H. invariably adds to his estimate of costs for reclaiming them, and the diminished quantity which he assumes as correct, when taken from the estimated quantity subject to inundation.

But, if the government will do nothing in the matter, we concur with the sentiments of the report, that the government is bound to give these lands to the states in which they are situated. The third of a century has passed away, and nothing has been done towards the accomplishment of this object. It is time for the government to act in the matter, or give the lands to those who will. Mr. H. has presented the subject in such a definite form, that we hope to see the sense of congress tested on it. It is a grand design, and worthy of national support. Let competent engineers, as Mr. H.'s resolution proposes, be appointed to survey the country; and if congress should think, after their report is made, that it is impracticable to reclaim these lands, then give them to the states in which they lie, or to any body that will take them who will agree to undertake the work.

Although all have felt and have been willing to acknowledge the importance of reclaiming this country from the overflows of the Mississippi, yet none but Mr. H. has attempted to investigate the practicability of doing it, and of bringing together and condensing in some systematic form the necessary information to induce congress to move in the matter. And should the work be undertaken, and accomplished to any useful extent he will be entitled to, and will, no doubt, receive the gratitude of all who take an interest in it.

The following extracts show the conclusions which Mr. Harrison brings his calculations on the subject:

"The aggregate quantity of inundated land on the Mississippi, according to the estimates he has presented, is 23,469,250 acres; to ascertain how much of this belongs to the United States, the amount owned by individuals should be deducted, which cannot be said, upon a fair calculation, to exceed one million. Although we are inclined to think actual surveys would show that we are not very far wrong in the aggregate calculation just submitted, yet, for the purpose of bringing our estimate within limits which no reflecting mind can controvert, we will deduct one-half, upon the supposition that the calculation is too great, and on the conviction that a considerable quantity of these inundated lands will prove to be, upon experiment, wholly irreclaimable. This will leave the quantity of 11,234,630 acres of land that can be redeemed from its present worthless state.

"The quality of this land is the finest on the habitable globe; the rich and fertile lands of the Nile do not excel it; and if we take into view its great extent, the variety of climate, and the great variety of staple articles which it may produce, we may safely say that there is not an equal extent of land in the known world that can vie with it for fertility of soil and the variety of its productions. Extending from the northern line of the state of Missouri to the southern extremity of Louisiana, every species of produce which can be raised within this range of latitude will be the rich return of the farmer and the planter, it is the opinion of your committee that the United States do not own any lands as valuable as these would be if reclaimed; independently of the fertility of the soil, their contiguity to the Mississippi river, and adaptation to such a variety of important staples, give them a value that can scarcely be properly estimated. Wheat, hemp, tobacco, cotton, sugar, rice and indigo, are the principal products of these staples, and will abundantly repay the farmer and planter for his industry and labor. As the importance of the commodity enhances the value of the land, and as the most important articles to commerce and manufactures are exclusively produced on such lands as these, your committee do not hesitate to fix the minimum value of these lands at five dollars per acre. According to this computation, the quantity which we have assumed as entirely practicable to reclaim, will bring the sum of $56,173,150; the whole cost of reclaiming, according to the calculations submitted, will amount to the sum of $2,367,000, an amount which your committee are willing to double, as being altogether sufficient to cover every expense that may be necessary for the completion of the work; this will leave a balance in favor of the government of $51,353,000. But, on considering every circumstance connected with these lands, your committee are willing to express it as their opinion, that they will bring to the government a net amount of at least a hundred millions, when put up at public auction."

CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY.

In senate, March 15, 1836.

Mr. Preston made the following report:

The committee on the library, to whom was referred the following resolution: "Resolved, That the committee on the library, be instructed to inquire into the expediency of purchasing the library of the late count Boutourlin, at Florence, for the library of congress," report:

That, in investigating the propriety of making so large an addition to the library as that contemplated in the inquiry referred to them, the committee thought it advisable to look into the progress and present condition of the library, and to lay before the senate some general statements concerning them.

In the act of 24th March, 1800, making provision for the removal and accommodation of the government of the United States, the sum of 5,000 dollars was appropriated for the purchase of such books as may be necessary for the use of congress at the city of Washington, for fitting up a suitable apartment for containing them, and for placing them therein. It was also provided that the purchase of books should be made under the direction of a joint committee of the two houses, and when purchased, should be deposited in a suitable apartment in the capitol, for the use of both houses of congress and the members thereof, according to such regulations as said committee shall devise and establish.

By the act of January 26th, 1802, the books purchased in performance of the above act, and also the books and libraries which had previously been kept separately by each house, were directed to be placed in a common room. The speaker of the house and president of the senate were authorised to make regulations for the library. The office and salary of a librarian was established, and the funds appropriated, or to be appropriated, were put under the control of a joint committee of three from each house.

On the 20th January, 1806, there was a report of the committee on a resolution of the 5th December preceding, directing whether further appropriations ought not to be made for the augmentation of the congressional library.

The utter insufficiency of the library is strongly set forth in the report; and, therefore, congress appropriated 1,000 dollars a year, for five years, to be expended under the direction of the joint committee.

In 1811, this act was continued for five years longer.

Such was the care which had been extended to the library, up to 1814, when, in August of that year, it was utterly destroyed by the British troops, then in possession of Washington. The autumn after this event, Mr. Jefferson proposed to sell his library to congress, stating, in his letter making the proposition, that it had been carefully collected, and at great expense, and giving a succinct account of its extent and character. The committee on the library brought his proposition before congress, whereupon, it was "resolved, that the joint library committee of the two houses of congress be, and they are hereby, empowered to contract, on their part, for the purchase of the library of Mr. Jefferson, late president of the United States, for the use of both houses of congress."

In pursuance of this resolution, the committee concluded the purchase of 6,487 volumes, at the price of 23,950 dollars, being somewhat more than three dollars and a half a volume. Of the books, 856 were in folio, 890 4to, 2,800 8vo, and 1,873 12mo; and, as a whole, it was an extremely miscellaneous collection. Mr. Jefferson, in his letter to Mr. Smith, says of it, that "it is rich in American history, and in writings which relate to the duties of those in high concerns; that it contained much of what was rare and valuable in every science;" and he very wisely and pointedly adds, "I do not know that it contains any branch of science which congress would exclude from its collection. There is, in fact, no subject to which a member of congress may not have occasion to refer."

Since this purchase, congress has annually appropriated sums varying from one to five thousand dollars for the general library, besides 5,000 dollars in 1833, and 1,000 dollars for five successive years, for the purchase of law books, making in all, since the destruction of the library in 1814, 99,950 dollars.

The whole number of volumes, in the library, exclusive of congressional documents, and the laws of the United States, is about 24,000, so that the library, thus far, has cost about four dollars a volume.

There are about 6,000 volumes in other languages than English, of which 4,083 are in French, 844 in Latin, 314 in Spanish, 268 in Italian, 281 in Greek and Latin, 66 in Greek, 29 in Chinese, 13 in Saxon, 12 in German, and 53 in all other languages, ancient and modern. In the additions which the joint committee have purchased with the annual appropriations made to the library, they seem to have been governed by the practical declaration of its intentions, made by congress in the purchase of Mr. Jefferson's library. They had to build it up on this most various and miscellaneous foundation, and in the absence of any specific instructions in regard to its character, (while they have had a special view to the peculiar wants of congress), have made additions to the original stock in all the branches of general science and literature. The primary object in instituting the library unquestionably was, to afford to members of congress the means of knowledge necessary for the intelligent discharge of their official business. It is very difficult to prescribe bounds to the demands which may be made for books in every branch of learning, by the multitudes of subjects brought before congress and its committees. There is no subject, Mr. Jefferson says, "to which a member of congress may not have occasion to refer." The absolute necessity of congress suggested the library; the utility of extending it beyond actual necessities early became apparent, and erecting an institution upon these foundations, it was competent to congress to extend and adorn it in reference to the dignity and opulence of the government. As it was manifestly proper that, in the erection of the public buildings, greatness and elegance should be united with utility and comfort, so these qualities may be fitly consulted in whatever is required to be done for the use and accommodation of the government. The public buildings have been erected at a cost of six millions, and in many instances with an elaborate display of architectural ornament, intended to gratify, and, in part, to improve the public taste, or to indulge a just national pride. With the same feelings congress has not hesitated to make requisitions upon the arts of sculpture and painting. This enlightened and liberal regard to the gratification of the tastes and elegant improvement of the country, though made secondary by the nature of the government to other objects, is not without great importance. It is not a substantive power of congress to furnish means of knowledge, or models of taste, but, in the necessary and proper arrangements of its establishment, they may, and ought to be, so extended or modified as to contribute to both these objects. A library is necessary; that it should have a degree of completeness and elegance, is as proper as that the shafts of the columns around the halls should be polished or surmounted by a capital; and the remark applies with greater force to the library, not only on account of the superior value of learning, but on account also of the great destitution of the means of knowledge in a country so new as the United States.

In all the public libraries of the United States, including those of schools and colleges, throughout our wide territory, and counting all the duplicates, there are not as many books as are contained in the bibliothèque du roi, in Paris. It is a very large calculation to estimate all our libraries at 400,000 volumes, and of these there are not more than 50,000 distinct works. In Paris there are 1,200,000 books deposited in public libraries, and in all France 4,200,000. In Germany the reading public is still more liberally provided with books. The whole number of printed volumes of distinct works in the world may be estimated at 600,000; of these there is certainly not more than one-tenth in the United States. Our whole body of literature, if collected in one place, would not afford the means of investigating one point of science or literature through all or even a considerable portion of what has been written on it. Here, where the foundations of the government repose upon the aggregate intelligence of the citizens, the assistance afforded by public institutions to the exertions of intellect, is but one-tenth of that within the reach of the mind of civilized Europe.

Besides private libraries of much greater extent than the greatest public collections in this country, there are in many of the German towns collections of from one hundred to two hundred and fifty thousand. The number of books in public libraries in Germany are to the population as one to ten; in the United States as one to forty; and this disparity is still more striking if we compare the means of knowledge within the reach of the functionaries of this government with those which are furnished at the principal capitals of Europe.

London and Paris, of course, are replete with means of knowledge, which would require much time even to enumerate; but it may be stated that there are in the British museum, besides its rich and vast collections of art, 180,000 volumes and 60,000 manuscripts.

The royal library in Paris has between 400,000 and 500,000; royal library at Berlin, 200,000; imperial library at Petersburg, 300,000; imperial library at Vienna, 300,000; the Vatican, 400,000; print and manuscript at Stuttgart, 120,000; at Copenhagen, 250,000. In short, it would not be going too far to say that there is no government in Europe, down to its principalities and dukedoms, which has not provided its functionaries with more ample means of useful and elegant knowledge than ours. We do not, however, ascertain our wants merely by a comparison with the abundance of other governments. The experience of members of congress has taught them how often their inquiries are arrested by the want of books. No day elapses, during the session of congress, that there is not a call for many volumes which cannot be furnished. On a recent occasion the senate's committee on the judiciary, in the investigation of an important question respecting the boundary of a state, was compelled to borrow the necessary materials from colleges and societies at a distance from the seat of government.

Whether it be proper for congress to remedy in some degree these defects, by the purchase of the library of the late count Bontourlin, at Florence, is the immediate subject of the committee's consideration; and they are not without difficulty in coming to a satisfactory conclusion. This collection consists of 25,000 volumes, of which a catalogue has been before the committee, and other information in regard to it has been furnished by an intelligent and public-spirited gentleman, lately of the house of representatives. The collection was made under the most favorable possible auspices, during the French war, in Italy, when the monasteries and all the depositories of art and literature were thrown open to the plunder of invading troops, or exposed to the purchase or thequisition of public agents or wealthy private collectors. To this last class belonged the count Bontourlin. At the price of a million of francs, and with many years of enthusiastic industry, he made the present collection, which is perhaps richer and more valuable in its kind than any which is now or can be expected to be hereafter on sale in the world. It is especially rich in that species of literature which can be scarcely said to exist in this country, for neither the library of congress nor any of the public or private libraries of the United States possess any thing in bibliography beyond an occasional specimen; or of that noble literature, (the whole body of which is contained in this collection), which was the first that came into existence upon the revival of learning, awakening the genius of modern Europe, and inspiring new views of literature, from Chaucer to Milton.

The catalogue presents a complete collection of the Italian classics, as designated as such by the academy Della Crusca; a collection so complete as perhaps to leave nothing to be added. It contains also a very full collection of the ancient, especially the Latin classics, leaving little more to be desired in this department. There are 419 copies of Aldine editions, 368 from the Bodoni press, many hundred volumes printed in the fifteenth century, and many others illustrative of the early achievements of typography and its progress to perfection.

The library also contains many valuable manuscripts. In the preface to the catalogue it is said that there are "very few private libraries which present such a collection of valuable books, as well manuscript as printed, and in such perfect preservation;" and less questionable testimony is given to the same effect by the gentleman above referred to. After an attentive examination, and writing from the spot, he says, "it contains about twenty-five thousand printed volumes, embracing the earliest and richest specimens of the Greek and Latin classics that were issued from any press, the Aldine and other celebrated editions, and upward of 240 manuscripts, some of them unique, most of them scarce and curious. It is most complete in those departments in which the library of congress is most deficient, particularly the ancient authors, belles lettres, literary history, the fine arts, and the standard productions of France and Italy." After a careful examination of the books and catalogue, I have no hesitation in saying, so far as my opinion have any weight, that the collection is a most desirable one of its kind, and would be a valuable addition to the library of congress.

The 25,000 volumes are offered at fifty or sixty thousand dollars. The 24,000 now in the library have cost one hundred thousand dollars, and it will always happen that books purchased by retail will cost a great deal more than when purchased in large collections. In the collection of this library, the committee is informed by Mr. Wilde, the founder expended a million of francs upon it, or near $250,000. If it be the pleasure of congress to add this collection to its library, the whole number of volumes will be about fifty thousand, and of them about one-half will be in our own language, and the others in foreign, ancient and modern languages. It will add several thousand duplicates in French, Spanish, Italian and Latin, which might either be sold without loss or exchanged for works in English.

The number of works in foreign languages would form an insuperable objection to the purchase if it was intended that the library should be completed by it; but this committee by no means believe to be the intention of congress, and when the collection shall consist of 100,000 or 150,000 volumes, 30,000 or 40,000 in foreign languages may not be an undue proportion when it is considered that not a fourth of the literature of the world is in our own language; still, however, this purchase will unquestionably give, for the present, an undue proportion to the literature of the Italian language over that of other foreign languages, especially the French and German. In the German language the library contains, at present, twelve works, and the proposed purchase makes but inconsiderable additions to them; and the number of books in the French language, whose literature is more extensive than that of any other, and the knowledge of which is more extensively diffused, is left entirely too small.

In Latin, Greek and Italian, the Bontourlin library would make the collection complete, and would add very considerably to the French and Spanish. It would make, with the library now owned by congress, about 50,000 volumes, of which 20,000 would be in English, 10,000 in French, 20,000 in Greek and Latin, Italian and Spanish, with a few German. The collection in Greek, Latin, Italian and Spanish, might be considered complete. Future additions would be necessary in English, French and German. If it be the purpose of congress to extend the library to 100,000 or 150,000 volumes, the committee think the proposed purchase is very desirable; and believing that such ought to be and is the intention, the committee recommended the following resolution:

Resolved, That the joint library committee of the two houses of congress be, and they are hereby empowered to contract, on their part, for the purchase of the library of the late count Bontourlin, at Florence.

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY H. NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

A valuable report from the secretary of war is inserted in the present sheet—and a report, of a similar character, concerning the navy, shall also have a place speedily.

Mr. Clay made a brilliant and powerful effort on Tuesday last in favor of his great land bill, and on Wednesday it was ordered to a third reading, 25 to 21, in the senate. This is, probably, the last important act of his public life—for we learn that he is about to retire from his seat in congress; and to have adjusted and carried through this imposing question, with its beneficent results, (the effects of which will, probably, be happily felt for years to come), is, indeed, "glory enough" for one man.

Pending the discussion on the land bill, before the U. States senate, Mr. Clay made the following statements relative to the population of the new states, to show their annual increase between the years 1820 and 1830:

Illinois (he said) had increased eighteen and a half per cent. per annum; Alabama, fourteen; Indiana, thirteen and a third; Missouri, eleven; Mississippi, upwards of eight; Ohio, six, and Louisiana, four per cent. per annum; whereas, Delaware had increased but a half per cent. per annum. The average rate of increase of the whole population of the United States during that period was about thirty-two per cent. which was exceeded by Illinois at the average rate of one hundred and fifty-three per cent. (her average being one hundred and eighty-five per cent.) and by Alabama one hundred per cent. and by Louisiana, the lowest, eight per cent. The average of the seventeen old states was twenty-five per cent. and the new states, sixty per cent. more than that amount.

The St. Louis Bulletin of the 11th instant states that in the course of the preceding week upwards of five thousand emigrants and strangers landed in that city.

The ice bridge at Quebec continued firm at last accounts, (April 14th), and it is supposed would remain so to the 1st, if not till the 10th May. There is at present more ice in Lake Erie than has been known at this season, in twenty years. The upper end of the lake is entirely closed. [N. Y. Com. Ad.

The Montreal Gazette of Thursday, April 14th, states that large quantities of snow fell the preceding day, and on that morning it lay several inches deep on the ground. The roads across the river still continue to be used by the farmers from the opposite shore.

The banks of Cincinnati have come to the conclusion not to receive the notes of any of the banks out of that city. This, as it is stated in the Cincinnati Whig, causes the paper of other banks to be from 1 to 5 per cent. below par, which presents a "glorious" harvest for the brokers.

The surplus money in the deposit banks continues to increase. By the latest returns, according to a report of the secretary of the treasury to the senate, the amount in the affiliated banks to the credit of the treasurer of the United States was $33,294,024 and the amount to the credit of public officers $3,477,252; making a total amount of public money of thirty-six million seven hundred and seventy-one thousand dollars in the deposit banks, subject to the absolute and uncontrolled pleasure of the president of the United States as to the particular banks who shall enjoy the advantages of these deposits, the amount of which in some instances far exceeds the whole capital of the bank. THE LAND BILL. Mr. Clay addressed the senate yesterday in support of this great measure—the bill to distribute among the several states the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands. We thought, after hearing the able and comprehensive arguments of Messrs. Living, Southard and White, in favor of this beneficent measure, that the subject was exhausted; that, at any rate, but little new could be urged in its defence. Mr. Clay, however, in one of the most luminous and forcible arguments which we have ever heard him deliver, placed the subject in new lights, and gave to it new claims to favor. He was not only strong and eloquent, as he ever is, but he was clear and perspicuous in the most complex parts of his argument. Indeed, the whole train of his reasoning appeared to us a series of demonstrations; and we cannot conceive how any mind open to conviction could have listened to it unconvinced.

A large portion of the members of the other house, we were glad for their own sakes, were present during the whole speech; and the galleries were crowded to excess by great numbers of ladies as well as gentlemen.

[National Intelligencer of Wednesday.

The reporter for the Baltimore Chronicle, in reference to the same subject, says—

Mr. Clay then addressed the senate, although suffering under considerable indisposition, and spoke the whole of the afternoon. He went over the whole ground, which he has gone over before and enforced his remarks by new facts and illustrations. At about 3 o'clock he expressed a doubt whether his strength would suffice to carry him through the fatigue. Many senators showed a disposition to move an adjournment, but he emphatically cried out "no—no—I will get through or die." He went on about half an hour longer, when he concluded, after speaking about two hours and forty minutes.

It is supposed that the sales of land, in Michigan, alone, will amount to three millions of dollars, in the present year—1836.

The National Intelligencer of Monday says—

A resolution introduced by Mr. Benton, to require payments for the public land to be made hereafter in specie, gave rise to an animated debate in the senate on Saturday, which had not terminated at the hour of adjournment, and may therefore be continued to-day. Besides the question presented by the resolution, which is of itself one of very deep interest to the western states, and to all the future purchasers of public lands, the debate extended to the merits of the fatal vetoes and other executive experiments on the finances of the country, which added importance as well as interest to the discussion. We shall endeavor to give the debate at an early day.

THE COURSE OF TRADE. Under this caption the editor of the Cincinnati Gazette states that the canal and lake communication with New York, from the Ohio river, and all its contiguous country, is beginning to lessen in importance. The course of the seasons and the distance combine to place this channel of business behind the more direct one already open from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh. It is added that a great proportion of the goods purchased in New York, this season, by western merchants, have found their way to their destination by way of Philadelphia and Baltimore. Goods have also been shipped for Chicago, on the lakes, by way of New Orleans, the Mississippi, Ohio and Illinois rivers. It cannot fail to be obvious to every one that the completion of a rail road from Baltimore to the Ohio river must change all this. Not a bale of goods will be subjected to the expense, risk and delay of a transportation of thousands of miles, when it can be conveyed to the store of the purchaser in less than so many hundreds.

Albany, (N. Y.) April 23. The bill loaning the credit of the state for three millions of dollars to the New York and Erie rail road company has become a law. We congratulate the stockholders of this company, as well as the citizens of the sequestered counties through which this road is to pass, upon a result so auspicious to their hopes, and from which we trust all their anticipations of public and personal advantage may be realized.

We have not been, as our readers may recollect, among the advocates of rail roads as a general means of improvements. Nor are we even yet convinced that they will meet the expectation of their friends. But the system has grown into general favor, and it will be brought to the "test of scrutiny and of time."

We are entirely satisfied that the New York and Erie rail road will be constructed. Indeed, it is already in the progress of construction, and will be prosecuted with all the diligence and alacrity that can be secured by enterprise and liberality. [Ev. Journal.

Texas. The Charleston Southern Patriot, commenting on the evils of the present system of disposing of the public lands, thus illustrates one of the objections: "Another ill effect of these monopoly practices is, that government becomes embroiled with foreign countries, whose territory is contiguous to our own. The contest now waging in Texas is a case in point. The standard of independence in that country has been raised for the benefit of land speculators, who thus turn the enthusiasm of our youth for liberty and for the excitement of arms to their own account. The names of freedom and independence are prostituted to selfish ends, and the adventurous and enterprising, instead of pursuing the ordinary paths of industry, are led off into wild schemes for the sudden acquisition of wealth, but which are likely to terminate in disappointment, if not in ruin and ignominious death."

From the National Intelligencer of yesterday—We copy from the government paper of yesterday a treaty with the republic of Mexico, the ratifications of which, it appears, were exchanged no longer ago than the 20th instant. The object of this treaty is to revive an obsolete provision in the treaty negotiated with Mexico in 1828, and ratified in 1832, for ascertaining and marking the boundary line between the territory of Mexico (Texas in part) and the United States. Each party is to appoint a commissioner and surveyor for that purpose, and both governments solemnly engage to provide any force that may be necessary to protect the commissioners and surveyors in carrying the object of the treaty into effect. It is a remarkable circumstance that the ratifications of this renewal of a treaty of limits—this solemn pledge of amity, with Mexico, should be exchanged at the very moment when friends of the administration, aye, and pretty high officers under the government too, are arming bodies of men, and encouraging them to march into the very territory which the government is by treaty recognising as within the undoubted limits of Mexico. [We do not think it necessary to insert this supplementary treaty. Its sole purpose is described in the preceding.]

Treasury department, comptroller's office, 19th Nov. 1832. Sir: I have received your letter of the 8th instant, stating that different opinions had lately been expressed as to the construction of the 47th section of the collection law of 2d March, 1793; that is to say whether goods of the growth, produce or manufacture of the United States exported and sold in a foreign country, and afterwards imported into the United States, still preserve their original character, and can thus be imported free of duty; or whether they ought, after such sale in a foreign country, to be considered as foreign stock and subject to duty accordingly. In reply, I have to observe that when such goods are exported from the United States and brought back without having been sold in a foreign country they are considered to be entitled to the exemption provided for in the 47th section of the act referred to, but when an actual sale of the goods is made in a foreign country, such goods must be considered as becoming amalgamated with the general mass of property of such country, and on being imported into the United States can no longer claim the exemption in question, but must be regarded in the light of foreign goods and subjected to duty accordingly. Respectfully, Signed JAS. ANDERSON, comptroller. Peter Saily, esq. collector, Champlain.

GRANDILOQUENCE! The writer of a letter published in the Richmond Enquirer, speaks as follows: Durwiddie Court House, April 18. "Dear sir: The election in this county took place to-day, and we are happy to inform you of its result, which we do while the last knell of white-washed whigism is yet sounding in our ears. Democracy has firmly clung together; not one has deserted the faith or departed from the post of duty. Yes! we have triumphantly carried the day "in this fiercely fought field," (where we have been so often vanquished), against this indefatigable Protean band of whig spirits, who have assumed the variegated hues of blue, grey, black and white, any thing and every thing to accomplish our defeat. But the conquering wave of democracy has rolled over old Durwiddie, "wave by wave, CATARACT after CATARACT," until the heresies which were permitted once to taint her fair and earthly faith, are emphatically bleached, RESCINDED, EX-PUNGED. The polls closed thus: Alfred J. Vaughan.....319 Edward Johnson.....243

Majority.....76 The whole number of votes are less than half the number that are given at a ward election in Baltimore! "Cataract after cataract" indeed!

A North Carolina paper calls Virginia a Dutch colony, supposing her to belong to Van Buren. But, says the Richmond Whig—"Wait awhile, friend. You will repent the sneer in November."

VIRGINIA. The elections are now all over, but the returns and particulars are not stated: nor is it certainly known which party has succeeded in obtaining a majority in the house of delegates, or a majority of the voters. It will, however, be a close election. The administration papers, so far, claim a majority of two, and say that parties stand 38 to 36; whereas the whig papers claim 41 whigs and 37 for "Van Buren."

RHODE ISLAND ELECTION. John B. Francis, (anti-masonic and Van Buren), has been elected governor of Rhode Island, by a majority of more than 800 votes, over Tristram Burges, whig. A majority of both branches of the legislature were chosen of the same politics as the governor.

Lowell. The late election for mayor of this city was very animated. The administration candidate was Mr. Postmaster Case. The vote thrown was the largest ever given in that place. Whole number 1,845—Bartlett (whig) 958—Case (administration) 867—Scattering 20, all whig. Bartlett's majority over Case 91. Entire whig vote 978—administration do. 867. Whig majority in the city 111. The entire whig ticket for aldermen and common council was elected. The whole vote given in Lowell last fall was 1,605—Everett 838—Morton 767. Increased vote over last fall's 240.

CONNECTICUT. According to the official return, gov. Edward's majority over Gideon Tomlinson, (whig), in the state, is 2,646. Whittlesey, the Van Buren candidate for congress, has a majority of 3,348 over Mr. Booth.

The mail from Washington to New York now starts from the former at 3 o'clock, P. M. arrives at the latter at 11 o'clock, P. M. This is a sufficient rapidity of motion.

On Sunday morning last, R. Henry esq. consul of France for Baltimore, was found dead in his chamber, suspended by the neck from the tester of the bed, by means of a handkerchief. It appears from the examination made by the jury of inquest, that a first attempt to put an end to his life failed in consequence of the breaking of the handkerchief with which he had endeavored to hang himself, and that a second handkerchief was used before he succeeded in his fatal purpose. He had been, for some time, under great depression of spirits.

Potomac fisheries. It is estimated that not less than three hundred wagons were in town yesterday morning at one time, for fish. They met with ready sale and good prices for the produce brought in, and procured their supplies in fine order and at comparatively low rates. [Alex. Gaz.

Employments of females. The great variety of neat and profitable employments in which girls and young women in this part of the country, can now engage, renders it extremely difficult to procure good family help, or hire females at all, without giving prices comparatively high. The girls employed in the cotton and woollen factories in this town, though kept at work too many hours, are well paid for their labor. An overseer of one of the Newton factories informed us, a short time since, that two or three skillful weavers in his town made about five dollars per week beside their board, and many others averaged three and four dollars. The manufacture of silk in this town, will be principally performed by females. [Dedham Patriot. [This "employment of females" is one of the secrets of the wealth of New England—and the girls are much the better for it.]

FOREIGN NEWS. London dates of the 17th March. The Carlow election committee had reported, exonerating Mr. O'Connell from the charges brought against him.

The prince consort of Portugal had arrived in London.

The citadel at Plymouth had been destroyed by fire; the town major and his two daughters perished in the flames.

A diplomatic envoy is said to have been despatched to Cracow, by the British government to report on the recent military occupation of that city by the Russians, Austrians and Prussians.

In the French chamber of deputies the motion for a political amnesty, in favor of prince Polignac and his fellow prisoners, was lost by a large majority, on the ground that it is the prerogative of the king to originate acts of mercy.

The king of Prussia is said to be laboring under a species of insanity.

It was supposed in Paris that the royal clemency would soon be extended to the prisoners at Ham. A remark made by the minister of justice in the course of the debate on the motion for a political amnesty, was thought to be confirmatory of the prevalent opinion.

The elections in Spain were resulting strongly in favor of the ultra-liberals. The popularity of M. Mendizabal was still on the increase.

Nogueras, the commandant-general of Lower Arragon, is said to have been removed from his command, as a punishment for his cruelty in ordering the mother of Cabrera to be shot. This is said to have been done in consequence of the spirited remonstrances of the British minister. It is reported from Bayonne that the chief command of the royalist army is to be taken from Cordova and given once again to general Mina.

From the Liverpool correspondent of the New York Star.

You doubt the accuracy of my notions of the peculiar morality of the English aristocracy. Take a new instance:—Last month, a case of crim. con. came in the court of king's bench. Lord Langford brought an action for damage against Mr. Barrett, a tutor in his family. It was proved that his lordship had encouraged Barrett's seduction of lady Langford—convicted at his own infamy, and offered him a post obit of £10,000 if he would allow damages in this case to go by default; as his lordship wanted a divorce from his lady! The jury gave one shilling damages; but the house of lords will not pass any divorce bill in a case of such shameless profligacy.

TWENTY-FOURTH CONGRESS—FIRST SESSION.

SENATE.

April 22. Mr. Shepley presented sundry resolutions adopted by the legislature of Maine, instructing the senators from that state to urge the adoption of an amendment of the constitution in relation to the election of president and vice president, the granting of liberal appropriations for the purpose of national defence, and the passage of measures to protect the state of Maine against foreign aggression. The resolutions were ordered to be printed.

Mr. Tomlinson, from the committee on pensions, reported, without amendment, a bill for the relief of Thankful Randall, recommending that it be rejected.

The bill for the relief of W. Bond and W. Douglass was taken up on the question of its passage, when a discussion took place, in which Messrs. Hill, Clay, Shepley, Leigh, Calhoun, White, Walker, Buchanan, King, of Ala. Davis, Hubbard and Prentiss took part; when the question was taken on the passage of the bill, by yeas and decided as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Crittenden, Davis, Goldsborough, Hendricks, Hubbard, Kent, Knight, Leigh, McKean, Mangum, Moore, Naudain, Nicholas, Porter, Preston, Rives, Robbins, Shepley, Southard, Tomlinson, Webster, White—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Brown, Buchanan, Calhoun, Clay, Cuthbert, Ewing, of Ohio, Grundy, Hill, King, of Alab. King, of Georgia, Morris, Niles, Prentiss, Robinson, Ruggles, Swift, Tipton, Walker, Wright—21.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. Benton submitted the following resolution; which lies over for consideration:

Resolved, That, from and after the — day of —, in the year 1835, nothing but gold and silver coin ought to be received in payment for the public lands; and that the committee on public lands be instructed to report a bill accordingly.

The senate proceeded to consider the bill to appropriate the proceeds of the public lands, and granting lands to certain states.

The question being on Mr. Walker's amendment,

Mr. Walker addressed the senate at length in reply to the remarks made yesterday by Mr. Clay.

The question was then taken on the adoption of his amendment, and decided by yeas and nays, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Black, King, of Alabama, Moore, Morris, Nicholas, Robinson, Ruggles, Walker—9.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Buchanan, Calhoun, Clay, Crittenden, Cuthbert, Ewing, of Ohio, Goldsborough, Grundy, Hendricks, Hill, Hubbard, Kent, Leigh, McKean, Naudain, Niles, Porter, Prentiss, Robbins, Shepley, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson, Wall, White—26.

So the amendment was rejected.

On motion of Mr. Ewing, the senate adjourned until to-morrow.

April 23. Mr. Southard presented the petition of the corporation of Princeton college, which he advocated in especial reference to the losses suffered by that institution during the revolution.

Other matters being attended to—

The resolution of Mr. Benton, for a law requiring all payments for the public lands to be made in specie, was taken up and considered.

After a debate, in which Messrs. Benton, Webster, Niles, Ewing, of Ohio, and Calhoun took part,

Mr. King, of Alabama, moved to amend the resolution, by striking out all after "Resolved," and inserting, "that the committee on finance be instructed to inquire into the expediency of prohibiting the receipt, in payment for the public lands, of any thing but gold and silver, after the — day of —," thus changing the character of the resolution from that of an order to bring in a bill to one of mere inquiry as to the expediency of doing so.

The discussion was then further continued by Messrs. Shepley, Mangum, Calhoun and Porter; and before any question was taken, on motion of Mr. Moore, the senate adjourned.

April 25. Mr. Buchanan presented a petition from the society of Friends in Philadelphia, on the presentation of which he addressed the senate to the following effect:

Mr. Buchanan said he rose to present the memorial of the yearly meeting of the religious society of Friends, which had been recently held in the city of Philadelphia, reconstituting against the admission of Arkansians into the union, whilst a provision remained in her constitution which admits of and may perpetuate slavery. This yearly meeting embraced within its jurisdiction the greater part of Pennsylvania and New Jersey, the whole of the state of Delaware, and the Eastern Shore of Maryland. The language of this memorial was perfectly respectful. Indeed it could not be otherwise, considering the source from which it emanated. It breathed throughout the pure and Christian spirit which had always animated the society of Friends; and although he did not concur with them in opinion, their memorial was entitled to be received with great respect.

When the highly respectable committee which had charge of this memorial called upon him this morning, and requested him to present it to the senate, he had felt it to be his duty to inform them in what relation he stood to the question. He stated to them that he had been requested by the delegate from Arkansas to take charge of the application of that territory to be admitted into the union, and that he had cheerfully taken upon himself the performance of this duty. He also read to them the 8th section of the act of congress of 6th March, 1820, containing the famous Missouri compromise; and informed them that the whole territory of Arkansas was south of the parallel of 36 deg. and a half of north latitude; and that he regarded this compromise, considering the exciting and alarming circumstances under which it was made, and the dangers to the existence of the union which it had removed, to be almost as sacred as a constitutional provision. That there might be no mistake on the subject, he had also informed them that in presenting their memorial he should feel it to be his duty to state these facts to the senate. With this course on his part they were satisfied, and still continued their request that he might present the memorial. He now did so with great pleasure. He hoped it might be received by the senate with all the respect it so highly deserved. He asked that it might be read; and as the question of the admission of Arkansas was no longer before us, he moved that it might be laid upon the table. The memorial was accordingly read, and was ordered to be laid upon the table.

Mr. Webster reported the following resolution; which, on his motion, was considered and agreed to:

Resolved, That the several heads of the executive departments be directed to report to the senate their several and respective opinions upon the justice and propriety of increasing the compensation of all or any of the clerks in their respective departments, and, if they deem such augmentation proper or necessary, in any case, that they state their opinions of the reasonable amount of such augmentation.

Some other business being attended to—

The senate proceeded to consider the bill to appropriate the proceeds of the public lands, &c.

Mr. White addressed the senate at length in favor of the bill.

Mr. Walker moved to amend the bill by changing the mode of division so as to make it according to the representation in the senate and house of representatives.

After some discussion, in which Messrs. Walker, Niles, Clayton, Clay and Black participated,

The question was taken on the amendment by yeas and nays, and decided as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Ewing, of Illinois, Linn, Niles, Robinson, Walker—6.

NAYS—Messrs. Black, Brown, Buchanan, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Cuthbert, Davis, Goldsborough, Grundy, Hendricks, Hill, Hubbard, Kent, King, of Ala. King, of Georgia, Knight, Leigh, McKean, Mangum, Moore, Morris, Naudain, Nicholas, Porter, Prentiss, Preston, Rives, Robbins, Shepley, Southard, Swift, Talhudge, Tomlinson, Webster, White, Wright—37.

The senate, on motion of Mr. Clay, adjourned.

April 25. Mr. Morris presented the proceedings of a large meeting of citizens at Cincinnati, Ohio, suggesting the propriety of acknowledging Texas as an independent state, and moved its reference to the committee on foreign relations.

Mr. King, of Alabama, admitted that the situation of Texas was such as to excite the sympathy of all, but he thought it would be going too far to entertain, at present, the subject of acknowledging her independence. He moved to lay the proceedings of the meeting on the table for the present.

Mr. Walker said he hoped the proceedings would not be laid on the table. There had been various meetings in the state of Mississippi, and he should have felt it to be his duty to rise in his place, and move the consideration of the recognition of Texas, had he not felt implicit confidence in the president, and a full conviction that, whenever the proper time should arrive, if ever it did arrive, he would adopt the most wise course. He hoped the subject would be referred to the committee on foreign relations, and he did not fear that this course would commit our neutrality. It would not be an expression of the sense of the country if the petition or proceedings were laid on the table. At the time when the South American states rose to obtain their independence, the distinguished senator from Kentucky rose in his place and moved the recognition of these states. The people had viewed with horror and disgust the brutal butchery of men, women and children, and were desirous to render effectual assistance to their brethren in Texas.

Mr. Morris said he concurred with the senator from Alabama in the opinion that this was a subject which required to be touched with the most delicate caution. We ought to proceed with great caution; but he coincided with the senator from Mississippi, that the feelings of the country had been roused. He believed that these proceedings spoke not only the almost unanimous opinion of the people of Cincinnati, but also of the state. He was willing, however, that the proceedings should be laid on the table for the present, in order to wait for further indications of public opinion, and to see if there was any other evidence of the kind sufficient to induce the senate to take up the subject for consideration.

The proceedings were then ordered to be laid on the table.

Mr. Davis, pursuant to leave, introduced a bill to amend the act entitled "an act to amend the several acts imposing duties on imports;" which was read a first time.

Mr. Davis moved the second reading of the bill, and said it required a word of explanation. It would be remembered by all that the tariff of imports underwent an entire revision in 1832. It would be seen that, in passing such a law, it was not convenient to enumerate all articles of merchandise, as it would render an act too voluminous. Articles of merchandise were, therefore, as far as they conveniently could be, classed. In doing this, it brought goods of like character, and subject to like duties, together; but some kinds of merchandise were mixed in their character, being made of different materials, as of cotton and wool, silk and wool, or cotton and silk, and thus it became difficult sometimes to assign such articles to their proper class.

It had so proved in regard to lead, which, in its unmanufactured state, was subject to a heavy duty of three cents a pound, while in some of its manufactured states it was liable only to fifteen per cent. It was, therefore, immediately introduced in the form of basts, and then applied to any purposes for which lead was needed, being substantially, for all purposes, considered as unmanufactured. Yet the courts held that it was manufactured lead in this form of basts, and subject to a duty only of fifteen per cent. It became necessary to pass an explanatory act, to carry into effect the real purpose of the law, by giving suitable protection to the producers of lead, and basts are now on the footing of unmanufactured lead.

The bill now introduced is to meet a like unexpected construction of the law.

The bill was read a second time, and then, on motion of Mr. Davis, referred to the committee on manufactures.

The senate proceeded to consider the bill to appropriate, for a limited term, the proceeds of the public lands, &c.

Mr. Clay spoke at great length in support of the bill.

Mr. Clay concluded about 20 minutes before 4 o'clock, when, on motion of Mr. Linn, the senate adjourned.

April 27. The bill making appropriation for the naval service of the year, was taken up on the motion of Mr. Southard—Among other proceedings—

The bill being reported to the senate as amended.

Mr. Hill asked for the ayes and noes on the first amendment, which increases the appropriation for the pay of the navy from $1,974,178 91 to $2,544,338 16, and they were ordered.

The question was then taken on concurring in the amendment, and decided as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Brown, Buchanan, Clayton, Cuthbert, Davis, Ewing, of Ill. Goldsborough, Grady, Hendricks, Hubbard, King, of Alabama, Knight, Leigh, Linn, McKean, Mangum, Morris, Nicholas, Niles, Porter, Prentiss, Preston, Rives, Robbins, Robinson, Ruggles, Shepley, Southard, Swift, Tipton, Tomlinson, Walker, Webster, White, Wright—37.

NAYS—Messrs. Ewing, of Ohio, Hill, King, of Geo. Moore, Naudain—5.

The other amendments were then concurred in.

Mr. Hill moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment appropriating money for an exploring expedition was agreed to, but the motion was negative.

The question being on the engrossment of the amendment,

Mr. Hill asked the ayes and noes; which were ordered.

The question was then taken, and decided in the affirmative—yeas 44, nays 1.

The special order, the bill to appropriate the proceeds of the public lands for a limited time, and to grant lands to certain states therein named, being called up.

Many motions to postpone, lay on the table for a time, &c. were made by Mr. Benton and others; on which the yeas and nays were several times called, and generally decided about as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Cuthbert, Ewing, of Illinois, Grady, Hill, Hubbard, King, of Alabama, King, of Georgia, Linn, Moore, Morris, Niles, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Shepley, Tallmadge, Walker, Wright—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Black, Buchanan, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing, of Ohio, Goldsborough, Hendricks, Kent, Knight, Leigh, McKean, Mangum, Naudain, Nicholas, Porter, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson, Webster, White—26.

Among other proceedings—

Mr. Brown moved to strike out the first section of the bill.

Mr. Moore asked for the yeas and nays; which were ordered. [This section provides for the ten per centum to the new states.]

The question was then taken on the amendment, and decided as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Buchanan, Cuthbert, Hill, Hubbard, King, of Geo. McKean, Mangum, Niles, Ruggles, Shepley—11.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing, of Illinois, Ewing, of Ohio, Goldsborough, Hendricks, King, of Ala. Knight, Leigh, Linn, Moore, Morris, Naudain, Nicholas, Porter, Prentiss, Preston, Rives, Robbins, Robinson, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson, Walker, Webster, White—31.

At last—

At half past five o'clock, Mr. Ruggles moved that the senate adjourn—ayes 18, noes 26.

The question was then taken on the first proposition of Mr. Benton, and decided in the negative—yeas 18, nays 27.

The question was then taken on the second proposition "holding treaties with Indians, for the purchase of lands," and decided in the negative—yeas 18, nays 26.

The question was then taken on the next item, "amount paid to Indians for purchase of land," the vote was—yeas 18, nays 26.

The last item "amount expended for the removal of Indians from lands purchased," was negative—yeas 17, nays 28.

The question on the third reading of the bill was ordered to be taken by yeas and nays, and being taken, was decided as follows:

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Calhoun, Cuthbert, Ewing, of Illinois, Grady, Hill, Hubbard, King, of Ala. King, of Geo. Linn, Moore, Morris, Niles, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Shepley, Tallmadge, Walker, Wright—21.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The senate then adjourned.

April 28. The resolution of Mr. Buchanan, instructing the committee on finance to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the president of the United States to contract with L. Persico for furnishing two groups of statuary to complete the eastern front of the capitol, was taken up, and a debate ensued in which Messrs. Preston, Mangum, Calhoun, Buchanan, Clay, Davis and Clayton participated.

The resolution was passed.

The bill to appropriate, for a limited term, the proceeds of the public lands, and grant lands to certain states, was read a third time.

The question being on its passage,

Mr. Niles made some observations in opposition to the bill.

Mr. Benton moved to recommit the bill, with instructions to ascertain and report the proper charges for expenditures to be deducted from the avails of the public lands; which was decided in the negative, only fifteen voting in the affirmative.

On motion of Mr. Morris, that the senate adjourn, the yeas and nays being required, it was decided in the negative, as follows:

NAYS—Messrs. Black, Calhoun, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing, of Ohio, Goldsborough, Hendricks, Kent, Knight, Leigh, McKean, Mangum, Moore, Naudain, Porter, Prentiss, Robbins, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson, Webster, White—24.

After some words in explanation, from Messrs. Porter, Benton and Morris, the senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Friday, April 23. Mr. Jarvis, from the committee on naval affairs, submitted the following report:

That the committee on naval affairs, to which was referred the resolution of the mayor and city council of Baltimore in favor of the establishing of a navy yard at that city, with instructions to inquire into the expediency of making such an establishment, have had the subject under consideration, and report:

That there are already two navy yards established within the capes of the Chesapeake, viz: those of Washington and Norfolk, which are abundantly sufficient for all the purposes of the navy in this quarter, and the following resolution is, therefore, submitted:

Resolved, That it is inexpedient to establish a navy yard at Baltimore.

A good deal of minor business being attended to—

In pursuance of the special order of the 20th instant, the house went into committee of the whole on the state of the union, (Mr. Mahlenberg in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the "bill authorising the president of the United States to accept the services of volunteers in certain cases."

After a rather wide and desultory debate, and the appropriation of 300,000 dollars to the purpose—

Mr. Adams moved to amend the bill by adding a proviso that nothing therein contained shall be so construed as to deprive the persons so called into the service of the United States, of any privileges belonging to the militia, when called into the service of the government; which was agreed to.

Mr. Everett moved so to amend the bill as to leave it optional with the president to accept the services of the volunteers either for six or twelve months. Agreed to.

Mr. Whittlesey moved further to amend the bill by striking out the 4th section, which insures the volunteers against any loss of property in the service. Mr. W. opposed this section as introducing a new principle, and stated also that the subject was under consideration in the committee of claims, with a view to the formation of a general law on the subject. The motion was agreed to.

The bill was laid aside, and the committee then took up, and considered the "bill for the better protection of the western frontier."

On motion, the committee rose, and reported the "bill authorising the president of the United States to accept the services of volunteers in certain cases," with sundry amendments; and on the bill, last considered, obtained leave to sit again. The house then adjourned.

Saturday, April 23. Some time was spent on Mr. Drummogole and Mr. Wise's motions concerning the deposit banks. Without anything thing being decided, the order of the day was called, and the house proceeded to the consideration of many private bills.

Monday, April 25. The resolutions of Kentucky and Massachusetts, in favor of the passage of the land bill was taken up, and, afterwards, laid upon the table—and a large quantity of minor proceedings had.

On motion of Mr. Cambreleng, the bill making a further appropriation of one million of dollars for the suppression of the hostilities of the Seminole Indians in Florida was taken up.

Mr. Cambreleng stated that only $387 remained of the former appropriations for this object.

The bill was, without question, laid aside to be reported, without amendment. [The bill was subsequently passed.]

On motion of Mr. Cambreleng, the committee took up for consideration the bill supplementary to the general civil and diplomatic appropriation bill providing for the salaries of certain officers therein named.

Some amendments being made to the bill, it was laid aside; and certain other appropriation bills proceeded with. Adjourned.

Tuesday, April 26. The morning business being attended to, certain appropriation bills were taken up, considered and amended, &c. And the house adjourned.

Wednesday, April 27. The following resolution, reported by Mr. Owens, from the committee of ways and means, was taken up:

Resolved, That the bill reported by the committee of ways and means, regulating the deposit of the money of the United States in certain local banks, be made the special order of the day for the first Wednesday in May next, at 12 o'clock, provided the appropriation bills be at that time disposed of; and in case said appropriation bills be not then acted on, then on the day next after their disposition; and that the said bill in relation to the deposit banks have precedence on the first Wednesday in May next, or the day after the disposition of the appropriation bills, and the following days, over all other business until the same is disposed of.

The resolution was amended by striking out the first Wednesday in May and inserting the second Wednesday.

A good deal of minor business being attended to—

On motion of Mr. Cambreleng, the house went into committee of the whole on the state of the union, (Mr. J. Y. Mason in the chair), in pursuance of the special order of the 26th of January.

The bill making appropriations for the support of the army for the year 1836 was taken up and read.

And, being some time considered—the house adjourned.

Thursday, April 28. After the usual morning business, the army appropriation bill was taken up and further considered, and some progress made therein.

The amendments were read, and ordered to be printed, and, with the bill, were referred to the committee on naval affairs.

On motion of Mr. McKim, (offered by consent), 5,000 extra copies of the reports of the secretaries of war and navy, on the subject of national defence, were ordered to be printed. The house then adjourned.

LATEST FROM FLORIDA.

From the Savannah Georgian, of the 18th April.

The Santee, captain Brooks, arrived yesterday morning from Picolata, Black Creek, &c. via Jacksonville. We learn from an officer of the army, a passenger in the Santee, that when the boat left the above places not the slightest intelligence had been received of the movements of general Scott and the forces under his command. A letter, dated 8th or 9th inst. had been received at Black Creek from captain Ledrum, commanding at Fort Drake, in which was enclosed a note received by express from captain Gates, the commandant at Fort King, stating that intelligence had been received from General Enstis, who with the left wing of the army reached Piakikaha, (about thirty miles from Tampa) without encountering on the march any of the enemy except a small party, which after an irregular fire dispersed, leaving two or three of their number killed, one of which was a chief (Euchee Billy).

This engagement is doubtless the same as that already noticed as having occurred at Volusia on the 23d ult. in which the loss of the whites was stated at three killed, and the Indians five (among them Billy Hicks or Euchee Billy).

General Enstis states that he has with him a large number of famishing horses.

Information has reached Black Creek that five hundred Creeks, under general Woodward, had passed through Tallahassee on their way to Tampa.

Several Indian tracks have been seen within the last ten days from two to ten miles this side of Micanopy, which were those of small parties of Indians apparently driving cattle towards Orange Lake. It is the general opinion at Fort Drake, which post one of our informants left on the 6th inst. that the Indians had dispersed themselves into scattered parties, but this was mere conjecture. Eighty-five of the Louisiana volunteers were left sick at Fort Drake.

From the Jacksonville Courier, April 14.

Since our last, nothing of importance has been heard from any division of the army. By an arrival from Fort Drake, we learn that on the 1st instant an express reached there, from general Enstis, stating that he was destitute of corn and forage for his horses. He has about seven hundred mounted men in his division. Having no corn or forage at Fort Drake to send him, they must have suffered exceedingly. General Enstis was then about twenty-five miles from Fort Drake, and four or five days' march behind general Scott.

It has now been sixteen days since general Scott reached the Wythlacochee. Considerable anxiety is felt with regard to them. They cannot have met the Indians near the old fighting ground, as their guns would have been heard. There is little doubt, that general Scott has marched to Tampa Bay. It is possible, that the Indians, on seeing his force, deemed it best to give themselves up, and that he has gone to escort them to Tampa Bay. It is far more probable that the Indians have eluded him, and he has been compelled to go there for provisions. With so large a force, it is scarcely possible, that any other disaster should befall them, than a scarcity of provisions.

Gen. Gaines has subjected his conduct to severe criticisms on several accounts—and we shall probably have another war, as soon as that in Florida ceases. The Alexandria Gazette says—

General Gaines in his general order on quitting the army of Florida sneeringly spoke of general Scott, as "the officer charged with the diplomatic arrangements of the war department." General Jessup, in a published letter in reply to captain Hitchcock's statements relative to the supplies in Florida, declares that he must be excused from sharing either the responsibility assumed or the honor gained by general Gaines in his late campaign! Thus they go. Throughout this whole Florida war we have observed with regret evidences of jealousy and bad feeling on the part of the officers. The country ought to frown upon such proceedings.

We shall lay aside the papers—for "future reference." Many of the United States troops in Florida are perishing by the climate, being afflicted with pleurisy and inflammations.

TEXAS.

AG—We give the "sum and substance" of the news—without feeling any sort of responsibility on account of it.

The southern papers bring further and disastrous advices from Texas. The contest, it will be seen, is becoming fierce and sanguinary, and on the part of the Mexicans is one of extermination. The statement published two or three days ago, relative to the junction of the Texian force under col. Fanning with the army of Houston, proves to be incorrect. In attempting to cut their way from Goliad through the Mexican army, they were overpowered, compelled to capitulate, and, according to the account before us, subsequently massacred.

From the New Orleans Bee, April 11.

The most distressing intelligence was received yesterday from this delightful (but at present unfortunate) country, by the arrival of the general De Kalb, from Brazoria, whence she sailed on the third instant.

On the 23d ult. colonel Fanning had sent out a scouting party of about 50 men, they were massacred. On the 24th, he sent out a skirmishing party of 150; they were also cut off. He then resolved to destroy the fort of Goliad, burn the town, and cut his way through the enemy encamped in his neighborhood, as his provisions failed, and his garrison had diminished to 300. But in attempting this, he was surrounded by the Mexicans, and compelled to capitulate and lay down his arms—after which, with characteristic treachery, he and all were shot.

The detachment of volunteers from Georgia under major Ward, has been also cut off, with the exception of three persons, one of whom had arrived in Brazoria before the De Kalb sailed.

On the 26th ult. general Houston found it necessary or convenient to retreat twenty miles rearward from the Colorado river, as one wing of the Mexican army had arrived on the opposite bank. The Mexicans were advancing in two columns—one upon general Houston, the other towards the mouth of the Brazos.

The army under Houston was posted rear of the Brazos river on the 29th ult. and contained about 2,000 men; that column of the Mexicans opposed to him had then crossed the Colorado, and numbered about 3,000. The Texans think and Houston has determined that the enemy shall never recross the Colorado and we think and trust that they shall not pass the Brazos.

The Texans have actually become desperate from the massacres, and situation of their affairs. They have burned San Felipe de Austin; and destroyed all the country in their retreat. They have sent hither their women and children, with whom the De Kalb and other vessels are crowded. They have resolved in case of necessity to burn Brazoria and Bell's landing on the approach of the Mexicans; and are transporting most of their effects to Galveston, for which place the schooner Columbus and Flash were ready to sail. The Pennsylvania and Shenandoah were bound for this port; the Santiago was at the mouth of the river; and the Julius Caesar within.

Extract of a letter dated, Peach Point, March 28.

Mr. Sharp has arrived from Houston's camp—he left there on the 24th in the evening—states that there were 800 Mexicans encamped just above the prairie, and Sharp thinks there has been an engagement. Houston had resolved to attack them; and so sanguine was he of success, that he was about to take measure, when Sharp left, to prevent their escaping by sending a body of 300 men beyond the enemy. Prisoners taken by our men state that the enemy's force did not exceed 5,000 men after leaving Bexar. Houston had with him about 2,000, and his force was daily augmenting. Nothing certain had been heard from Fanning; the reports are that he is retreating; the garrison at San Patricio, of 95 men, had had an engagement with the enemy, killed 150, and wounded as many more, and retreated without loss.

Yours, &c.

J. F. PERRY.

Extracts from the Texas Republican of the 22d March, Caney, March 22, 1836.

To the committee of Brazoria.

I have just arrived from Cox's Point, left about 30 armed men and some 25 unarmed, in charge of the public stores in that place, but fear from the general panic, that that place would be deserted, after bringing off as much as the lighters could bring, but if colonel Wharton had arrived with the force, said to be with him, the point could have been protected against ten times the number. I repaired east, in order to rally all the disposable force of the retreating families, but found every man shifting for himself and helpless family, all of which were crossing the Colorado, and on their way east; and this morning captain Sharp brings the news from the advance of Fanning's army, (who made their escape), that Fanning was surrounded and fighting in the prairie, six miles east of Goliad, for life, when the advance guard made their retreat, which was under the command of col. Horton, and I fear Fanning and his brave companions are slaughtered. The news is that all Americans in Gaudaloupe were butchered by the citizens, Spaniards. Such is our situation, and all will be on their way to-morrow further east; and unless you can rally and send on men forthwith, to the cover of the retreat, all must be lost; and I would recommend the procuring and detention of any vessel that may be in reach, to take off helpless families. And every man who can possibly do so, to rally and turn the enemy back faster than they came. I have the honor to subscribe myself.

Very respectfully,

BENJ. J. WHITE.

Mobile, April 11.

From Matagorda. The brig Tensaw, capt. Averill, arrived last evening from Matagorda in 8 days. Capt. Averill mainly confirms the melancholy intelligence copied from the Register of last evening. She brings fifty passengers, mostly woman and children, who have fled. It was reported that but four men were left in Matagorda, who were provided with boats to quit the place (after having blown it up). The Tensaw saw a Mexican cruiser twelve hours after she left Matagorda.

[Register.

New Orleans, April 11.

We have the following reports by the gen. De Kalb, from Brazoria, that sailed on the 3d instant. General Houston had retreated twenty miles from the Colorado on the 26th of March, the enemy having advanced to the opposite shore. San Felipe had been burnt by the inhabitants. Intelligence had been received at the mouth of the river, that col. Fanning had capitulated on condition not again to serve against the Mexicans, but that the next morning the whole garrison was put to the sword. No official information, however, had been received, and it was not generally believed. The Mexicans were advancing in two columns, one upon Houston, the other upon the mouth of the Brazos. The De Kalb is full of women and children, and also many other vessels. The inhabitants are destroying every thing, and laying waste the country, lest it should fall into Mexican hands.

From the Memphis Enquirer.

The bodies of col. Travis and his little band were burned by order of Santa Anna. The lady of lieutenant Dickinson was within the fort and begged to share the honorable fate of her husband. Santa Anna here proved himself a soldier, and protected her; he replied, "I am not warring against women." He sent her away with the servant who carried this news, and who left her safely near Washington.

Fellow citizens of Texas generally: "news of the most disastrous nature, arrived here from the southern divisions of our army by the lieutenant and twenty men who formed the advance of Fanning's army; while trying to make their retreat from Fort Defiance, they were attacked by 2,700 Mexicans in the Big Prairie. They are now advancing towards the Colorado. Help we want—and that speedily. Time don't admit of my saying any thing more."

—FRANCIS WELLS.

From the New Orleans True American of April 13.

We received yesterday further accounts from Texas, but nothing upon which we can rely with certainty. It appears to us that the people of this country, either designedly or by accident, are kept very much in doubt as to the movements of the hostile armies of that country. Scarcely an account arrives but that is modified or contradicted by a subsequent arrival.

One thing is very positive—the Texans are now placed in a most critical—nay, a desperate situation. They have changed the first aspect of the war, from a people contending for their constitutional rights, which might have been secured to them, to a war waged for absolute independence. To say the least of such a step, it was impolitic, and quite too premature. Their population is too sparse to contend against Mexico—they lack men, money and resources, even with all the aid they have or may obtain from individuals or communities in this country, to hope for final success, or even to contend for any considerable length of time. Their only salvation now depends upon the interference of our government, and the question is, will it, ought it to interfere. We, for one, would be willing that it should.

But we fear that it will not; for the immediate interests of the country are opposed to such a step—more particularly at the present time, when there is evidently a want of unanimity among the Texans themselves, and every one, at least every leading man, appears to be acting upon his own responsibility.

There has been too much division in Texas—too much indiscretion; too much dividing of their small army into small detachments, left to be sacrificed by treble—nay, five times their number of the enemy.

It is stated in the New Orleans Post, that general Gaines has received orders from our government to preserve a strict neutrality in the contest going on between the residents of Texas and the Mexican government; and that armed emigrants from the United States, going for the purpose of interfering in this war, will not be permitted to enter Texas.

Women and children from Texas continue to arrive at New Orleans—most of them in great distress.

We have just received, (says a New York paper), the copy of a letter from Brazoria, under date of 24th March, which speaks of "all the settlements situated between the river Nueces and Los Brazos, (San Felipe de Austin included), as overrun by the Mexican troops, who give no quarter to those taken with arms in their hands."

It also communicates the copy of an important decree of Santa Anna emancipating all slaves carried into Texas in violation of the laws of Mexico. We will publish the whole to-morrow. Meantime, it should be added that the accounts from that country evince a pretty hopeless state of affairs for the insurgents.

It is stated in some of the letters received at New Orleans that among the Americans recently killed in the Texian war was Dr. Harrison, son of gen. Wm. H. Harrison, of Ohio.

SOMETHING ABOUT EXPUNGING.

Correspondence of the Baltimore Patriot.

Washington, March 1, 1836.

A few words upon the doctrine of "expunging" legislative acts. It has been beautifully said that "history is the teaching of truth by example." Our own national history is full of such teaching; and I beg the attention of the reader to that passage of it which it is one of the objects of this letter to rectify, and to comment upon, as a peculiarly appropriate lesson for the present times.

*Both were recently members of congress from N. Carolina.

In the year 1768, the house of representatives of "the province of Massachusetts Bay," addressed a circular letter to the speakers of assembly in the several colonies, upon the subject of certain acts of parliament then recently passed, imposing duties and taxes on the American provinces. This paper, like all the rest of that character and of that time, was drawn up by James Otis, of Massachusetts, of whom his biographer says, that his "great learning, quickness, keen perception, bold and powerful reasoning, made him the powerful source of almost every measure," and in relation to whom the elder Adams has said, "I have no hesitation or scruple to say that the commencement of the reign of George the third was the commencement of another Stuart's reign; and if it had not been checked by James Otis and others, first, and by the great Chatham afterwards, it would have been as arbitrary. I will not say that it would have extinguished civil and religious liberty on earth, but it would have gone great lengths towards it."

This "circular letter" contained respectful but strong animadversions upon the tyrannical and oppressive conduct of Great Britain towards the colonies; and soon after, the governor, (Bernard), of Massachusetts, transmitted to the house of representatives, a requisition of the premier, (lord Hillsborough), "that the house should rescind their circular letter!" and the penalty for refusing was to be the immediate dissolution of that body.

What was the course pursued by that house? Did they succumb to the requisition of power? Did those exemplars of liberty, those first teachers of the rudiments of free principles, leave on record a sanction to this doctrine of expunging legislative journals, and rescinding legislative documents? Far from it! They remonstrated against the requisition of the government, pointed out its absurdity, and boldly, yet in respectful terms, informed the governor that they could not comply with the demand. They said: "It is to us altogether incomprehensible THAT WE SHOULD BE REQUIRED, on peril of a dissolution of the great and general court or assembly of this province, to rescind a resolution of a former house of representatives, when it is evident that resolution has no existence but as a mere historical fact." They went on to remind the government that "the resolution referred to was not then 'executory' but to all intents and purposes 'executed.'" The letters had been sent, published and answered; they were in the hands of the people, and they added—"We could as well rescind those letters as the resolutions, and both would be equally fruitless, if, by rescinding, is meant a repeal and nullifying of the resolution referred to." After much more able reasoning on this point, they conclude as follows: and I conjure the modern advocates of what in our fathers' time was thus considered RIGHT TOY DOCTRINE, to "read, mark, learn and inwardly to digest" the passage. It is pregnant with salutary teaching.

"We have now only to inform your excellency that this house have voted not to rescind, as required, the resolution; and that, upon a division on the question, there were ninety-two nays, and seventeen yeas. Other members afterwards sent in their adhesion to the majority, making their numbers in all more than five to one! In all this we have been actuated by a conscientious, and finally by a clear and determined sense of duty to God, to our king, our country AND OUR LATEST POSTERITY."

William Tudor, esq. the biographer of James Otis, (from whose work I have drawn many of these facts), remarks, that "this decision of the house was received throughout the province, and in ALL THE COLONIES, WITH ENTHUSIASM. The number 'ninety-two' became a favorite toast, and was the subject of frequent allusion." The same able writer goes on to remark, "the proposition that the house should rescind the 'executed' transactions of another had something ludicrous in its very terms."

Such is a page from our own national history, expressing the opinions, sentiments and principles of the fathers of the country: of men who breathed the pure spirit of freedom and independence into the people of their day, and who declared that they acted under "a conscientious sense of their duty to God, their country, and their latest posterity."

Are the children wiser than their fathers? Are we "wiser in our generation, than the children of light?"

EXPEDITION TO THE SOUTH POLAR SEAS.

We were glad to observe in the official paper a few days ago, a commendatory notice of the proposed exploring expedition to the South Polar seas, as we infer from the article a disposition in the executive favorable to the object. The considerations which recommend it to the adoption of the government, connected as well with national pride as with a great branch of the national wealth, are too numerous to be entered into in a brief paragraph; they are fully set forth in the able report made by Mr. Southard, from the naval committee of the senate, which we shall endeavor at a future day to give at large. At present our space compels us to content ourselves with the annexed extract from the article of the Globe, to which we add, from the numerous documents reported by the committee, a letter from commodore Downes, an officer whose general intelligence and great experience in the navigation of the South seas, entitle his opinion to peculiar weight on this subject:

[Nat. Intelligencer.

From the Globe.

Expedition to the South seas and Pacific ocean. We have been waiting several days to find space in our columns to say a word in reference to the above enterprise.

The practical views contained in the report of the committee on naval affairs, recently made in the senate, as well as the address of Mr. Reynolds, delivered a few evenings since, in the hall of representatives, has left a very favorable impression, and there seems now to be but little doubt that the expedition will be authorized.

What is the amount of our interests in the seas where the principal labors of the expedition will be performed?

To say nothing of the vessels engaged in the various traffic among the islands in the Pacific, the following will show what interests we have in the various branches of the whale fishery from different ports in the United States:

This immense fleet of 460 sail will average about 375 tons each—making one hundred and seventy-two thousand live hundred tons, or one-tenth the tonnage of the United States.

The cost of these vessels is from twenty to sixty thousand dollars each, on an average of say forty thousand dollars—which requires an active capital of eighteen million four hundred thousand dollars!

The importance of this trade to the vast interior, even extending to the "far west" and south, is not so generally understood as it should be. A single statement will set this matter in a proper point of view.

Every time this whale fleet puts to sea, there is required in outfits—

Flour 80,040 barrels; pork and beef, 79,120 barrels; molasses, 621,000 gallons; coffee, 552,600 lbs.; sugar, 258,800 lbs.; tea, 172,500 lbs.; rice, 1,300 tons; duck, 46,460 pieces; cordage, 8,950 tons; iron hoops, 4,600 tons; copper, 552,000 sheets—vessels coppered every voyage; staves, 10,000,000.

Whaling gear, $1,000 cost to each vessel—consisting of harpoons, spades, canvasboes, &c. &c.

Besides all these, large quantities of beans, corn, peas, potatoes, &c. are required in outfits.

COMMODORE DOWNES'S LETTER.

Charles town, (Mass.) Jan. 21, 1835.

"DEAR SIR: In compliance with your request that I would communicate to you, in writing, my views on the subject of a voyage of discovery to the South seas and Pacific ocean, I have to regret that the circumscribed limits of a letter will allow but little more than the simple expression of an opinion on a subject of so much national importance, and in relation to which so much might be said in detail.

"I have had some experience in the navigation of the less frequented parts of the Pacific at an earlier period of my life. During my late voyage in the Potomac, I have had an opportunity to add greatly to the knowledge acquired in former years. An expedition fitted out for the purpose of improving our knowledge of the hydrography of those seas, has often been the subject of my reflections. As the representative of a district largely engaged in the whale fishery, you must frequently have seen, from the reports of masters of vessels engaged in that business, accounts of new islands and reefs being frequently discovered, and which are either not laid down on the charts, or so erroneously marked that they can give no security to the mariner. It is probable that not less than five hundred of these islands and reefs have been marked with sufficient accuracy by our whalers, sealers and traffickers, of one kind or another, to enable an expedition to examine the most important of them, without much loss of time in seeking their positions. This will enable the discovery vessels to do more, in less time, than has probably ever been effected by a similar enterprise from any other country. Of the extent of our interest in those remote seas, I need not speak, as you are conversant with the subject; besides, the interest has been fairly represented by memorials to congress. During the circumnavigation of the globe, in which I crossed the equator six times, and varied my course from 49 deg. north to 57 deg. south latitude, I have never found myself beyond the limits of our commercial marine. The accounts given of the dangers and losses to which our shipping are exposed by the extension of our trade into seas but little known, so far, in my opinion, from being exaggerated, would admit of being placed in bolder relief, and the protection of government implored in stronger terms. I speak from practical knowledge, having myself seen the dangers, and painfully felt the want of the very kind of information in the guidance of a vessel in those seas which our commercial interests so much need, and which, I suppose, would be the object of such an expedition as is now under consideration before the committee of congress to give. Indeed, the whole of this business, it seems to me, is a plain and practical affair. The commerce of our country has extended itself to remote parts of the world, is carried on around islands and reefs not laid down on the charts, among even groups of islands from ten to sixty in number, abounding in objects valuable in commerce, but of which nothing is known accurately; no, not even the sketch of a harbor has been made, while of such as are inhabited our knowledge is still more imperfect. It would seem to require no argument to prove that a portion of our commerce might be rendered more secure, and probably greatly increased, by vessels sent, properly prepared, to examine such islands. There are also immense portions of the South seas, bordering on the antarctic circle, well deserving the attention of such an expedition, especially during the most favorable months of the southern summer. Islands discovered in that quarter will probably be found to yield rich returns in animal fur. Indeed, discoveries of this kind have recently been made by some English whalers, supposed to be of great extent, the vessels having sailed along three hundred miles of coast lying south of the Cape of Good Hope. This may lead to other very interesting discoveries, which will probably be found, on further examination, to be a continuation of Palmer's Land, lying south of the South Shetland islands, or only separated from it by a narrow channel. Much might be said in favor of a speedy examination of this portion of the South seas; indeed, I hardly know where an expedition could go where it might not be in the way of doing good, to say nothing of the credit our country would acquire in promoting such an enterprise.

"As to my opinion of the class of vessels best suited for such an expedition, I should unhesitatingly say, two brigs or barques, of two hundred tons each, and a tender, of from eighty to one hundred tons. A great many weighty reasons might be given to show that if, in the same ratio, vessels were beyond this size, the chances of safety and extensive usefulness would be proportionately decreased. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN DOWNES.

"Hon. John Reed, member of congress."

ACCOUNT OF THE PUBLIC MONEY.

Report of the secretary of the treasury, in compliance with a resolution of the senate.

Treasury department, April 18, 1836.

SIR: The present communication is submitted in compliance with a resolution of the senate passed on the 13th instant, in the following words:

"Resolved, That the secretary of the treasury be directed to report to the senate, with as little delay as may be practicable, the amount of money in the treasury on the first of this month, where deposited, and the amount of the liabilities of the several banks of deposit, respectively, with their means of meeting the same; and also the receipts of the treasury for the quarter ending the 31st of March last, arranged under the heads of customs, public lands and incidental receipts."

Infering from the introductory language used in the resolution, that an early reply was very desirable, measures were immediately taken to prepare the statements requested, so far as the necessary returns have been received at this department.—Although they are not yet complete from a few distant places, yet it is believed the results will not be very materially altered by the residue of them.

1. In reply to the first inquiry by the senate, I would observe that the amount of money in the treasury, subject to draft on the 1st of April, 1836, so far as ascertained in the running account kept by the treasurer for his information, is believed to be correctly stated in his communication annexed, at the sum of $31,695,155 76. (A).

It may be proper to add, in explanation, that this is the amount, without any deduction, for outstanding existing appropriations; that, during the two previous years, the receipts from both customs and lands have been somewhat larger in the first than the second quarter of each year, but, in A. D. 1835, fluctuated so as, in the last two quarters, to increase nearly one hundred per cent.; and that the expenditures, during the first quarter of the present year, have been so small as to draw somewhat less money from the treasury than during the first quarters of those years.

2. In reply to the next inquiry, as to the places where this money was then deposited, the schedule annexed also exhibits the amount to the credit of the treasurer on that day in each bank employed as a depository of the public money. (A).

The difference between the amounts in different banks and states arises from the fact that the sums were placed in those banks on mere fiscal principles and for fiscal purposes alone, being money either collected nearest to them, or sent to them for future disbursements or for safe keeping, at the convenient points for public use, in the manner and under the circumstances explained more fully in my last report to congress.

This department, without special authority from congress, and which authority that body has not yet thought proper to confer, has never felt empowered to divide equally among the states or its banks, for loaning out with or without interest, or for any other than fiscal purposes, any of the money now intrusted to its temporary charge for fiscal purposes alone.

3. In relation to the inquiry concerning the amount of the liabilities of the several banks of deposit, respectively, with their means of meeting the same, a document is annexed, the latest completed on this subject, which gives in detail, according to the returns nearest to the 1st of March, the amount of liabilities, immediate and otherwise, of each bank, and the means of that bank, whether immediate or otherwise, to discharge its liabilities. (B). In explanation, an aggregate statement is given at the bottom of the document, which shows the immediate liabilities of all these banks, at that time, to be about $93,000,069 96, and the immediate means of all, to discharge those liabilities, to be about $38,082,699 93; such means being in the ratio of about one to two and a half of those liabilities.—It shows further, that their whole liabilities, other than to their stockholders for capital, are about $103,762,279 80, and their whole means of every kind to discharge them, are about $146,056,210 07, or one of means to less than three-fourths of those liabilities. In further explanation, I would observe that, among their means, are included, under the head of "other investments," the sum of about $12,427,759 97. That is so described in the table annexed, for the purpose and convenience of condensing numerous small items which, in most cases, are set out by the banks with particularity and fullness. As suggested, partly in a note, they consist chiefly of stocks, bonds, mortgages, bills and checks in transitu, capitals furnished to branches, &c. and presumed to be, generally, secure and proper investments.

It may be properly added, in connexion with this exhibit, that the security of the treasury, in relation to the deposits in those banks, depends not only on their large means, compared with their liabilities to the government and others, except their stockholders, but on the collateral security which, as stated in my last annual report, has been given to the treasury, in most cases where the deposits are large compared with the capital of the bank.

The returns of all the banks to the 31st of March have not yet been received and arranged; but, as soon as they are, the results will be submitted. So far as examined, it is believed that the proportions on the above subject, of liabilities and means, will not be materially varied.

4. The fourth and last inquiry is as to the receipts into the treasury for the quarter ending the 31st of March last, arranged under the heads of customs, public lands and incidental receipts. These, so far as ascertained, are from customs $5,006,050; from lands $5,430,650; and from miscellaneous sources $280,000.—As previously intimated, the receipts from customs and lands have of late years, if not formerly, been considerably larger in the first than in the second quarter of that year, though last year so extraordinary a fluctuation happened that the receipts from lands more than doubled in the last two quarters. Contrary to the expectation of the department last November, the receipts from the same source have continued to be unprecedentedly great. This has occurred, also, notwithstanding the quantity of new lands put up for sale, in behalf of the government, at public auction, in the last quarter, has been very small; and the probable falling off in the receipts from this source in March, compared with those in February, has been about one-third. Whether this falling off, or an approximation to it, more or less, is likely to continue during the residue of the year, this department, in the great fluctuations of business and speculation which have characterized the last six months, has not had, and cannot have, any means of judging with much certainty. I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

LEVI WOODBURY,
secretary of the treasury.

REPORT FROM THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

The following is the report of the secretary of war, transmitted to the senate by the president of the United States on the 8th instant, in compliance with resolutions adopted by that body on the 18th February, requesting information of the probable amount of appropriations that would be necessary to place the land and naval defences of the country upon a proper footing of strength and respectability.

Department of war, April 7, 1836.

SIR: In conformity with your instructions, I have the honor to transmit reports from the engineer and ordnance departments, furnishing so much of the information as required by the resolution of the senate of February 18, 1836, as relates to the fortifications of the country, and to a supply of the munitions of war. The former branch of this subject has required laborious investigations on the part of the officers charged with this duty, and their report has therefore been longer delayed than, under other circumstances, would have been proper; but the whole matter was too important to have the interests involved in it sacrificed to undue precipitancy.

The engineer report was received at the department on Friday last, and I have embraced such portions of the intervening time as other official calls and a slight indisposition would allow me to devote to its examination. I did not consider that any suggestions I could make would justify a further delay at this advanced stage of the session, while, at the same time, I am aware that this letter will need all the allowance which these circumstances can claim for it.

It is obvious that, in the consideration of any general and permanent system of national defence, comprehensive views are not only necessary, but professional experience and a knowledge of practical details: such information, in fact, as must be obtained by long and careful attention to the various subjects which form the elements of this inquiry. Although, therefore, I do not concur in all the suggestions contained in these reports, and more particularly in those which relate to the nature and extent of some of our preparations, still, I have thought it proper to lay them before you, rather than to substitute any peculiar views of my own for them. Both furnish facts highly interesting to the community; and if they anticipate dangers which it may be thought are not likely to happen, and suggest preparations which future exigencies will not probably require, they are still valuable documents, presenting the necessary materials for the action of the legislature. The report from the engineer department, in particular, evinces an accurate knowledge of the whole subject, while, at the same time, its general views are sound and comprehensive. I consider it a very able document.

Under these circumstances, I have thought it proper to submit some general remarks, explanatory of my own views, concerning a practical system of defence, and which will show how far the plans and details are in conformity with my opinion. I feel that this course is due to myself.

I shall confine my observations to the maritime frontier. Our inland border rests, in the south west and north east upon the possessions of civilized nations, and requires defensive preparations to meet those contingencies only, which, in the present state of society, we may reasonably anticipate. In the existing intercourse of nations, hostilities can scarcely overtake us so suddenly as not to leave time to move the necessary force to any point upon these frontiers, threatened with attack. I am not aware of any peculiar position upon either of these lines of separation which commands the approaches to the country, or whose possession would give much superiority to an invading or defensive force. In fact, the division is, in both cases, an artificial line, through much of its extent, and a portion of the natural boundary offers scarcely any impediment to military operations. Under such circumstances, it seems altogether inexpedient to construct expensive fortifications, which would do little more than protect the space under cover of their guns; which are not required as places of depot; which guard no avenue of communication, and which would leave the surrounding country penetrable in all directions. Without indulging in any improper speculations concerning the ultimate destiny of any portion of the country in juxtaposition with us, or looking for security to any political change, we may safely anticipate that our own advance in all the elements of power will be at least equal to that of the people who adjoin us; nor does the most prudent forecast dictate any precautions, founded upon the opinion that our relative strength will decrease and theirs increase. The lake frontier, indeed, presents some peculiar considerations; and I think the views submitted by the engineer department, respecting Lake Champlain, are entitled to much weight. This long narrow sheet of navigable water opens a direct communication into the states of New York and Vermont, while its outlet is in a foreign country, and is commanded by a position of great natural strength. It is also within a few miles of the most powerful and populous portion of Canada, and open to all its resources and energies. With a view, perhaps, to possible rather than to probable events, it may be deemed expedient to construct a work at some proper site within our boundary, which shall close the entrance of the lake to all vessels descending its outlet. As such a work, however, would be an advanced post, and, from circumstances, peculiarly liable to attack, its extent and defences should be in proportion to its exposure.

There is already a considerable commercial marine upon the four great lakes, Ontario, Erie, Huron and Michigan, which are open to the enterprise of our citizens; and this will increase with the augmenting population which is flowing in upon the regions washed by these internal seas. It is obvious that, from natural causes, the physical superiority will be found upon the southern shores of these lakes. The resolution of the senate embraces the inquiry into the expediency of constructing permanent fortifications in this quarter. And this inquiry properly divides itself into two branches:

1st. The policy of fortifying the harbors upon the lakes; and
2d. The policy of commanding, by permanent works, the communications between them.

Both of these measures presuppose that the naval superiority upon these waters may be doubtful. But it is difficult to foresee the probable existence of any circumstances which would give this ascendancy to the other party. It is unnecessary to investigate the considerations which bear upon this subject, as they are too obvious to require examination. They are to be seen and felt in all those wonderful evidences of increase and improvement which are now in such active operation. A victorious fleet upon these lakes could disembark an army at almost any point. If a harbor were closed by fortifications, they would only have to seek the nearest beach, and land their men from boats, so that no defences we could construct would secure us against invasion; and temporary block houses and batteries would probably be found sufficiently powerful to repel the attacks of any vessels seeking to enter the narrow harbors upon the lakes, if we could foresee the existence of any circumstances which would induce an enemy to endeavor to force an entrance into them.

As to the communication between the lakes, the inquiry from geographical causes, is necessarily restricted to that from Lake Erie to Lake Huron, and to the straits of Michilimackinac. Of the former, almost sixty miles consists of two rivers, completely commanded from their opposite banks, while the entrance into one of these, the river St. Clair, is invaded by a bar, over which there is but about eight feet of water. No armed vessel could force their way up these rivers while the shores were in an enemy's possession, who might construct batteries at every projecting point, and who, in fact, might in many places sweep the decks with musketry. As to the straits of Michilimackinac, they are too broad to be commanded by stationary fortifications, even if any circumstances should lead to the construction and equipment of a hostile fleet upon the bleak and remote shores of Matchedash bay, in the north eastern extremity of Lake Huron.

I am therefore of opinion that our lake frontier requires no permanent defences, and that we may safely rely for its security upon those resources, both in the personal and material, which the extent and other advantages our country insure to us, and which must give us the superiority in this quarter.

It may, perhaps, be deemed expedient to establish a depot for the reception of munitions of war in some part of the peninsula of Michigan, and to strengthen it by such defences as will enable it to resist any coup de main which may be attempted. From the geographical features of the country, our possessions here recede from their natural points of support, and are placed in immediate contact with a fertile and populous part of the neighboring colony. In the event of disturbances, the ordinary communications might be interrupted, and it would probably be advisable to have in deposit a supply of all the necessary means for offensive or defensive operations, and to place these beyond the reach of any enterprising officer who might be disposed, by a sudden movement, to gain possession of them. The expenditure for such an object would be comparatively unimportant, even should the contingency be judged sufficiently probable to justify precautionary measures.

I had the honor, in a communication to the chairman of the committee on military affairs of the senate, dated February 19, 1836, a copy of which was sent to the chairman of the committee on military affairs of the house of representatives, to suggest the mode best adapted, in my opinion, to secure our frontier against the depredations of the Indians. The basis of the plan was the establishment of a road from some point upon the Upper Mississippi to the river, passing west of Missouri and Arkansas, and the construction of posts in proper situations along it. I think the ordinary mode of construction ought not to be departed from. Stockaded forts, with log block-houses, have been found fully sufficient for all the purposes of defence against Indians. They may be built speedily, with little expense, and, when necessary, by the labor of the troops. Our Indian boundary has heretofore been a receding, not a stationary one, and much of it is yet of this character. And even where we have planted the Indians who have been removed, and guaranteed their permanent occupation of the possessions assigned to them, we may find it necessary, in the redemption of the pledge we have given to protect them, to establish posts upon their exterior boundary, and thus prevent collisions between them and the ruder indigenous tribes of that region. I think, therefore, that no works of a more permanent character than these should be constructed upon our frontier. A cordon established at proper distances upon such a road, with the requisite means of operation deposited in the posts, and with competent garrisons to occupy them, would, probably, afford greater security to the advanced settlements than any other measures in our power. The dragoons should be kept in motion along it during the open season of the year, when Indian disturbances are most to be apprehended, and their presence and facility of movement would tend powerfully to restrain the predatory disposition of the Indians; and if any sudden impulse should operate or drive them into hostilities, the means of assembling a strong force, with all necessary supplies, would be at hand. And as circumstances permit, the posts in the Indian country, now in the rear of this proposed line of operations, should be abandoned, and the garrisons transferred to it.

But it is upon our maritime frontier that we are most exposed. Our coast for three thousand miles is washed by the ocean, which separates us from those nations who have made the highest advances in all the arts, and particularly in those which minister to the operations of war, and with whom, from our intercourse and political relations, we are most liable to be drawn into collision. If this great medium of communication, the element at the same time of separation and of union, interposes peculiar obstacles to the progress of hostile demonstrations, it also offers advantages which are not less obvious, and which, to be successfully resisted, require corresponding arrangements and exertions. These advantages depend on the economy and facility of transportation, on the celerity of movement, and on the power of an enemy to threaten the whole shore spread out before him, and to select his point of attack at pleasure. A powerful hostile fleet upon the coast of the United States presents some of the features of a war, where a heavy mass is brought to act against detachments which may be cut up in detail, although their combined force would exceed the assailing force. Our points of exposure are so numerous and distant that it would be impracticable to keep, at each of them, a force competent to resist the attack of an enemy, prepared by his naval ascendancy and his other arrangements, to make a sudden and vigorous inroad upon our shores. It becomes us, therefore, to inquire how the consequences of this state of things are to be best met and averted.

The first and most obvious, and in every point of view the most proper method of defence, is an augmentation of our naval means, an extent proportioned to the resources and the necessities of the nation. I do not mean the actual construction and equipment of vessels only; the number of those in service must depend on the state of the country at a given period; but I mean the collection of all such materials as may be preserved without injury, and a due encouragement of those branches of interest essential to the growth of a navy, and which may be properly nurtured by the government; so that, on the approach of danger, a fleet may put to sea, without delay, sufficiently powerful to meet any force which will probably be sent to our coast.

Our great battle upon the ocean is yet to be fought, and we shall gain nothing by shutting our eyes to the nature of the struggle, or to the exertions we shall find it necessary to make. All our institutions are essentially pacific, and every citizen feels that his share of the common interest is affected by the derangement of business, by the enormous expense, and by the uncertain result of a war. This feeling presses upon the community and the government, and is a sure guaranty that we shall never be precipitated into a contest, nor embark in one, unless imperiously required by those considerations which leave no alternative between resistance and dishonor. Accordingly, all our history shows that we are more disposed to bear while evils ought to be borne, than to seek redress by appeals to arms; still, however, a contest must come, and it behooves us, while we have the means and the opportunity, to look forward to its attendant circumstances, and to prepare for the consequences.

It is no part of my object to enter into the details of a naval establishment. That duty will be much more appropriately and ably performed by the proper department; but as some of the views I shall present on the subject of our system of fortifications must be materially affected by any general plan of naval operations which, in the event of hostilities, might be adopted, I am necessarily led to submit a few remarks, not professional, but general, upon the extent and employment of our military marine.

There is as little need of inquiry now into our moral as into our physical capacity to maintain a navy, and to meet upon equal terms the ships and seamen of any other nation. Our extended commerce, created and created by those resources which are essential to the building and equipment of fleets, removes all doubt upon one point: and the history of our naval enterprise, from the moment when the colors were first hoisted upon the hastily prepared vessels, at the commencement of our revolutionary struggle, to the last contest in which any of our ships have been engaged, is equally satisfactory upon the other. The achievements of our navy have stamped its character with the country and the world. The simple recital of its exploits is the highest eulogium which can be pronounced upon it.

With ample means, therefore, to meet upon the ocean, by which they must approach us, any armaments that may be destined for our shores, we are called upon by every prudent consideration to do so. In the first place, though all wars in which we may be engaged will probably be defensive in their character, undertaken to resent or repel some injury or to assert some right, and rendered necessary by the conduct of other nations, still the objects of the war can be best attained by its vigorous prosecution. Defensive in its causes, it should be offensive in its character. The greater injury we can inflict upon our opponent, the sooner and more satisfactory will be the redress we seek. Our principal belligerent measures should have for their aim to attack our antagonist where he is most vulnerable. If we are to receive his assaults, we abandon the vantage ground; and endeavor, in effect, to compel him to do us justice, by inviting his descent upon our shores, and by all those consequences which mark the progress of an invading force, whether for depredation or for conquest. By the ocean only can we be seriously assailed, and by the ocean only can we seriously assail any power with which we are likely to be brought into collision.

But, independently of the policy of making an adversary feel the calamities of war, it is obvious that, even in a defensive point of view alone, the ocean should be our great field of operations. No one would advocate the project of endeavoring to make our coast impervious to attack. Such a scheme would be utterly impracticable. A superior fleet, conveying the necessary troops, could effect a landing at numerous points upon our shores, even if the best devised plan of fortifying them were consummated. And, from the nature of maritime operations, such a fleet could bring its whole strength to bear upon any particular position, and, by threatening or assailing various portions of the coast, either anticipate the tardy movements of troops upon land, and effect the object before their concentration, or render it necessary to keep in service a force far superior to that of the enemy, but so divided as to be inferior to it upon any given point. These dangers and difficulties would be averted or avoided by the maintenance of a fleet competent to meet any hostile squadrons which might be detached to our seas. Our coast would thus be defended on the ocean, and the calamities of war would be as little felt as the circumstances of such a conflict would permit.

As to the other advantages of a navy, in the protection of commerce, they do not come within the scope of my inquiries, and are not therefore adverted to. Nor is it necessary or indeed proper that I should present those considerations of distance, of exposure and of station, which would render a fleet numerically inferior, in the aggregate, to that of the enemy, yet still sufficiently powerful, upon our own coasts, to meet and overcome any armament which could probably be sent here.

It seems to me, therefore, that our first and best fortification is the navy. Nor do I see any limit to our naval preparations, except those imposed by a due regard to the public revenues, from time to time, and by the probable condition of other maritime nations. Much of the material employed in the construction and equipment of vessels is almost indestructible, or, at any rate, may be preserved for a long series of years; and if ships can be thus kept without injury upon the stocks, by being built under cover, I do not see what should restrain us from proceeding to build as many as may be deemed necessary, and as fast as a due regard to their economical and substantial construction will permit, and to collect and prepare for immediate use all the munitions of war, and other articles of equipment not liable to injury or decay by the lapse of time. Nor do I see that these preparations should be strictly graduated by the number of seamen who would probably enter the service at this time, or within any short period. To build and equip vessels properly requires much time, as well with reference to the execution of the work as to the proper condition of the materials employed. And the costly experiment made by England, when she too hastily increased her fleet, about thirty years ago, by building ships with improper materials and bad workmanship, ought to furnish us with a profitable lesson. These vessels soon decayed, after rendering very little service. Naval means should therefore be provided at a period of leisure, to be ready for immediate employment in a period of exigency; and a due regard to prudence dictates that these means should so far exceed the estimated demands of the service as to supply, in the shortest time, any loss occasioned by the hazards of the ocean and the accidents of war. We may safely calculate that the number of seamen in the United States will increase in proportion to that rapid augmentation which is going on in all the other branches of national interest. If we assume that, at a given period, we may expect to embark in war, our capacity to man a fleet will exceed our present means by a ratio not difficult to ascertain. And even then, by greater exertions, and perhaps higher wages, a larger portion may be induced to enter the naval service, while no exertions can make a corresponding addition to the navy itself, but at a loss of time and expense, and a sacrifice of its permanent interest.

But whatever arrangements we may make to overcome any naval armaments sent out to assail us, we are liable to be defeated and to be exposed to all the consequences resulting from the ascendancy of an enemy. And the practical question is, what shall be done with a view to such a state of things? As I have already remarked, any attempt by fortifications to shut up our coast, so that an enterprising foe with a victorious fleet conveying a competent force, and disposed to encounter all the risk of such an expedition, could not make his descent upon the shore, would be useless in itself, and would expose to just censure those who should project such a scheme. And on the other hand, the government would, if possible, be still more censurable, were our important maritime places left without any defensive works. Between these extremes is a practical medium, and to ascertain where it lies we must briefly look at the various considerations affecting the subject.

What have we to apprehend in the event of a war? Is it within the limits of a reasonable calculation, that any enemy will be able and disposed to embark upon our coast an army sufficiently powerful to lay siege to our fortifications, and to endeavor, by this slow and uncertain process, to obtain possession of them? I put out of view the enormous expense attending such a plan; the distance of the scene of operations from the points of supply and support, with the consequent difficulties and dangers, and the possibility that the conveying fleet might be overpowered by a superior force, and the whole expedition captured or destroyed. All these are considerations which no prudent statesman, directing such an enterprise, will overlook. But beyond there is a question bearing more directly upon the point under examination. Is there any object to be attained, sufficiently important to justify the risk of placing a body of land troops before one of these works, too strong to be carried by a coup de main, and endeavoring to destroy its defences by a regular investment? I think there can be none.

I take it for granted that no nation would embark in the Quixotic enterprise of conquering this country. Any army, therefore, thrown upon our coast, would push forward with some definite object, to be attained by a prompt movement, and by vigorous exertions. Our experience, more than half a century ago, demonstrated that an invading force could command little more than the position it actually occupied. The system of fortifications adopted in Europe is not applicable to our condition. There military movements must be made upon great avenues of communication, natural or artificial, and these are closed or defended by fortresses constructed with all the skill that science and experience can supply, and with all the means that wealth and power can command. An invading army must carry these positions by escalade or by siege, or leave sufficient detachments to blockade them, or must turn them and move on with all the difficulties attending the interruption of their communication, and with the dangers which such a force in their rear must necessarily occasion. Works of this character are keys to many of the European states, whose political safety depends upon their preservation. Their possession enables their governments to meet the first shock of war, and to prepare their arrangements, political or military, to resist or avert the coming storm. And, although, during some of the wars which arose out of the French revolution, when, from causes which history is now developing, the armies of France set at defiance the received maxims of military experience, and, justifying their apparent rashness by success, reduced, with unexampled facility, or carried on their operations almost in contempt of, the strongest fortifications, the subjugation of each of which had been, till then, the work of a campaign, still the opinion is yet entertained by many, that this system of defence is best adapted to the condition of the European community.

There is also a striking difference between the political situation of those countries and that of ours, which gives to these defensive preparations a character of importance which can never apply to the United States. The possession of a capital in the eastern hemisphere is too often the possession of the kingdom. Habits of feeling and opinion, political associations, and other causes, combine to give to the metropolis an undue ascendancy. Internal parties contending for superiority, and external enemies aiming at conquest, equally seek to gain possession of the seat of government. And the most careless observer of the events of the last half century must be struck with the fact that the fate of the capitals and the kingdoms of mo-defence Europe are closely connected together. Under such circumstances, it may be prudent by powerful fortresses to bay the approaches to these favored places, and frequently to construct works to defend them from external attack, or to maintain their occupation against internal violence.

But there is nothing like this in our country, nor can there be till there is a total change in our institutions. Our seats of government are merely the places where the business of the proper departments is conducted, and have not themselves the slightest influence upon any course of measures, except what is due to public opinion and to their just share of it. If the machine itself were itinerant, the result would be precisely the same.

Or if, by any of the accidents of war or pestilence, the proper authorities were compelled to change their place of convocation, the change would be wholly unobserved, except by the few whose personal convenience would be affected by the measure. Nor have our commercial capitals any more preponderating influence than our political ones. And although their capture by an enemy, and the probable loss of property and derangement of business which would be the result, might seriously affect the community, yet it would not produce the slightest effect upon the social or political systems of the country.—The power belongs to all, and is exercised by all.

It follows, therefore, that an enemy could have no inducement to hazard an expedition against any of our cities, under the expectation that their capture and possession would lead to political results favorable to them. Washington may indeed be taken again, and its fall would produce the same emotion which was every where felt, when its former capture was known.—But an enemy would retire from it with as few advantages as marked its first abandonment, and, if his course were the same, with as few laurels as he won by its possession. I make these remarks, because it seems to me that some of the principles of the European system of fortifications may possibly be transferred to this country, without sufficient attention having been given to those circumstances, both geographical and political, which require a plan exclusively adapted to our own condition.

I consider some of the existing and projected works larger than are now necessary, and calculated for exigencies we ought not, with the prospects before us, to anticipate. If such is the fact, the objection is not only to the expense of their construction and preservation, but also to the greater difficulty of defending them, and the increased garrisons which must be provided and maintained. The hypothesis upon which their extent has been determined, is, that they may be exposed to investment, both seaward and landward, and that they ought to be capable of resisting a combined attack, or, in other words, that their water batteries should be sufficient to repel an assailing squadron, and that their land defences should be sufficient to resist a besieging army.

It is certain that whatever works we erect should be so constructed as to be beyond the reach of any coup de main that would probably be attempted against them. And this capacity must depend upon their exposure and upon the facility with which they can be relieved. But this proposition is far different from one to construct them upon a scale of magnitude which presupposes they are to be formally invested by a powerful land force, and which provides for their ability to make a successful resistance. A dashing military or naval officer may be willing to risk something to get possession of an insulated post by a prompt movement, expecting to accomplish his enterprise before his adversary can be prepared, or succor obtained; and, then, even when he looks to no other advantage than the capture of the garrison, and the effect which a brilliant exploit is calculated to produce; and when he is aware that he must abandon his conquest with as much celerity as he attained it. But formal investments of fortified places, with all their difficulties, and expense, and uncertainty, are only undertaken when there is some object of corresponding importance to be expected. We have works constructed, which it would require armies to reduce. Have we any reason to anticipate that they will be assailed by a force proportioned to their magnitude?

I have already remarked that a European power cannot expect to retain permanent possession of any part of this country. If, therefore, he succeed in overcoming or eluding our fleets, and is prepared with a respectable land force, and ready to risk its employment upon our territory, he can land at many points which we cannot close against him. His debarkation is not a question of practicability, but of expediency. If a safe harbor or roadstead offer itself, and there is no defensive work to prevent his approach, he will, of course, land at the nearest point to the object of his marauding enterprise. If there is such a work, it will be a question of calculation whether it is better to attack and carry it, or to seek another, though more distant point of debarkation. I think there can be little doubt but there are few, if any, positions in our country which an enemy would not, under such circumstances, avoid. He would be aware of the facility of communication, which our rivers, canals and rail roads afford, of the powerful use we should be prepared to make of steam in its various forms of application, and of the immense force which, in a short time, could be concentrated upon a given point; and it is scarcely within the limits of possibility that he would venture, formally, to besiege one of our forts, or, if he did, that he would not repent his rashness. Neither the co-operation of his fleet, nor the nearer proximity of the place of landing to the object of attack, would induce him to seek these advantages at the cost which must attend the slow process of besieging a fort, when, by removing to another position, he would land in safety, and save in time, in promptness of movement, and in his escape from the perils of a doubtful contest, more than he would lose by the difference in distance.

I am aware it may be objected that the weakness of a work might tempt an enemy to attack it, and that it may be supposed the power of some of our fortifications to resist a siege may hereafter furnish the true reason why they may not be compelled to encounter one. Certainly the stronger a work is, the less will it be exposed to danger. But this would not furnish a sufficient reason for making its defences out of reasonable proportion to its exposure. The true inquiry is, what circumstances will probably induce and enable an enemy to assail a given point, and with what force; and how can we best meet and repel him? And I believe a just consideration of this proposition will lead to the conclusion that there are scarcely any positions in our country where an enemy would venture to set down before a work too strong to resist a coup de main. In the view, therefore, which I take of this whole subject, it will be perceived that I do not merely suppose an enemy will not invest our larger works, but that they would not do so were these works much inferior to what they are, both in their dimensions and construction.

What object would justify an enemy in attempting to land an army upon our coast? He would not expect to lay waste the country, for such a mode of warfare is not to be anticipated in the present state of society. All that, under the most favorable circumstances, he could accomplish, would be to gain sudden possession of a town and levy contributions, or to destroy a naval establishment, commercial or military, and precipitately retire to his ships before his operations could be prevented, or his retreat intercepted. I cannot, therefore, concur in the suggestion made in the engineer report, that the first of the three great objects to be attained by the fortifications of the first class should be to "prevent an enemy from forming a permanent or even a momentary establishment in the country." It is not suited to the present and prospective situation of the United States. I understand the establishments herein contemplated are not the temporary occupation of naval arsenals and cities for the purpose of destruction or plunder, because these objects are specially enumerated, but are lodgments, where armies may be stationed, and whence they may issue to commit inroads into the country.

I refer, in these remarks, to our maritime coast generally. There are, no doubt, certain points less equal to self-defence than others, and where the preparation must be greater. Of this class is the delta of the Mississippi, not only in consequence of its many avenues of approach, but because its great natural highway does not, at present, allow those lateral supplies of the personnel, which, from geographical formation and from the state of the settlements, can be speedily thrown upon most other points of the country. This region, however, is admirably adapted to the use of steam batteries, and they will form its principal means of defence.

To apply these remarks to the plan of fortifications partly completed and partly projected. Fort Monroe, at Old Point Comfort, covers about sixty-three acres of ground, and requires, by the estimates of the engineer department, two thousand seven hundred men to garrison it in time of war. Its full armament consists of 413 pieces of different descriptions and calibre. I have been desirous of comparing its superficial extent with some of the European fortresses; but the necessary information could not be obtained within the short time that could be allowed for the inquiry. I understand from general Gratiot, however, that it is probably larger than almost any of the single works in Europe which do not enclose towns within their circuit. Drinkwater, in his history of the siege of Gibraltar, states that 572 guns were mounted upon that fortress.

The object to be attained by Fort Monroe, in conjunction with Fort Calloun, intended to mount 232 guns, is to prevent an enemy from entering Hampton roads, a safe and convenient roadstead. This object is important, because this bay is perfectly landlocked, and has sufficient depth of water for the largest vessels, and is, withal, so near the capes of the Chesapeake that it furnishes the best station which an enemy could occupy for annoying our commerce, and for committing depredations upon the shores of that extensive estuary. But these works do not command the entrance into the Chesapeake; nor is Hampton roads the only safe anchorage for a hostile fleet. Their possession, therefore, does not exclude an enemy from these waters, though they will compel him to resort to less convenient positions from whence to carry on his enterprises. A hostile squadron reaching the Chesapeake, and finding the entrance into Hampton roads guarded by sufficient works, though much less extensive than those at Fort Monroe, would necessarily consider whether the possession of that roadstead is so important as to justify the debarkation of a large body of land troops, and to attempt to carry the works by regular approaches; and this in the face of the strenuous efforts which would be made to relieve it by all the aids afforded by the most improved facilities of communication, and by the light and heavy steam-batteries which, upon the approach of war, would be launched upon the Chesapeake, and which during periods of calm or in certain winds, could approach the hostile ships, and drive them from their anchorage or compel them to surrender, and most of which, from their draught of water, could take refuge in the inlets that other armed vessels could not enter. And even if the works were carried, they could not be maintained without the most enormous expense, nor in fact without efforts which no government three thousand miles off could well make; and all this while Lynnhaven bay, York bay, the Rappahannock, Tangier island, the mouth of the Potomac, and many other places, furnish secure anchorage, and are positions from which an enemy, having the superiority, could not be excluded, and while, in fact, a great part of the Chesapeake may be considered as affording good anchorage ground for large ships. Neither of them is equal to Hampton roads, but most, or all of them furnish stations for occupation and observation which would render it unnecessary to purchase the superior advantages of Hampton roads, by the sacrifice and hazard which would attend the effort. The occlusion of this roadstead does not secure Norfolk, important as it is, from its commerce and navy yard; it only prevents the access of ships of war to it; and against these there is an interior line of defence, which may be considered as accessory to, and, if necessary, independent of, the other. And a land force, deeming the destruction of the navy yard at Norfolk a sufficient object to justify such an expedition, would not sit down before Fort Monroe, if its scale of defence were far inferior to what it now is, but would debark at Lynnhaven bay, where there is no impediment, and march in five or six hours through an open country to Norfolk.

New York is, in every point of view, our most important harbor, and its defences should provide for every reasonable contingency. The engineer report recommends three classes of works: an exterior one for the protection of the harbor; an interior one to shut up Raritan bay; and a third to prevent a hostile fleet from approaching the city through the sound, nearer than the vicinity of Throg's point. The importance of the first class cannot be doubted. That of the second depends on the value of Raritan bay to an enemy as an anchorage ground, and on the utility of excluding him from a landing at Gravesend bay, upon Long Island, whence an army could march, without obstruction, to Brooklyn and New York. The third is proposed to be erected, in order to bar his access to the lower part of the sound, or, more accurately speaking, to prevent his reaching Hell-gate, a natural barrier, which no fleet could pass, and which is within ten miles of the city. Here, if his aim were New York, he would land, and would find no works to prevent his approach. The two forts proposed to be erected at Throg's neck and Wilkins's point, eight miles further up the sound, would compel him to debark beyond the reach of their guns, and would thus add that distance to his march, while, on the north shore, Harlem river would be interposed between him and the city. On the Long Island side there would be no difference but that occasioned by the distance.

It is obvious, then, that, in the consideration of this plan, involving an estimated expenditure, in the aggregate, of $5,807,969, and efficient garrisons, in time of war, of nine thousand men, a close investigation should be made into all the circumstances likely to influence the operations of an enemy. Is the anchorage ground between the Narrows and Sandy Hook of sufficient value to an enemy, looking to the risk of his occupation of the coast, and to the doubts that may be reasonably entertained of the result of so great an experiment, to be carried on, in fact, in the sea, to authorise the commencement of these works without a new examination? Or is the probability of the disembarkation of an army at Gravesend bay, in preference to some other point upon the coast of Long Island, if a convenient one exists, so great as to require these preparations? The same questions may be asked respecting Wilkins's point. The work at Throg's point is in the process of construction; and as the river is only about three-fourths of a mile wide at this place, I think its completion would be sufficient for this line of defence till the proposed general examination can take place.

The situation of New York affords a fine theatre for the operation of floating batteries; and whether a sufficient number of them would secure it from the designs of an enemy, better than the full completion of the extensive system of permanent fortifications recommended, is a question deserving investigation. Such an investigation I recommend; and after all the necessary facts and considerations are presented, the government should proceed to place this commercial metropolis of the country in a state of security.

The works at Newport cover about twenty acres, and will mount 468 guns, and will need for their defence about two thousand four hundred men. I cannot, myself, foresee the existence of any circumstances which now call for a fortress of this magnitude in the very heart of New England, constructed, not merely to command the harbor of Newport, but to resist a siege which would probably, require nearly twenty thousand men to carry it on. I am at a loss to conjecture what adequate motive could induce a foreign government to detach a fleet and army upon this enterprise. The expense would be enormous. The French army that invaded Egypt was less than 40,000 men, and required for its protection and transportation between 500 and 600 vessels. The army that conquered Algiers was about equal in force, and required, it is said, about 400 transports, besides the ships of war. This scale of preparation for enterprises against the shores of the Mediterranean may enable us to form some conception of the arrangements that would be necessary to send across the ocean to this country, in the present day of its power, an expedition strong enough to form an establishment upon our shores, and to furnish it with supplies necessary to its subsistence and operations.

It has been supposed, indeed, by the board of engineers, that an army would find sufficient reason for the occupation of Rhode Island in the consideration that it would afford a secure lodgment whence expeditions could be sent to every part of our coast. But it is to be observed that no part of Narragansett bay is necessary for the safety of a hostile fleet, watching that part of our coast. Gardiner's bay, in that vicinity, is a most safe and convenient station, which was occupied by the British during almost the whole of the late war; and it is pretty clear that it cannot be defended by any stationary fortifications that can be constructed. If it can, by floating batteries, so may Narragansett bay, and the enemy thus be prevented from occupying the latter also, without these extensive arrangements, requiring, after Fort Adams shall have been completed at an expense of one million three hundred and twelve thousand dollars, four other forts, and a sea-wall to be constructed, and eleven hundred and fifty-seven thousand dollars to be expended.

I do not think that the most prudent forecast ought to lead to the apprehension that a force competent to seize such a position would be sent to our country, or that any circumstances could enable them to maintain it in the face of the vigorous efforts that would be made to recover it, and in the midst of a country abounding in all the means to give effect to their exertions. But perhaps the most striking objection to the completion of this extensive plan is, that, under no possible circumstance, can it effect the desired object. That object, if I understand it, is not the mere exclusion of an enemy from Rhode Island, but it is to prevent him from taking possession of a safe and convenient position, whence he could detach his forces, by means of his naval superiority, to any other part of the coast which would thus be exposed to his depredations.

The value of Gardiner's bay as a place of naval rendezvous, I have already described. Block island, in its neighborhood, could be occupied by troops desiring only a lodgment; and so could Nantucket island and Martha's Vineyard, and these are only a few hours' sail from Narragansett bay. Buzzard's bay is also a safe and capacious harbor which cannot be defended, and Martha's Vineyard sound affords commodious places of anchorage. A fleet riding in these moorings would have under its command all the islands in this group, and could secure its communications with its land forces, encamped upon them, which would thus be enabled, at any proper time, to throw itself upon other parts of the coast. It may be doubted, if there were not a cannon mounted upon Rhode Island, whether an enemy, acquainted with the topography and resources of this country, would select it as his place of arms, if I may so term it, when there are islands in the neighborhood which would answer this purpose nearly as well, and where he would be in perfect safety as long as he could maintain his naval ascendancy; and longer than that he could not, under any circumstances, occupy Rhode Island. And if I rightly appreciate the strength and spirit of that part of the country, his tenure, in any event, would be short and difficult. I do not mean to convey the idea that Rhode Island should not be defended. I think it should be; but I do not think that precautions should be taken against events which are not likely to happen. As there is no naval establishment here, it is not necessary to enter into any question concerning defensive arrangements exclusively connected with that object.

It will be perceived, also, that it is proposed to fortify Mount Desert island, on the coast of Maine, and that the expense is estimated at five hundred thousand dollars, and the number of the garrison competent to maintain it at one thousand men. This proposition is founded, not on the value of this harbor to us, for it possesses little, and is, in effect, unoccupied, but on account of its importance to the enemy. Were there no other secure position they could occupy in that quarter, and which could not be defended, I should think the views submitted upon this branch of the subject entitled to great weight. But there are many indentations upon this coast, affording safe anchorage, and which are either not capable of being defended, or, from their great number, would involve an enormous expense, which no sound views of the subject could justify. An enemy, therefore, cannot be deprived of the means of stationing himself upon this coast. And before this expenditure of Mount Desert island is encountered, it ought to be clearly ascertained that the difference, in its practical advantages to an enemy, between the occupation of Mount Desert island and that of some of the other roadsteads in this quarter, incapable of defence, would be sufficiently great to warrant this measure. My present impression is, that it would not.

And on the subject of roadsteads, generally, with a few exceptions, depending on their local positions, I am inclined to the opinion that any attempt to fortify them would be injudicious. I do not speak of harbors and inlets which are occupied by cities and towns, but of mere anchorage grounds, deriving their value from the shelter they afford. If all could be defended, and an enemy excluded from them, the advantages would justify any reasonable expenditure. But this is impracticable; and I doubt whether the circumstances in which most of them differ, give such marked superiority to those we can defend over those we cannot, as to lead to any attempt to fortify them, in the first instance, and to maintain garrisons in them during a war.

I have adverted to these particular cases, in order to present my views more distinctly than I could do by mere general observations; certainly not from the remotest design of criticising the reports and the labors of the able professional men to whom the subject has been referred, nor of pursuing the investigation into any further detail.

I consider the duty of the government, to afford adequate protection to the seacoast, a subject of paramount obligation; and I believe we are called upon, by every consideration of policy, to push the necessary arrangements as rapidly as the circumstances of the country and the proper execution of the work will allow. I think every town large enough to tempt the cupidity of an enemy should be defended by works fixed or floating, suited local to its position, and sufficiently extensive to resist such attempts as would probably be made against it. There will, of course, after laying down such a general rule, be much latitude of discretion in its application. Upon this branch of the subject, I would give to the opinion of the engineer officers great and almost controlling weight, after the proper limitations are established. These relate, principally, to the magnitude of the works; and if I am correct in the views I have taken of this branch of the subject, a change in the system proposed is necessary. Works should not be projected upon the presumption that they are to be exposed to, and must be capable of resisting the attacks of a European army, with its battering train, and all its preparations for a regular siege. Neither our relative circumstances, nor those of any nation with which we shall probably be brought into conflict, can justify us in such an anticipation. All the defences should be projected upon a scale proportioned to the importance of the place, and should be calculated to resist any naval attack, and any sudden assault that a body of land troops might make upon them. But further than this, it appears to me we ought not to go. The results at Stonington, at Mobile point, at Port Jackson and at Baltimore, during the late war, show that formidable armaments may be successfully resisted with apparently inferior means. These, indeed, do not furnish examples to be followed, as to the scale of our preparations; but they show what stationary batteries have done in our country against ships of war.

It is to be observed that the great object of our fortifications is to exclude a naval force from our harbors. This end they ought fully to answer; and in this problem there are two conditions to be fulfilled:

- 1st. That they be able to resist any naval batteries that will probably be placed against them; and
- 2d. That they be also able to resist any coup de main or esca-lade which might be attempted by land.

An open battery, under many circumstances, might fulfil the first condition, but not the second, and therefore these works should be closed and regularly constructed. It is not to be denied that the proper boundary between the magnitude and nature of the works, necessary to attain the objects indicated, and those required to resist, successfully, a formal investment, will sometimes become a matter of doubt; nor that circumstances may not be stated which might induce an enemy to open his trenches against one of these works, because its capacity for defence was not greater. That capacity, however, with relation to the question under consideration, has a far more intimate connexion with the magnitude than with the form of the works, because, if unnecessarily large, they entail upon the country a serious evil in the increased means for their defence, independently of the additional expense in their construction. It is principally, therefore, in the latter point of view that I have presented the doubts which I have expressed upon this point.

Among the hypothetical cases heretofore stated by the board of engineers, was one which supposed that an army of twenty thousand men might be assembled upon one of the flanks of our coast, and that we ought to be prepared, at every important point, to resist the first shock of such a force. I have already glanced at the reasons, geographical, political, financial and prudential, which, in my opinion, leave little room to expect that any enemy will, hereafter, project an enterprise of this magnitude, so certain in its expense, so uncertain in its result, and so disproportioned to any object which could probably be attained. And the suggestion which was made by the board, of defending the city of Washington, by works erected near the mouth of the Patuxent, proceeds upon similar views. Our navy, our floating batteries, our means of communication and concentration, seem to me far better adapted to the defence of this city, than forts at the distance of nearly fifty miles, whose principal effect, if an enemy were resolved upon the enterprise, would be to compel him to make a detour in his expedition, or which would send him to some part of the coast of the bay between the Patuxent and Annapolis, or into the Potomac, where his descent would be uninterrupted, and where he would be but little, if any, further from Washington, than at the head of navigation of the Patuxent.

Even during the last war, when the navy of Great Britain rode triumphant upon the ocean, but one serious attempt was made to force an entrance into a fortified harbor, and that was unsuccessful. The greatest possible force which can be brought, and the greatest possible resistance which can be applied, do not constitute a practical rule for the construction of our fixed defences. Moral considerations must also have weight. Probabilities must be examined. The power of the permanent batteries is one of the elements of security. So are the dangers of dispersion, and shipwreck, and all the hazards of a distant expedition, as these must operate on the councils of any country meditating such an enterprise, the efforts of our navy, the co-operation of the floating defences, and the troops which may be ready to meet the enemy upon his debarkation or march.

In submitting these reflections, I am desirous only of discharging the duty confided to me. I am gratified that the whole subject will be presented for the consideration of congress in a systematic form, and that the principles of its future prosecution can now be settled. The plan originally devised was recommended upon great consideration, and, at the time its initiatory measures were adopted, was calculated for the state of the country. We had just come out of a severe struggle, and had felt the want of adequate preparation, and above all, we had seen and deplored the circumstances which gave the enemy undisturbed possession of the Chesapeake, and its disastrous consequence; and it was to be expected that our arrangements for future defence should be planned upon the then existing state of things. I imagine there were few who did not concur in this sentiment. Because, therefore, some of our works, from the wonderful advancement of the country in all the elements of power, and from the development of new means of annoyance, are larger than are found necessary at this time, still this does not bring into question the wisdom of the original measure. And, as it is, they are most valuable and useful; but the experience we have acquired may be profitably employed in re-examining the plans proposed for the prosecution of the system, and in inquiring whether the change which has taken place in the condition of the country will not justify a corresponding change in the nature of our preparations, and whether we may not depend more upon floating, and less upon stationary defences.

During the period which has intervened since the last war, we have nearly doubled in our population, and all our other resources have probably increased in a still greater ratio. Certainly, some of the facilities and means of defence are augmented beyond any rational expectations. The power of transporting troops and munitions of war has already opened new views upon this subject; and such is the progress and probable extent of the new system of intercommunication, that the time will soon come when almost any amount of physical force may be thrown, in a few hours, upon any point threatened by an enemy. Nashville may succor New Orleans in sixty hours; Cincinnati may aid Charleston in about the same time, Pittsburgh will require but twenty-four hours to relieve Baltimore, and troops from that city and from Boston may leave each place in the morning, and meet in New York in the evening. This wonderful capacity for movement increases, in effect, some of the most important elements of national power. It neutralizes one of the great advantages of an assailing force, choosing its point of attack, and possessing the necessary means of reaching it. Detachments liable, under former circumstances, to be cut off in detail, may now be concentrated without delay, and most of the garrisons upon the seaboard may be brought together, and, after accomplishing the object of their concentration, be returned to their stations in time to repel any attack meditated against them.

The improvements which are making in the application of steam, have furnished another most important agent in the work of national protection. There can be but little doubt that floating batteries, propelled by this agent, will be among the most efficient means of coast defence. In our large estuaries, such as the bays of New York, of the Delaware, and of the Chesapeake, they will be found indispensable; and one of the most important advantages to be anticipated from the works at Old Point Comfort is the security they will afford to the floating batteries co-operating with them, and which will find a secure shelter in Hampton roads. A hostile fleet, about to enter the Chesapeake, would certainly calculate the means of annoyance to which it would be exposed by these formidable vessels. During a calm they would take a distant position, insuring their own safety, while, with their heavy guns, they might cripple and destroy the enemy; and their power of motion would enable them, under almost all circumstances, to approach the fleet, and to retire, when necessary, where they could not be pursued. I think it doubtful whether a squadron would anchor in the Chesapeake, or proceed up it, if a competent number of these batteries were maintained and placed in proper positions.

These considerations may well lead us to doubt the necessity of such extensive permanent works, while their non-existence at the time the system was adopted justifies the views which then prevailed; and without advancing any rash conjecture, we may anticipate such improvements in this branch of the public service as will make it the most efficient means of coast defence. These vessels, properly constructed, may become floating forts almost equal to permanent fortifications in their power of annoyance and defence, and in other advantages far superior to them. Being transferable defences, they can be united upon any point, and a few of them be thus enabled to protect various places. We have been brought by circumstances to a more rigid investigation of our means of defence, and to a re-examination of the whole subject. After an interval of twenty years of tranquility, public sentiment and the attention of the government were, by unexpected circumstances, more forcibly directed to this matter. The result cannot fail to be advantageous. The whole subject can be now re-examined by congress, with all the benefits which much experience has brought, and with the advantage of adapting the system to the advanced state of the country.

There are two bills for fortifications now pending before congress. One before the house, amounting to $2,180,000, and intended to prosecute works already actually commenced. The estimates for this bill may therefore be considered necessary in themselves; under any view of the general subject, and not unreasonable in amount for the present year, because they include the operations of two years. The incidental expenses, however, may be safely reduced one-half, as it will not be necessary to make such extensive repairs as were considered requisite when the estimates were prepared.

The bill pending before the senate contains appropriations for nineteen new works, and for the sum of $600,000, to be expended for steam batteries. The estimates on which this bill was founded were prepared at a time when prudence required that arrangements should be made for a different state of things from that which now exists. An examination of the general system of defence was not then expedient; and the means of protecting the most exposed points, agreeably to information previously collected, were asked of congress. It was no time then to stop, and, instead of prosecuting established plans vigorously, to lose the period of action by surveys, and examinations, and discussions. But the opportunity is now afforded, without danger to the public interest, of applying the principles suggested to the works under consideration.

It cannot be doubted but that fortifications at the following places, enumerated in this bill, will be necessary:

At Penobscot bay, for the protection of Bangor, &c.

At Kennebeck river.

At Portland.

At Portsmouth.

At Salem.

At New Bedford.

At New London.

Upon Staten Island.

At Solters's Flats.

A redoubt on Federal Point.

For the Barancas.

For Fort St. Philip.

These proposed works all command the approach to places sufficiently important to justify their construction under any circumstances that will probably exist. I think, therefore, that the public interest would be promoted by the passage of the necessary appropriations for them. As soon as these are made, such of these positions as may appear to require it can be examined, and the form and extent of the works adapted to existing circumstances, if any change be desirable. The construction of those not needing examination, can commence immediately, and that of the others, as soon as the plans are determined upon. By this proceeding, therefore, a season may be saved in the operations.

The other works contained in this bill are—

For Provincetown—And this proposition may be safely submitted to another inquiry, as the practicability of excluding an enemy from any shelter in Massachusetts bay, a matter of deep interest, and as a work at Provincetown, are closely connected.

For Rhode Island, Narragansett bay—This work may await the result of the views that may be eventually taken on the subject of fortifying this bay.

For a work at the Delaware, outlet of the Chesapeake and Delaware canal—This may be postponed without injury till next season; and, in the mean time, a project for the floating defences of the Delaware considered, and perhaps the size of the proposed work reduced.

For a work at the Breakwater—Until the effect of the deposits which are going on in this important artificial harbor are fully ascertained, I consider it injudicious to erect a permanent work for its defence. Another year will, perhaps, settle the question, and if the result is favorable, an adequate fortification should be constructed here without delay.

For a fort on the Patuxent river. } Both of these works are

For a fort at Cedar Point. } liable to some of the objections stated, and I think they had better be postponed for more mature consideration.

For fortifications at the mouth of the St. Mary's, Georgia—This proposition may also be safely submitted to examination. The estimate for steam batteries may be reduced to $100,000. That sum can be profitably employed.

If these appropriations are early made, most, if not all, these works can be put in operation this season, and the money usefully applied, as fast as their progress will justify; and, I think, the measure would be expedient. But it is to be remembered that the power of the department to push them, during the present year, will depend on the reorganization of the corps of engineers. If that corps is not increased, it will be unnecessary to make the appropriations in the bill before the senate, as the objects contained in the other bill will be sufficient to occupy the time of the present officers of the corps.

Should it be deemed proper to re-examine the subject of the proposed fortifications generally, I would then recommend that an appropriation of $30,000 be made to defray the expenses of a board, including surveyors, &c.

My reflections upon the whole subject lead to the following practical suggestions on the great subject of the measures for the defence of the country:

1. An augmentation of the navy, upon the principles before stated.

2. The adoption of an efficient plan for the organization of the militia.

Having already, in two of the annual reports I have had the honor to make to you, expressed my sentiments upon this subject, I have nothing new to lay before you, either with relation to its general importance, or to the necessary practical details. I consider it one of the most momentous topics that can engage the attention of congress; and the day that sees a plan of organization adopted suited to the habits of our people and the nature of our institutions, and fitted to bring into action the physical strength of the country, with a competent knowledge of their duty, and just ideas of discipline and subordination, will see us the strongest nation, for the purposes of self-defence, on the face of the globe. Certainly such an object is worthy the attention of the legislature.

3. The cultivation of military science, that we may keep pace with the improvements which are made in Europe, and not be compelled to enter into a contest with an adversary whose superior knowledge would give him pre-eminent advantages. War is an advancing science. Many an original genius and many an acute intellect are at all times at work upon it; and the European communities have such a relation to one another, that the profession of arms is peculiarly encouraged, and every effort made to place their military establishments, not at the highest numerical point, but in the best condition for efficient service, both with respect to its morale and materiel. It is not by the mere reading of professional authors that the necessary instruction in this branch of knowledge can be obtained; there must be study and practice; a union of principle and details, which can best be obtained by a course of education directed to this object. This, I think, is one of the greatest advantages of the military academy. It cannot have escaped the recollection of those who were upon the theatre of action at the commencement of the last war, that the first year was almost spent in a series of disaster, which, however, brought their advantages. We were comparatively ignorant of the state of military science, and we did not fully recover our true position till we had received many severe lessons; at what an expense of life and treasure need not be stated.

4. The skeleton of a regular establishment, to which any necessary additions may be made, securing, at the same time, economy, with a due power of expansion, and the means of meeting a war with all the benefit of a regularly organized force. This object is attained by our present army.

5. The preparation and proper distribution of all the munitions of war, agreeably to the views hereinafter submitted.

6. I think all the defensive works now in the process of construction should be finished, agreeably to the plans upon which they have been projected.

7. All the harbors and inlets upon the coast, where there are cities or towns whose situation and importance create just apprehension of attack, and particularly where we have public naval establishments, should be defended by works proportioned to any exigency that may probably arise.

Having already presented my general views upon this branch of the inquiry, I need not repeat the practical limitations which I propose for adoption. But before any expenditure is incurred for new works, I think an examination should be made, in every case, in order to apply these principles to the proposed plan of operations, and thus reduce the expense of construction where this can properly be done, and, also, the eventual expense of maintaining garrisons required to defend works disproportioned to the objects sought to be attained. I would organize a board for this object, with special instructions for its government.

8. Provision should be made for the necessary experiments, to test the superiority of the various plans that may be offered for the construction and use of steam batteries; I mean batteries to be employed as accessories in the defence of the harbors and inlets, and in aid of the permanent fortifications.

The progressive improvement in the application of the power of steam renders it expedient, at any given time, to make extensive arrangements, connected with this class of works, with a view to their future employment. The improvement of to-day may be superseded by the experience of to-morrow; and modes of application may be discovered, before any exigency arises, rendering a resort to these defences necessary, which may introduce an entire revolution into this department of art and industry. Still, however, experiments should be made, and a small number of these vessels constructed. Their proper draught of water, their form and equipment, the situation and security of their machinery, the number, calibre, and management of their guns, and the best form of the engines to be used, are questions requiring much consideration, and which can only be determined by experience. And there can be little doubt that suitable rewards would soon put in operation the inventive faculties of some of our countrymen, and lead to the tender of plans, practically suited to the circumstances. As we acquire confidence by our experience, arrangements could be made for collecting and preparing the indestructible materials for the construction and equipment of these vessels, as far as such a measure may not interfere with any probable change, which at the time may be anticipated in the application of the power of steam.

9. I recommend a reconsideration of the project for fortifying the roadsteads or open anchorage grounds, and its better adaptation to the probable future circumstances of the country.

And I would suggest that the works which are determined on be pushed with all reasonable vigor, that our whole coast may be placed beyond the reach of injury or insult, as soon as a just regard to circumstances will permit. No objections can arise to this procedure on the ground of expense, because, whatever system may be approved by the legislature, nothing will be gained by delaying its completion beyond the time necessary to the proper execution of the work. In fact, the cost will be greater the longer we are employed in it, not only for obvious reasons, arising out of general superintendence and other contingencies, but because accidents are liable to happen to unfinished works, and the business upon them is deranged by the winter, when they must be properly secured; and the season for resuming labor always finds some preparations necessary which would not have been required had no interruption happened.

But the political considerations which urge forward this great object are entitled to much more weight. When once completed we should feel secure. There is probably not a man in the country who did not look with some solicitude, during the past season, at our comparatively defenceless condition, when the issue of our discussions with France was uncertain; and who did not regret that our preparations, during the long interval of peace we had enjoyed, had not kept pace with our growth and importance. We have now this lesson to add to our other experience. Adequate security is not only due from the government to the country, and the conviction of it is not only satisfactory, but the knowledge of its existence cannot fail to produce an influence upon other nations, as well in the advent of war itself as in the mode of conducting it. If we are prepared to attack and resist, the chances of being compelled to embark in hostilities will be diminished much in proportion to our preparation. An unprotected commerce, a defenceless coast, and a military marine, wholly inadequate to the wants of our service, would indeed hold out strong inducements to other nations to convert trifling pretences into serious causes of quarrel.

There are two suggestions connected with the prosecution of our works, which I venture to make:

First. That the corps of engineers should be increased. The reasons for this measure have been heretofore submitted, and the proposition has been recommended by you to congress. I will merely add, upon the present occasion, that the officers of this corps are not sufficiently numerous for the performance of the duties committed to them; and that if an augmentation does not take place, the public interest will suffer in a degree far beyond the value of any pecuniary consideration connected with this increase. And,

Secondly. I think that, when the plan of a work has been approved by congress, and its construction authorised, the whole appropriation should be made at once, to be drawn from the treasury in annual instalments, to be fixed by the law. This mode of appropriation would remedy much of the inconvenience which has been felt for years in this branch of the public service. The uncertainty respecting the appropriations annually deranges the business, and the delay which biennially takes place in the passage of the necessary law reduces the alternate season of operations to a comparatively short period. An exact inquiry into the effect which the present system of making the appropriations has had upon the expense of the works, would probably exhibit an amount far greater than is generally anticipated.

The report from the ordnance department shows the quantity and nature of the munitions of war, estimated to be eventually necessary, and their probable cost, including new establishments necessary for their fabrication and preservation. The conjectural amount is $29,955,537.

Believing it is not expedient, at present, to make any preparations upon a scale of this magnitude, I have deemed it proper to accompany this report with a brief statement of my own views, where I depart from the suggestions that are presented in this document.

As our fortifications are constructed, their armaments should be provided; and the amount in depot should at all times exceed the anticipated demand, to meet the casualties of the service. We have now on hand 1,815 new cannon for seacoast defence, and about 1,000 others, most of which are either useless or of doubtful character. The works actually finished, or so far completed as to admit of a part of their armament being placed in them, require about 2,000 guns. They are calculated ultimately to mount about 600 more. Others in the process of construction will require about 1,400. So far we have certain data for our estimates; unless, indeed, which I am inclined to believe, it should not be found necessary ever to provide the full complement destined for the largest of these works. Beyond this the subject is conjectural. And the quantity needed must depend upon the principles that may be adopted in the further progress of the system of fortifications. There are four private foundries at which the public cannon are cast. These, if their whole attention were devoted to the object, could manufacture from 1,200 to 1,500 annually. As to carriages and other supplies, the amount that could be procured within a reasonable period is almost indefinite. Iron carriages are now made for all the casemate batteries, and they have not only the advantage of indestructibility from the atmosphere, but requiring no seasoned materials, they may be supplied by the foundries through the country to almost any extent.

We have two armories for the manufacture of small arms, and there are seven private establishments which fabricate arms for the government. All these supplies are of the best description, and are submitted to a rigid inspection, which prevents imposition. The armories can at present turn out about 27,000 arms annually, and probably 11,000 or 12,000 could be made at existing private establishments. Should any exigency require larger supplies, the quantity can be much increased. We have now on hand about 700,000 small arms, and there have been issued to the states about 180,000 muskets, 25,000 rifles, 30,000 pistols and 378 field cannon and carriages, under the act for arming the militia. If 100,000 of these muskets and rifles are preserved, there are in the country 800,000 of those species of arms belonging to the general or state governments.

What may be considered a proper supply, is a question admitting much difference of opinion. It will be seen that the ordnance department fixes the amount at about 600,000, in addition to what are now on hand, and including the number necessary to arm the militia. We had, at the commencement of the last war, 240,000 muskets, and during its progress 60,000 more were made and purchased. At its termination there were but 20,000 at the various arsenals. The residue were in the hands of the troops, or had been lost in the service. This consumption was greater, I think, than was necessary, or than would probably again take place. A plan of accountability has been introduced, by which the men are charged with the arms they receive; and if these are improperly lost or injured, the value is deducted from their pay. The paymasters cannot settle with them till this matter is adjusted.

The stock of small arms in Great Britain, in depot, in 1817, was 818,282
In the public service 200,974

Total 1,019,256

The number in depot in France, in 1811, was 600,000, not including the great number in service.

My own impression is, that 1,000,000 small arms may be considered a competent supply for the United States; and if so, a large deduction may be made from the estimate of the ordnance department, under this head of expenditure. Although the component materials of these arms are almost imperishable, still it is not expedient to keep a stock unnecessarily large on hand; because there is not only some risk and expense in their preservation, but, because, like every other article manufactured by man, they are no doubt susceptible of great improvement. And it may be that those now made may be superseded by an improved model, which, once introduced, must be adopted, at whatever expense or inconvenience, by all nations. And the ingenious invention lately exhibited in this city, by which a series of balls in separate charges are brought, by a rotary motion, to a common place of discharge, suggests the possibility of a revolution in the form of our fire-arms.

On the subject of depots for these arms, I accord with the general suggestions made by the colonel of ordnance. I think the number should be increased, and arms placed in every part of the country, ready to be used as circumstances may require.

It will be observed that, in the estimate I have made, I confine myself to the armament for the public service, connected with the actual defence of the country, whether to be used by the army or militia in time of war; but I do not extend my views to a supply for arming the militia, in order to discipline them in time of peace. The extent of this policy is a question not necessary in the consideration of the subject before me.

As the arms in depot approach whatever number may be assumed as the proper maximum, the necessity for additional armories becomes less. When our stock is once completed, the present armories, without any aid from the private establishments, will be able to supply the annual consumption. I think, therefore, that two additional armories, as suggested by the ordnance department, are not wanted. And, indeed, although there are considerations attending the transportation of the crude and the manufactured article, and other circumstances which would justify the establishment of a new armory upon the western waters at present, yet, if the measure is not carried into effect soon, its importance will annually diminish.

But a national foundry for cannon, both for the military and naval service, and perhaps two, in different sections of the country, should be erected without delay. The best interests of the public require it. But I have nothing to add to the suggestions made upon this subject in my last annual report.

As to field artillery, the extent to which it shall be provided must depend upon the views of the legislature concerning the expediency of issuing it to the militia. If a more efficient organization does not take place, I think the expenditure on this account may well be saved to the public treasury. I consider all attempts to improve the condition of the militia upon the present plan as so nearly useless, that the whole system has become a burden upon the public, without any corresponding advantage. The principal benefit which results from the existing state of things, is the power to call into service such portions of the population as may be wanted. But this may be attained by a simple classification, without the cumbrous machinery which at present creates expense and trouble, and which, while it promises little, performs still less. Very respectfully, sir, I have the honor to be, &c. LEW. CASS.

THE PAST—THE PRESENT—FOR THE FUTURE.

EDITED, PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY H. NILES, AT $5 PER ANNUM, PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

We publish an extra half-sheet of eight pages, to get in reports of the speeches of Messrs. Rives and Leigh, (senators from Virginia), on the expunging resolution of Mr. Benton; together, they contain, perhaps, as much, on either side, as most of our readers will desire to have on the subject. We have added other things of a documentary character, which will be found useful to the future.

Copies of the report of the secretary of the treasury, on the supply and consumption of cotton, have been politely sent to us, by the industrious and able author; and we shall take an early opportunity to present an abstract of its contents, with explanatory and other remarks.

Mr. Clay's land bill has passed the senate—25 to 20. What will be its fate in the house, or the ultimate decision concerning it, we shall know, by and bye. A veto is spoken of—but, if given under the various new circumstances that will present themselves, it will be, indeed, a strong interference on the part of the executive.

We shall make a record of sundry articles of information and news from Florida and Texas—in neither of which do things go on as we would have them. In the former, it is most probable, now, that the war will last until next winter; and in the latter, it seems likely that Santa Anna will sweep the country with fire and sword. The Texians were flying for shelter in all directions, and in the greatest terror—especially the women and children,

The journey between Richmond and New York is now accomplished in 42, and that from Baltimore to New York in 16½ hours.

FOREIGN NEWS. By the packet-ship George Washington, capt. Holdredge, London and Liverpool papers to March 26, inclusive, have been received at New York.

In the British house of commons, March 25, Mr. T. Duncombe gave notice of his intention to move "that an humble address be presented to his majesty, to submit to his majesty the propriety of his majesty using his good offices with his ally the king of the French for the liberation of the prince de Polignac, and Messrs. de Peyronnet, Chantelauze and Guernando Ranville."

The new naval armaments were still in progress at Toulon, but their destination was as much as ever matter of conjecture. According to one version, the expedition was to proceed against Tangiers, with orders to set fire to that town by way of reprisal for the powerful assistance in men and arms secretly afforded by the emperor of Morocco to Abdel-Kader.

The French chamber of deputies have voted a supplementary grant of 500,000 ($100,000) in favor of the Polish and Italian refugees residing in France. The sum previously voted to them, and which has turned out short of their wants, was 2,500,000 francs ($500,000).

The president's peace message had been received in France, and is thus noticed by Galignani's Messenger of the 17th:

Thursday, 1 o'clock. We have just received by express from Havre, New York and other American papers to the 29th ult. brought by the Sully, captain Lines, which arrived off that port on the evening of the 14th instant, but was unable to procure a pilot until the following day. These journals speak in the most satisfactory tone of the termination of the misunderstanding with France, upon the subject of which we subjoin the message of gen. Jackson to the senate, on the 22d of February, with the official statement of the British charge d'affaires that the government of France had expressed itself satisfied, and was ready to pay the money in dispute. Some of the papers were very merry in their description of the mortification of the war party by this termination of the affair.

[The Paris Messenger of 23d of March, says: "It was yesterday reported on 'change, says a journal, that the treasury had already paid the instalments of the indemnity to the U. States, which are already due."

We understand that, on the 19th of March, the Messrs. Rothschild had applied to the agents of the Havre packets for the freight of specie, being the first two instalments under the French indemnity treaty.]

From the Journal des Debats.

Germany has taken no small part in the march of real improvement which has of late been adopted by the most civilized states. She has entered the lists with England, the United States and France. She has been the first in Europe to form a rail road on an extended scale. At the present moment these rail roads have become the fashion in Germany, or rather a species of mania; they have projected as many as we have, and commenced more. Prussia and Austria are vying with each other in the establishment of manufactures, and improvements of various communications. Prussia has now her paper money as well as the United States.

Constantinople, Feb. 21. The Russian fleet in the ports of the Black Sea is ready to put to sea at the shortest notice, and it is said that very large reinforcements come to the Russian troops in Bessarabia. The appearance of things here is not as if we were in a state of profound peace. The armaments, both by sea and land, are continued with great activity.

Spain. An engagement took place at Orluna, March 6, between the queen's troops and the Carlists. It was brought about by a movement on the part of the Carlist general Eguia, the object of which was to prevent a junction between the troops of Cordova and Espartaco. The movement, however, did not tend to the desired result, Eguia having been unable to maintain his ground at Orluna, where the engagement took place. He was defeated, or, at least, compelled to withdraw, and the junction between the two corps of Cordova and Espartaco was therefore effected. The Carlists are said to have left on the field of battle 600 killed and wounded, and to have lost besides 150 men, who were made prisoners. This engagement is represented as the most serious of any that have occurred between the Carlists and Christians during the last six months.

According to accounts referred to by the Monitor of Friday, Mina had left Barcelona on the 10th, on his long-prepared expedition against the Carlist bands which infest Catalonia. He had levied a contribution of 500,000 francs ($20,000), on the inhabitants of Barcelona towards defraying the expenses of this expedition. Ripoll and Camprodon were besieged by the united bands of Torres, Tristani and Brujo.

LATEST FROM FLORIDA.

Major general Macomb and captain Cooper, his aid, arrived at Mobile on the 22d ultimo, from Pensacola, which place they reached the night before, in a United States cutter, from Tampa Bay. Dates from Tampa; through this channel, are down to the 15th ult.

In addition to particulars, we learn that, on the 11th, general Smith, of the Louisiana volunteers, was sent, with 500 men, to Charlotte harbor, to ascend the stream and capture all the Indian families supposed to be secreted there. Another force, consisting of about 200 mounted cavalry, was despatched to drive the Indians in that direction.

General Scott, shipped off, on the 12th, about 400 Seminoles, men, women and children. They were Black Dirt and his tribe. On the 15th, the army started to return on both sides of the Wythlacoochee.

There were 400 sick at Tampa Bay, and the climate was getting worse and worse for the army. It is said to be the design of general Scott to discharge the volunteers, and send them home before the 1st of May, and to select the most healthy points compatible with the service, to establish posts of regulars, of whom there are about 1,300 to keep the Indians in check until the hot season shall have passed.

Gen. Macomb and aid left Mobile on the same day they arrived there for New Orleans, on their return to Washington city, via the Mississippi.

There were several of the wounded and sick volunteers at Mobile, and among them was general Shelton, of the South Carolina volunteers. [Nat. Int.]

[We shall, hereafter, give the details of late events in Florida—for future use; and especially relating to the march of gen. Scott's army to Tampa Bay, with some official letters.]

THE MEXICAN BORDERS.

From the Washington Globe.

The information from Texas is calculated to excite apprehensions that the forces of the United States on the frontiers may be involved in the contest. It seems that the Mexican emissaries alluded to in general Gaines' despatch to the governor of Louisiana, (see the following article) have succeeded in arousing to action the Indians within our western limits; and according to the general's construction of the treaty between the United States and Mexico, as given in that despatch, he feels himself called upon to interpose to prevent these Indians from taking part in the war. General Gaines states that his orders from the president require him "to remain entirely neutral, and to cause that neutrality to be respected." But if, to effect this object, he deems it a duty to oppose the employment of the Indians within our frontiers, and has marched to the Sabine, as the letter from Fort Jessup to the editor of the Bulletin indicates, to arrest the progress of the Indians in that quarter, there is great likelihood that a war in our eastern border has been already commenced, the close of which cannot be certainly divined. We trust that, however strong sympathies in favor of our countrymen who are emigrants in Texas may be, nothing will be done by an American officer to tarnish the high character of the United States for national propriety and good faith.

Head quarters, western department,
Natchitoches, (La.) 8th April, 1836.

SIR: The war in Texas, which has of late assumed a sanguinary and savage aspect, had induced the president of the United States to require a considerable augmentation of regular force to be concentrated upon this section of the national frontier, to which my attention has been particularly directed. He deems it to be the duty of the United States to remain entirely neutral, and to cause their neutrality to be respected—peaceably if practicable—forcibly if necessary.

The 33d article of the treaty with Mexico requires both the contracting parties to prevent "by force, all hostilities and incursions on the part of the Indian nations living within their respective boundaries, so that the United States of America will not suffer their Indians to attack the citizens of the Mexican states," &c.

The provisions of this article I am particularly instructed to cause to be enforced, and I have, pursuant to instructions, taken measures to make known to the various Indian tribes inhabiting that portion of United States bordering upon the Mexican territory, on the waters of the Red and Arkansas rivers, the determination of the government to prevent any hostile incursions into Texas, and have directed that the chiefs be called upon to inculcate upon their people the necessity of carefully abstaining from any violation of the above mentioned engagements; and I have moreover informed them, pursuant to the orders of the president, that I will not hesitate to use the force at my disposal for the purpose of preventing any such designs.

I have learned from several of our citizens, entitled to credit, that one Manuel Flores, a Mexican Spaniard, but for several years past a citizen of "Spanish town," in this state, near the Sabine Ridge, has been lately commissioned by persons professing to act by the authority of the Mexican government, for the purpose of enticing the Indians in the western prairies on our side of the boundary line to join them in the war of extermination now waging in Texas; and that, with this view, the agent, Manuel Flores accompanied by a stranger, has lately passed up the valley of the Red river, and has already produced considerable excitement among the Caddo Indians. And I have very recently learned from several intelligent persons in Texas, and others who have lately been there, that many of our Indians have gone over to the Texas side of the line.

These facts and circumstances present to me the most important question whether I am to sit still and suffer these movements to be so far matured as to place the white settlements on both sides of the line wholly within the power of the savages, or whether I ought not instantly to prepare the means for protecting the frontier settlements; and if necessary, compelling the Indians to return to their own homes and hunting grounds?

I cannot but decide in favor of the last alternative which this question presents; for nothing can be more evident than that an Indian war, commencing on either side of the line, will as surely extend to both sides as that a lighted quick match thrust into one side of a powder magazine would extend the explosion to both sides.

But I am without mounted men, the only description of force which will enable me to interpose an efficient check to the daily increasing danger which every intelligent citizen with whom I have conversed upon the subject apprehends. And apprehending as I do that the loss of a month, which it would require to submit the case to the president of the United States, might prove fatal to a large portion of the frontier inhabitants, I have determined to solicit of your excellency a brigade, to consist of two or three battalions of volunteers—as many to be mounted as practicable—to repair to this place as soon as may be convenient by companies or battalions, to receive their arms and camp equipage at New Orleans and the Baton Rouge. There may be eight or ten companies to a battalion.

Should the war in Texas be brought to a close without the apprehended Indian hostilities, the volunteers will be discharged forthwith. With perfect respect, &c.

EDMUND P. GAINES, major general commanding.
To his exc. Edward D. White, gov. of Louisiana, N. Orleans.

FROM TEXAS.

Copy of an express from Samuel Houston, commander-in-chief of the Texian army.

Head quarters, west of Brasos, March 31, 1836.

To the people east of Brasos:

My encampment is preparing on the west of the Brasos, where I shall wait for some supplies and reinforcements. My intention never has been to cross the Brasos, and the false reports spread are by men who have basely deserted the army of Texas.

Let men from the east press on to the army, and cross over at Groces. If men will unite with the present force, we can defeat and capture the enemy. The army of the enemy has been represented at from 10,000 to 30,000 men, when indeed it never has exceeded 3,000 or 4,000 in Texas; and the force that attacked col. Fanning was only 1,500, and he had only 320 men. They fought him in the prairie where he had no water, and where they surrounded him.

Their cavalry are not numerous, as stated, and their infantry are men pressed into service and convicts from prison. Their army is encumbered by women and children. Let the men of the east come to our aid, and bring all deserters with them. Aid from the United States is landing on our coast. Captain Brown, with one of our vessels, has taken a Mexican vessel, with 240 bbls. of flour, 300 kegs of powder, and other supplies for the army.

My spies report this morning that the observations made by them last night, could discover nothing of the enemy for ten miles beyond Bayou St. Bernard, 25 miles beyond San Felipe.

The citizens of San Felipe, when they heard it rumored that the enemy had crossed Colorado, immediately set fire to their own houses, and reduced the place to ashes. Let the people not be any longer in dread of danger, if the men will turn out like men.

S. HOUSTON, commander-in-chief.
P. S. My spies have just returned, and report the enemy a few miles from San Felipe, 800 or 1,000 men only, and only 30 cavalry. We will whip them soon.

Santa Anna's proclamation.

The general-in-chief to the army of operations under his command.

Companions in arms!—Our most sacred duties have conducted us to these plains, and urged us forward to combat with the mob of ungrateful adventurers, on whom our authorities have incontinently lavished favors, which they have failed to bestow on Mexicans. They have appropriated to themselves our territories, and have raised the standard of rebellion in order that this fertile and expanded department may be detached from our republic—persuading themselves that our unfortunate dissensions have incapacitated us for defence of our native land. Wretches! they will soon see their folly.

Soldiers—Your comrades have been treacherously sacrificed at Anahuac, Goliad and Bejar; and you are the men chosen to chastise the assassins.

My friends!—We will march to the spot whether we are called by the interest of the nation in whose services we are engaged. The candidates for "acres" of land in Texas will learn to their sorrow that their auxiliaries from New Orleans, Mobile, Boston, New York and other northern ports, from whence no aid ought to proceed, are insignificant, and that Mexicans, though naturally generous, will not suffer outrages with impunity—injuries and dishonorable to their country—let the perpetrators be whom they may.

ANTONIO LOPEZ DE SANTA ANNA.

Camp on the river Mueces, Feb. 17, 1836.

The Washington correspondent of the New York Journal of Commerce writes as follows:

The Mexican minister here has received official information of the state of things in Texas. His advisers confirm the general truth of the late accounts from that quarter. There remains no doubt that Santa Anna is sweeping every thing before him in Texas, and that he will drive the Anglo-American settlers out of the country. It is much to be apprehended, also, that he will stir up the Camanches and Pawnees to hostilities both against the Texans and United States. The prowess of the Mexican forces, has certainly been underrated by the Texian, and they now verify the old adage—"a despised enemy often makes a bloody battle." The fact is, that the Mexicans have been accustomed to warlike employments almost from their childhood. For many years, that country has been in a state of turmoil and commotion, during which time, every man was accustomed to arms. Many of Santa Anna's troops are mountaineers, who are brought up as brigands, and are capable of any degree of hardship and privation that humanity can bear. On the whole, I imagine that Santa Anna's force is as effective as any that could be brought to operate in that country.

We learn by the steamer Levant, arrived here yesterday, that there were about 1,500 Indians and Mexicans within 50 miles of Nacogdoches, and an express which arrived at Natchitoches the evening before the Levant left, stated that the American inhabitants of Nacogdoches burnt the town to ashes, to prevent its falling into the hands of the invading enemy. General Gaines was at Natchitoches when the express arrived, (having been invited to a public dinner at that place), but on receiving the intelligence, he immediately took up his march for the Sabine river. When General Gaines advanced towards Fort Jessup, the garrison honored him with a salute, from their guns, it being the first time they had seen him since his return from Florida. The citizens of Natchitoches immediately called a meeting for the relief of the women and children at Nacogdoches, upon hearing of the destruction of the latter place, and subscribed $1,000. Our informant states the Sabine river to be between 4 and 5 miles wide at the present, and the whole of the adjacent country, to be completely inundated, consequently the Texian families is rendered extremely difficult and hazardous. General Gaines has taken up his quarters on the banks of the Sabine river, and will prevent all Indians within his jurisdiction from joining the Mexicans.

TWENTY-FOURTH CONGRESS—FIRST SESSION.

SENATE.

April 29. Mr. Webster, from the committee on finance, reported the bill making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic service of the United States for the year 1836, with amendments.

Mr. Benton offered the following resolution; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the president of the United States be requested to cause the senate to be informed whether any branch of the public service has suffered, or is likely to suffer, any injury, loss, neglect or delay, for want of timely and adequate appropriation.

After the resolution was adopted,

Mr. Webster moved to reconsider the vote by which this resolution had been adopted. He considered that it was an extraordinary resolution, and ought to lie one day.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to, and the resolution lies one day for consideration.

The senate proceeded to the question of the passage of the bill to appropriate, for a limited time, the proceeds of the public lands, &c.

Mr. Morris addressed the senate in opposition to the bill.

Mr. Walker succeeded Mr. Morris in a series of observations in opposition to the bill.

Mr. Morris moved that when the senate adjourn, it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next. Decided in the negative—yeas 19, nays 24.

Mr. Linn then moved that when the senate adjourn, it adjourn to meet on Monday next; which motion was lost—yeas 13, nays 29.

Mr. Livingston remarked that, as many of the senators would be absent on to-morrow and Monday, and as he wished to have a full senate when the final vote was taken on the land bill, he moved that it be taken up on Tuesday next.

On motion of Mr. Linn, the senate then adjourned.

April 30. Mr. Hendricks presented the memorial of the trustees and faculty of Hanover college, in the state of Indiana, representing that the state of our national prosperity justifies them in urging the claims of our colleges generally, and especially of their own institution, which is a manual labor college, upon the means and the bounty of the general government: that it is now in the power of congress, with scarcely a sensible diminution of the treasury, to relieve every college in our country from pecuniary embarrassment, and they pray that a portion of the public lands be appropriated in aid of the incorporated colleges in the United States. Referred to the committee on public lands.

Mr. White offered the following preamble and resolution, which lies one day for consideration:

Whereas, on the 23rd day of March, 1834, the senate of the United States adopted a resolution in the words following, to wit:

"Resolved, That the president, in the late executive proceedings in relation to the public revenue, has assumed upon himself authority and powers not conferred by the constitution and laws, but in derogation of both."

And whereas, upon the question whether said resolution should be adopted, it was decided by one-fifth of the senators present, that the same should be taken by yeas and nays; and the votes of the several members now stand recorded on the journal of the senate:

And whereas, the said resolution still remains on the journal of the senate in full force, not rescinded, reversed, repealed or annulled; and cannot now be expunged, cancelled, or in any way obliterated or defaced without violating that clause of the constitution of the United States which is in the following words, to wit: "each house shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such part as may in their judgment require secrecy; and the yeas and nays of either house on any question shall, at the desire of one-fifth of those present, be entered on the journal."

And whereas, each senator before taking his seat, was bound to take and did take an oath to support said constitution:

And whereas, the president of the United States, in the late executive proceedings in relation to the public revenue alluded to in said resolution, did not, in the opinion of the senate, assume upon himself authority and powers not conferred upon him by the constitution and laws: Therefore, it is

Resolved, That the said resolution and the opinion therein expressed be, and the same hereby, are, rescinded, reversed, and annulled; and it is hereby declared that the said resolution ought not to be considered as having had, or as now or hereafter having, any force or effect whatever.

On motion of Mr. Grundy, the senate took up the bill prohibiting deputy postmasters from receiving and transmitting by mail publications therein specified, in order to enable him to offer an amendment.

Mr. Grundy then moved to strike out all the original bill, after the enacting clause, and to insert a substitute, which he sent to the chair, and which was read.

On motion of Mr. Grundy, the amendment was ordered to be printed; and the bill was laid on the table.

On motion of Mr. Preston, the senate considered the bill to authorise a patent to be issued to John Howard Kean; and it was amended by inserting the names also of Wm. Harrison and Elias Carter, both subjects of Great Britain. Thus amended, the bill was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Preston, the senate took up for consideration the following joint resolution:

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the U. States of America in congress assembled, That the president be, and he is hereby, authorised to constitute and appoint an agent or agents, to assert and prosecute, for and in behalf of the U. States, and in their name or otherwise, as they shall be advised, in the court of chancery or other proper tribunal of England, the claim of the United States to the legacy bequeathed to them by the last will and testament of Mr. JAMES SMITHSON, late of London, deceased, for the purpose of founding at Washington, under the name of the Smithsonian institution, an establishment for the increase and diffusion of knowledge among men; and to empower such agent or agents so appointed to receive and grant acquittances for all such sum or sums of money, or other funds, as may or shall be decreed or adjudged to the United States, for or on account of the said legacy. And to the end that the said claim may be prosecuted with effect, and the necessary expenses in prosecuting the same defrayed, the president be, and he is hereby, authorised to apply to that purpose any sum, not exceeding five thousand dollars, out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated. And the faith of the government of the United States is hereby pledged, that any and all sums of money which shall be received for or on account of the said legacy shall be applied to the purpose of founding and endowing at Washington, under the name of the Smithsonian institution, an establishment for the increase and diffusion of knowledge among men.

A legal discussion took place on the resolution, which was participated in by Messrs. Preston, Leigh, Clayton, Calhoun, Southard, Buchanan, Davis and Walker.

At last—the resolution was then reported without assent.

The yeas and nays being demanded by Mr. Walker, on the question of engrossment, the question was taken and decided as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benton, Black, Buchanan, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Cuthbert, Davis, Ewing, of Ohio, Goldsborough, Grundy, Hendricks, Hubbard, Kent, King, of Alabama, Knight, Leigh, Linn, Mangum, Moore, Naudain, Nicholas, Porter, Prentiss, Rives, Robbins, Southard, Swift, Tallmadge, Tomlinson, Walker—31.

NAYS—Messrs. Calhoun, Ewing, of Illinois, Hill, King, of Georgia, Preston, Robinson, White—7.

On motion of Mr. Benton, the senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business; and after a short time, the senate adjourned.

May 2. The chair laid before the senate a communication from the secretary of state, in reply to a resolution recommending an increase of salary to the clerks in the department of state.

On motion of Mr. Kent, the resolution offered by him some time since, on the subject of an arrangement with France for the admission of American tobacco on more liberal terms, was taken up; when Mr. Kent made some remarks, which will be published hereafter.

Some unfavorable reports on the table were taken up and agreed to.

A joint resolution, to authorise the president to appoint an agent to represent the United States in the case of the Smithsonian legacy; and

A bill for the payment of the militia of Vermont for services rendered at the battle of Plattsburgh, were each read a third time, and passed.

The special order of the day was taken up, being a bill to regulate the public depositories.

After some amendments were offered, the bill was laid upon the table for the present.

The harbor bill came up. Among other proceedings—Mr. King, of Ala. moved to amend the bill by striking out all the specific surveys, and asked the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

The question was then taken, and decided as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Black, Calhoun, Hill, King, of Ala. King, of Geo. Leigh, Mangum, Preston, Rives, Robinson, Walker, White—13.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Clayton, Davis, Ewing, of Illinois, Ewing, of Ohio, Goldsborough, Hendricks, Kent, Knight, Linn, Naudain, Nicholas, Porter, Prentiss, Robbins, Southard, Swift, Tallmadge, Tipton, Tomlinson, Wall—23.

The bill was then reported, and the amendments being concurred in, the bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time, [and passed next day.]

The senate then proceeded to the consideration of executive business; and, after remaining a short time with closed doors, The senate adjourned.

May 3. A message was received from the house of representatives, announcing the death of the hon. Richard J. Manning, a representative from the state of South Carolina.

After a just tribute to the memory of the deceased had been offered by Mr. Preston, the usual resolution to wear crape for 30 days, was passed.

May 4. Mr. Ewing, of Ohio, rose to present a petition, and pretended the presentation with the following explanation:

I present some further memorials this morning on the subject of the Zanesville and Maysville road, and ask that they have the usual reference. Almost the whole population of the adjacent country has petitioned or is petitioning congress in favor of that road, the very great importance of which I took occasion some time ago to explain, and which I believe is well understood throughout the United States. I regret that this subject had not been brought forward earlier in the session, so that we might have had time to act definitely upon it this year; but I fear it is now too late. Nevertheless, I would ask the committee on roads and canals to give it their attention, and let us know whether, in their judgment, it merits the aid of the nation; and I must take leave to say that, if nothing can be concluded upon it now, it will be early presented and vigorously pressed at the next session of congress.

Mr. Clay offered the following resolution; which lies over for consideration.

Resolved, That the committee on manufactures be directed to inquire into the expediency of so amending the existing laws as to subject all hemp exported into the United States from any place whatsoever, to the same duty as Russian hemp may be liable to pay for the time being.

Mr. Benton from the committee on military affairs, reported, with amendments, a bill from the house to authorize the president to accept the services of volunteers, &c. and asked the senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill and amendment. [One of these amendments provides for a considerable addition to the army.]

Debate followed—in which the state of affairs in Texas were incidentally mentioned—but they must be deferred a little. The bill being laid aside—

The senate proceeded to consider the bill to provide for the distribution of the proceeds of the public lands, &c.

The question being on the passage of the bill,

Mr. Wright spoke at some length in opposition to the bill.

The question was then on the point of being taken, when

Mr. Benton rose, and addressed the senate.

The question was then taken on the passage of the bill, and decided as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Black, Buchanan, Clay, Clayton, Crittenden, Davis, Ewing, of Ohio, Goldsborough, Hendricks, Kent, Knight, Leigh, McKean, Mangum, Naudain, Nicholas, Porter, Prentiss, Preston, Robbins, Southard, Swift, Tomlinson, Webster, White—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Benton, Calhoun, Canthbert, Ewing, of Ill. Grundy, Hill, Hubbard, King, of Ala. King, of Georgia, Linn, Moore, Morris, Niles, Rives, Robinson, Ruggles, Shepley, Tallmadge, Walker, Wright—20.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. Webster gave notice that he should to-morrow call up the general appropriation bill.

The senate adjourned.

May 5. Other business being attended to which will be noticed in its progress—

Mr. Clay called up his resolution submitted yesterday concerning foreign hemp, and stated that there was in the course of trade a habit of introducing Bengal hemp, and some other kinds under different denominations, free from duty, according to a construction, and, as he thought, an erroneous one, of the secretary of the treasury. He wished to guard against this evasion of the laws, and have it subjected to the same duties that Russian hemp was. It came into competition with the flax and manufactured hemp of this country; whereas that of Russia, so far as the rigging of vessels was concerned, did not interfere with our dew rotted hemp: because this last, not absorbing tar, and from other causes, was not calculated for rigging.

A measure had been proposed for allowing a drawback upon Russian hemp when exported to foreign countries. Though he came from a hemp-growing section, he should offer no objection to it: on the contrary, he would give it his vote. His only object in rising, however, was to ask for a consideration of this resolution now, to prevent any further evasion of existing laws.

Mr. Walker expressed a hope that it would be put on record that the day after the senator from Kentucky and his friends had obtained their victory, in the passage of the land bill, that senator had offered a resolution to increase the tariff. He did not intend to oppose the resolution of inquiry, but he wished the fact to be placed on record.

Mr. Clay replied that he had no objection to have the fact recorded in any book of record whatever, provided that, when recorded, no motion should afterwards be entertained for expunging it. He wished also to have the fact accurately stated. This proposition was not made, as stated by the senator from Mississippi, on the day after the passage of the land bill.—It was made yesterday—on the very day of the passage of that measure, and it came up now in the regular course of business. Neither is it true that it is a proposition to increase the duties; it is merely to prevent an evasion of existing laws. Whenever it should come up for discussion, he should be happy to listen to the arguments of the gentleman against its expediency, and should no doubt be convinced by them. He would advise that senator, however, and those who acted with him, if they wished to avoid an increase of the tariff, to stop where they were; to make no more extravagant appropriations; to pursue no longer the course they had adopted. Ten millions for the navy, and fifteen millions for the war department! Did any one believe that an augmentation of the tariff was not inevitable if this wasteful expenditure was countenanced and sustained? Let the gentleman and those who, with him, have the power, remove the public treasure from these miserable deposit banks. By following his advice, wholesome as it was, they might remove the causes of their real or pretended alarm. He did not expect any discussion, however, on the adoption of a mere resolution of inquiry, much less to be called upon to reply to a charge of this kind.

Mr. Walker, replied pretty much at length, and variously.

Mr. Clay said he regretted being called upon to say one word more. He did not know to what he was indebted for the honor—an honor very often tendered him—of being replied to and opposed by the senator from Mississippi. He will, for the future, however, allow me to use my own language, and not put words into my mouth which I have not used. He had made no avowal of a wish or intention to increase the tariff; he had merely said that, in the contingency of such an extravagant course being continued in, such an increase would inevitably take place.

He regretted exceedingly, and knew not why it was that the gentleman from Mississippi had assumed this an-tag-o-nis-tical (he believed that was the fashionable phrase) position towards him. He was willing, at all times, and on all occasions, to acknowledge his own inferiority to that gentleman. The triumph was his. Let him be at ease then, and when he quoted other avowals, quote this also.

Mr. Walker replied that he had only a single remark to make, and that merely in reference to the concluding observations of the gentleman. He was not the first to commence this warfare. The senator from Kentucky, in a speech of great eloquence and ability, had opposed a measure of his. As to mental powers, he readily, not in a spirit of irony, but with the most perfect sincerity, admitted that senator's infinite superiority to him.

Mr. Clay said that, perhaps it would be better at once to enter into a treaty of peace and amity with the gentleman. He would give him a carte blanche; support any measure of his, unless it should happen to be in behalf of the squatters—he could not stand that.

The motion was then agree to.

The general appropriation bill was further considered, and some amendments made—and then the senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Friday, April 29. The hon. Thomas J. Whittelsey, of Connecticut, elected to supply the vacancy occasioned by the death of the hon. Salmon Wildman, appeared, was qualified, and took his seat.

Mr. Huntsman asked the consent of the house to submit a joint resolution authorising the secretary of war to issue ratifications to such citizens of the United States as might be driven into the United States from the borders of Texas.

Objections being made,

Mr. Huntsman moved a suspension of the rules; which motion was rejected.

Mr. Williams, of Kentucky, asked the consent of the house to submit the following resolution; which was read for the information of the house:

Resolved, That the committee on foreign relations be instructed to inquire into the expediency of an acknowledgment and recognition by this government of the independence of Texas. Objections being made,

Mr. Williams moved to suspend the rules; which motion was lost.

Mr. Hawes asked the consent of the house to offer a resolution making the resolution heretofore offered, directing a committee to report a bill for the re-organization of the military academy at West Point, and the report of the select committee of the last session on that subject, the special order of the day for Thursday next.

Objections having been made,

Mr. Hawes moved a suspension of the rules; which motion was lost.

Mr. Lincoln, from the committee on public lands, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the secretary of war be directed to communicate to this house the number of officers, non-commissioned officers, and soldiers of the organized militia men, mounted militia men, volunteers and rangers, who entered the service of the United States under the several acts of congress providing for the defence of the country, during the late war with Great Britain, and were regularly discharged; distinguishing the different descriptions of corps, time when they respectively entered the service, and term of continuance therein; and also distinguishing the number of those who were entitled, under the laws of congress, to a bounty in lands from the United States by reason of such service, from those to whom no such bounty was promised by law.

Mr. W. B. Shepard, from the committee for the District of Columbia, reported a resolution directing the commissioner of the public buildings to cause the Pennsylvania avenue, during the remainder of the session, to be cleaned and watered.

After some discussion, in which Messrs. W. B. Shepard, Hawes, Harper, Parker, Bouldin, Dromgoole, Lane and Boon took part.

Mr. Parker moved to lay the resolution on the table. Lost. After some further conversation, the hour of 12 o'clock having arrived, the private orders were called for.

A few private bills were passed.

The following message was received from the president of the United States, and referred to the joint committee on the library, and ordered to be printed:

Washington, April 29, 1836.

To the senate and house of representatives:

It affords me pleasure to transmit to congress a copy of the catalogue of the Arundel manuscripts in the British museum, which has been forwarded to me, as will be perceived from the enclosed letter, on behalf of the trustees of that institution, for the purpose of being placed in the United States library.

ANDREW JACKSON.

[Adjourned over until Tuesday, to allow time to place the hall on its "summer establishment." A considerable number of members availed themselves of the recess to make an excursion on the Chesapeake and Ohio canal.]

Wednesday, May 3. After the journal of Friday had been read—

Mr. Pinckney rose, and addressed the house to the following effect: Mr. Speaker: Often as death has already been among us this session, he has again entered within these walls, and taken another, and one of the most excellent members, of this honorable body. Yes, sir, death has again been amongst us; and it is in consequence of one of those sudden and awful dispensations of divine providence, to which, however painfully we may feel them, it is our duty to submit, that I now rise to announce to this house the decease of my late honored and lamented colleague, RICHARD J. MANNING. He left this city on Friday last, on a visit to Philadelphia, and died as I am informed, at that place, on Sunday evening, of a hemorrhage, produced by the rupture of a blood vessel in his lungs. Surely, if ever there was an event which could teach us "what poor shadows we are, and what shadows we pursue," this is one which should impress that lesson deeply on our minds. But a few days ago he was here, in his place upon this floor, in the pride of intellect and vigor of manhood, mingling freely with his fellow members, partaking the cares and honors of legislation, and discharging the high duties of a representative of the people in the councils of the nation. Now he is numbered with the silent dead. I know that it is customary upon occasions of this kind, to deliver eulogies upon the characters of departed members. But I shall make no such attempt upon the present occasion. I could not do justice to such a character as his. To say that he was a man of sound judgment and extensive information—a gentleman, in the strictest signification of the term, a man of sterling honor and integrity—a devoted husband and most tender parent—pure and irreproachable in all the relations of life—all that is true, perfectly true, and yet it conveys but a poor idea of the beautiful cluster of noble and estimable qualities that were concentrated in him. He was more than all this. He was, emphatically, a patriot, who discharged all his duties to his country with ardor and fidelity; and he was a sincere and consistent Christian, who adorned the doctrine of his Lord and Saviour. He died, like a patriot, in the service of his country; and his life as a Christian assures me that he is now reposing in the bosom of his God.

As an evidence of the high estimation in which he was held by the people of his native state, it will suffice to observe that he was repeatedly elected to the legislature of South Carolina, once unanimously chosen governor of that state, and twice elevated to a seat in congress. In times of the bitterest party contention in South Carolina, he retained the unqualified respect of his political opponents, nor do I believe he had a personal enemy. But all his talents, all his virtues, all his noble qualities of head and heart, could not save him from the grasp of the destroyer. He is gone—gone from me, whom he honored with his friendship—gone from this house, which he adorned by his virtues. His place here will know him no more. He cannot listen to the poor tribute I throw upon his tomb. He cannot witness the deep and respectful sympathy manifested by this honorable body. No, sir, he is gone; and all that we can do is, to lament his loss, and imitate his virtues, and pay to his memory the unavailing honors of the dead.

I now beg leave to offer the following resolutions for adoption by the house.

1. Resolved, unanimously, That this house has received with deep regret the melancholy intelligence of the death of the Hon. Richard J. Manning, a representative from the state of South Carolina.

2. Resolved unanimously, That this house tender the expression of their sympathy to the relatives of the deceased, upon this mournful event; and in testimony of regret for his loss and respect for his memory, the members will wear crape on the left arm for thirty days.

The resolutions having been unanimously adopted.

Mr. Pinckney moved that a message be sent to the senate, informing that body of the death of the Hon. Richard J. Manning.

The Speaker said that such a message would be sent to the senate as a matter of course.

On motion of Mr. Pinckney, the house then adjourned.

Wednesday, May 4. The business first in order was the resolution from the committee for the District of Columbia, authorizing and directing the commissioner of the public buildings to cause the Pennsylvania avenue to be watered and cleaned during the remainder of the session. It was taken up.

Mr. Connor asked the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution.

There being no quorum voting, Mr. Heister moved a call of the house.

Mr. Briggs asked the yeas and nays on this motion, and they were ordered.

The question being taken, the motion was agreed to—yeas 90, nays 27.

The call was proceeded in a short time, and, on motion of Mr. C. Allen, was suspended.

The question recurring on the adoption of the resolution, after some remarks from Messrs. Parker, Bouldin, Hardin and Briggs,

Mr. Robertson moved to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. Hawes asked the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The question being taken, it was determined in the affirmative—yeas 88, nays 84.

So the resolution was laid on the table.

[The arguments against this resolution were, that such an expenditure was not a contingent expense of the house, and that the house had no right to use a fund expressly appropriated for their contingent expenses, to such a purpose; they might as well appropriate a million of dollars for a turnpike any where in the country; that it was a matter belonging to the District of Columbia, and the people might as well call upon the house to remove all other nuisances, and to sweep their houses, as to clean, sweep and water their streets; and that it would be a better expenditure of the money to place new metal upon the street, of proper quality and of the necessary depth, in order to complete the work begun, than to scrape and wet the present bed, which has cost ten thousand dollars, so that it would be cut up and destroyed by the passing of carriages. It was also urged, that to accomplish the proposed plan effectually, an immense quantity of water would be required, to obtain which many men must be employed, at a very great expense.

To this it was replied that the road had unfortunately turned out badly, in consequence of the unfitness of the stone used for Macadamizing, and that dust was raised of a peculiarly distressing character, in most unusual quantities. The pulverized stone was unusually injurious to the eyes and the lungs. The people of the District had not asked for this appropriation, but they were unable to keep the streets in order which had been laid out by congress, and in part completed. It was said to be proper, surely, that, under such circumstances, and in a matter so nearly affecting the comfort of the representatives, as well as that of the people of the District and visitors, the small sum required should be taken from the contingent fund of the house.]

Other business being attended to

On motion of Mr. Cambreleng, the house went into committee of the whole on the state of the union, (Mr. J. Y. Mason in the chair), in pursuance of the special order of the 26th of January.

The bill making appropriations for the support of the army for the year 1836 was taken up.

The question being on the motion of Mr. Cambreleng to amend the bill in the following clause: "For the armament of fortifications, two hundred thousand dollars," by striking out $200,000, and inserting $1,224,000.

Mr. Cambreleng stated that, in consequence of the arrival of late news from the southern frontier, and the very heavy drafts from that quarter, for the pay and subsistence of the army, it became necessary that the ordinary appropriations for the support of the army should be provided for at once. With a view to this object, as soon as the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. McComas) who was entitled to the floor should have finished his remarks, he would withdraw his amendment, and all extraordinary appropriations, and he hoped he would be indulged by the committee with the passage of that bill and of the navy bill, without delay. He would afterwards move his amendment to the fortification bill when the discussion could be continued, and other propositions for extraordinary appropriations could be introduced.

Mr. McComas said he would willingly yield the floor to accommodate the gentleman and the committee, but he was not sufficiently acquainted with the rules and orders to know whether he should be entitled to the floor upon another bill, if he yielded it now.

The chair said he would not.

Mr. McComas remarked that he did not know but by courtesy he might be considered entitled to the floor, and if so he would give way, and offer his remarks upon some future occasion.

Mr. Cambreleng said, if the gentleman would take that course, it would very much facilitate the public business and accommodate the committee; and he did not doubt the committee, by common courtesy and consent, would consider him entitled to the floor.

A general expression of consent having been given, Mr. McComas gave way.

Mr. Cambreleng withdrew his motion to amend the bill.

The question being on the motion of Mr. Mercer to amend the clause, by providing for the establishment of a national foundry,

Mr. Ward stated, for the information of the committee, that the subject of the establishment of a national foundry was under consideration in the committee on military affairs, and that a bill on the subject would soon be reported.

The motion was then rejected.

Various motions to amend the bill were made, and some of them rather important—among them to abandon Fort Gibson, and erect another fort at some eligible point on the Arkansas, on account of the extreme unhealthiness of the former.

The bill was laid aside, and the bill making appropriations for the naval service for the year 1836, returned from the senate with amendments, referred to the committee on naval affairs, and reported with amendments to the amendments, was taken up.

Mr. Jarvis said the committee on naval affairs had agreed to concur in the amendments of the senate, but differed with that body in some of the details in reference to the proposed South Pacific expedition of discovery.

The clause of the original bill appropriating for pay of the officers, seamen, &c. $1,974,178 was increased by the senate to $2,492,040, and the committee on naval affairs reported an amendment, fixing the entire sum at $2,318,917.

The amendment to the senate's amendment was agreed to, and the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The amendment of the senate, appropriating $180,000 for a dry dock at Brooklyn, after some explanation from Mr. Jarvis, was disagreed to.

The question being on the amendment proposed by the committee to the senate's amendment, providing for an expedition of survey and discovery to the South Seas,

Mr. Hayes intimated some opposition to the proposition, and moved that the committee rise.

The question being taken, a quorum did not vote.

The committee rose, and reported that there was no quorum.

A quorum being ascertained to be present, the house again resolved itself into committee, and, on motion of Mr. Cambreleng, the committee rose and reported the bill making appropriations for the support of the army for the year 1836, with amendments.

The amendments were concurred in, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading. Read a third time and passed.

After some efforts on the part of Mr. Jarvis to get up the navy bill, and the yeas and nays being once called when a quorum did not vote—

Mr. Wise moved an adjournment, and the question being taken by tellers, there appeared, yeas 62, noes 62, a tie.

The chair voted in the negative. So the motion was lost.

The question being again taken on the motion that the house resolve itself into a committee of the whole on the state of the union, it was taken by tellers, when there appeared yeas 77, noes 23, no quorum.

Mr. Craner moved a call of the house.

Mr. Storer moved an adjournment.

The motion being put, the tellers reported yeas 62, noes 53. So the motion was agreed to, and the house adjourned.

Thursday, May 5. The rules were suspended in order to consider the bill providing for the naval service of 1836, and several of its items were discussed, especially that proposing an expedition to explore the Pacific ocean and Southern seas.

The house then took up the bill for the relief of the several corporate cities in the District of Columbia—the object of which is to relieve them from the payment of the debts caused by their subscriptions to the canal—by which the great and valuable property of the U. S. was benefitted as well as that of private persons, subject to taxation. The lots of the U. States amounted to 2,510; and if the city was thus relieved would be much enhanced in value. The committee rose and reported the bill, and the house adjourned.

REPORT FROM THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

In compliance with a resolution of the senate, relative to transfers of moneys received for public lands to the eastern cities, and the description of money received in payment for lands.

Treasury department, April 26, 1836.

SIR: This report is made to the senate in compliance with a resolution passed on the 18th instant, in the following words:

"Resolved, That the secretary of the treasury be directed to inform the senate what amount of moneys of the United States, received for public lands in the states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Missouri, and the Michigan territory, has been, in pursuance of his instructions, transferred to banks in the eastern cities since the 30th of June, 1835; and that he designate the banks from and to which such transfers have been made; that he also inform the senate whether any such transfers are now ordered, and whether any of the deposit banks in the above named states or territory have authority to direct what money shall be received for public lands in the districts for which they are the depositories."

I reply, I will proceed to present full statements on the several points of inquiry, accompanied by such explanatory remarks as appear to be necessary to prevent misconception, and as, it is presumed from the general subject-matter of the resolution, would be desirable to the senate.

The last clause can, with greater convenience for the examination of the whole, be first answered. "Whether any of the deposit banks have authority to direct what money shall be received for public lands in the districts for which they are depositories," be the authority possessed either in point of law or fact, and directly or indirectly, will be apparent from the following considerations: This department entertains the opinion that congress alone possesses that authority in the first instance, to be enforced by the treasury, as the chief fiscal agent of the government, under such constructions of the laws relating to the subject as seem reasonable. An authority of this kind was accordingly exercised by that body as early as 1789, by requiring all duties on foreign imports to be "received in gold and silver only," by subsequently directing payment for the public lands to be made in "cash," and by often recognizing the principle, countenanced in the constitution, (in the prohibition of any state to "make any thing but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts"), that such coin alone should generally be permitted to be used as a legal tender either by or to the United States. The first modifications of those enactments and principles at any time are supposed to have been made by the construction adopted by Mr. Hamilton, that the treasury, into which the money was to be eventually paid, as the chief pecuniary agent of the government, could waive its right to specie, and could consent to receive the notes of state banks, when deemed by it equivalent in all respects to specie; and by the joint resolution of congress in 1816, which impliedly gave some sanction to this original practice, by prohibiting the treasury department longer to receive the notes of state banks not paying specie, and which it had, in the great emergencies connected with the war, allowed to be taken for public dues. The next modifications were by conferring, in the 10th section of the first charter, and in the 14th section of the second charter of the U. States bank, a right for its notes to be receivable for any and all public dues, an exclusive privilege or monopoly, which it never directly conferred on the notes of any state bank. The clause in the joint resolution of 1816, not forbidding the receipt of notes of state banks paying specie, has not been understood as amounting to an express grant of power, making those state notes a tender for public dues, else the explicit favor granted to the United States bank notes alone would have been nugatory, and the acts of congress, and the spirit of the constitution virtually allowing, as a matter of right, only gold and silver, (with the exception of the United States bank notes for a time) to be a tender to the United States, would have been entirely defeated.

In this condition of things, after that bank went into operation, its bills and specie alone were considered as a legal tender for any land sold, or duties to be paid. But, by the early construction before named, the treasury department generally, it is supposed, continued to believe itself empowered, whenever the measure seemed expedient, to waive the right to insist on the payment of gold and silver, or United States bank notes, if state notes could be had, which were deemed equal for every public purpose to specie.

Since 1817, no direction is known to have been given by this department, which is considered a departure from the spirit of the laws, the principles and the construction before named. On the contrary, the great effort has been usually, and in particular for some years past, to make all the receipts and payments of the treasury, as far as practicable, in a sound and convenient currency, chiefly metallic, and more nearly approaching such as was believed to be originally contemplated by the founders of our present system of government, and as would prove most safe, uniform and useful to the whole community as well as to the treasury. But permission by this department has, sometimes, since 1817, been given to the deposit banks, whether United States or state, to conform to the before-named construction, as from time to time modified by this department, and to receive for the government, and place in the treasury, certain state bank notes, but which, as a general rule, were to be credited as specie, and specie alone was to be paid out for them, if desired. No account has been permitted to be opened, except in a few peculiar cases, some years ago, in the manner sometimes practised before 1817, of special deposits, consisting of state bank notes. And if, as at times has been the practice at various places, the United States bank, while a public depository, or the fiscal agents now used as deposit banks, have ever taken ought but specie and bills of the United States bank for the public dues; or, if receivers and collectors have done it, it has been done either as individuals, often from comity and accommodation, agree when exposed to no loss, to receive bank notes instead of specie; or it has been done under a supposed power, by some deemed doubtful, which has occasionally been exercised by this department, upon the construction formerly explained, to waive its strict right to specie, when it could be done with safety and convenience; but not, it is presumed, under an expectation to have the government charged with any depreciation, danger or expense which might attend that course. Hence, in most cases, during the last twenty years, the directions given have been explicit, that when state bank notes were received, they should be not only those of specie-paying banks, but such notes as the public depositories were willing to credit to the treasury as cash or specie. This indulgence was sometimes extended to the notes of only a few of the numerous banking institutions on the Atlantic seaboard. In the west, also, the practice is understood to have been similar, or, in certain places, more liberal, and in others more restricted. Thus, at St. Louis, it is said that, at times, the bank of the United States declined waiving its right in favor of any state bank notes whatever, and accepted none whatever from the receivers for Missouri, Illinois and Indiana, who deposited there, and that these last officers received none from the community for public lands.

Such a course may sometimes have been entirely voluntary with the bank, though occasionally it was without doubt countenanced by instructions from this department, of the character before and hereafter mentioned. In the destruction of our records by fire, it is not possible to ascertain its exact origin or extent, in many cases.

But Mr. Crawford, in 1817, on the appointment of branches by the United States bank, appears to have issued circulars, prohibiting the United States officers from "receiving any bills which will not be received by them (those branches) as cash," and requested "that all the banks of deposit be directed to furnish any collector or receiver of public moneys with a list of the banks, the bills of which will be received as cash."

It is believed that, in 1823, Mr. Crawford wrote a letter, extending the indulgence to certain notes of banks in the eastern cities, in whose favor was the balance of trade, and to the specie-paying bank notes "in the state in which the land office is situated." But whether he did this by the request or assent of the United States bank, the public depository, I have not ascertained, though such is presumed to have been the case, and that the notes were to be credited as cash. Because, early in 1826, Mr. Rush, as secretary of the treasury, further regulated the indulgence and limited it to the notes of certain enumerated state banks, which not only "paid specie for their notes on demand, but were otherwise in good credit," and enjoined that "as the receipt of any of the local or state bank notes may be discontinued at any time without previous notice, it will be well for those who have payments to make, to provide themselves with specie or notes of the United States bank or its branches, to guard against any change that may be found proper in regard to the notes of the local or state banks." A general, important and controlling direction was then added, which shows that these mitigations probably sprang from the consent of the United States bank, and were dependent chiefly for their continuance on its disposition to waive at any time its strict legal rights. That direction was, "the receivers will also cease to receive any local or state bank notes, that the bank in which they are instructed to make deposit may refuse as cash, or which, in the exercise of a sound discretion, the receiver might not think it prudent to receive."

After the removal of most of the deposits from the United States bank in 1833, the spirit of accommodation in this respect, by the selected state banks, led to a greater voluntary indulgence in the receipt of state bank notes, and to agreements by many of them to receive such from the same and adjoining states. But, during the alarm as to the safety of the state banks in the spring of 1834, it became prudent to remind the public depositories and receivers, as well as collectors, of the necessity for increased caution on that point, and if any notes of those banks were taken from comity or accommodation to the community on voluntary agreement, that it must be in conformity to what had been the principle and usage under the United States bank; or, in other words, only such as the public depositories "would agree to pass to the credit of the United States as cash." A circular to that effect was accordingly issued by my predecessor, March 26, 1834, a copy of which is annexed. The practice since has been according to the approved principles in that circular, conforming to the substance of the usage since 1817.

No different directions or authority have been given on this subject by this department since that circular, not even to accept notes issued by any other deposit bank whatever, and whether payable near or at a distance, thinking that neither law nor sound policy had recently required it to interfere in a different manner in relation to that topic, without further and express sanction from congress.

The department, however, has not hesitated to recommend to the deposit banks the exercise of as great liberality in waiving their strict rights on this subject as their safety, the state of the currency and public convenience, should unite in permitting. It has likewise encouraged them, as the United States bank notes were presumed to be retiring from circulation, to make provision for the greater and convenient substitution of state bank notes, by the redemption of their own, in certain cases, and under certain circumstances, either at each other's counters, or in those large cities in whose favor was the balance of trade.

A number of the state banks have made these arrangements to a considerable extent, and it is trusted that not less, if not greater indulgence and accommodation have been usually exercised by the present public depositories in voluntarily relinquishing the right to receive specie than could safely be exercised at any former and similar period. Furthermore, it is presumed that as much comity will continue to be exercised by them as the preservation of a sound currency; the due restriction of excessive issues; the gradual substitution of hard money for small bills; the various obligations imposed by congress concerning the public money, and as the safety and duties of the depositories themselves will warrant. It belongs to congress alone to permit, as a right, if it deems proper, the reception of other money than specie for the public dues, at the risk and on the responsibility of the government; and to require that the treasury department, as was practised in 1816 and 1817, should open an account with the public depositories for bank notes instead of specie, and, as then, keep those notes accumulated till they could thereafter be sent to a distance for redemption, and the specie obtained at the public expense; or, if the banks failed in the mean time, should, as then, be kept on hand, useless, till the unavailable funds in the treasury swell again to millions. But this department, without the explicit sanction of congress, or, perhaps, the sudden occurrence of some great emergency, has seldom felt and should not now feel authorised to give such directions, or to permit such practices.

The passages of the two acts of congress during the last and present year, bearing on this subject, have, more strongly than in 1816 and before, been considered to evince a continued hostility in that body to any such steps, and have, with other obvious circumstances connected with the currency, influenced the undersigned to make no departure from the circular of his predecessor.

By the fourth section of the act of March 31, 1835, it was provided not only that no payment should be made of any appropriation passed that session in bank notes not at par value at the place where such payment was made, but that "nothing herein contained shall be construed to make any thing but gold and silver a tender in payment of any debt due from the United States to individuals."

By the second section of the recent act of 14th April, 1836, besides the important enactment that no bank note under ten dollars shall be hereafter paid at all by the United States agents, and after the 3d March, 1837, none under twenty dollars, nor even those, unless convertible into gold or silver at par, on the spot where paid, and without delay, it was declared that this should not be "construed to make any thing but gold or silver a legal tender by any individual, or by the United States." In order, last year as well as now, to carry the first of those provisions into effect, it is rendered imperatively necessary for the deposit banks to have not merely specie enough on hand to redeem their own bills in the manner and to the extent usually presented, and to meet the ordinary calls on them for specie by their private depositors, but to pay, or be able to obtain forthwith the means to pay, in gold and silver, if desired, and, when desired, every dollar of the public money on hand appropriated in behalf of public creditors and officers.

If now bound by the last law still further to prepare, and in less than a year, not to pay any bank note on account of the United States under twenty dollars, and those of twenty or more to be "convertible at par," immediately and "on the spot," into specie, and if all public debtors and purchasers, as well as the United States, are now, by the last act, properly recognised as being allowed to tender nothing but specie for public dues, and could not before tender any thing but specie or United States bank notes, then it must be obvious that any further relaxation than what already exists on this subject, whether granted by any officer of the treasury or by any deposit bank, must be at their own hazard and responsibility.

It is further manifest that any such relaxation would be in derogation of the laws of the land and of the policy of congress, unless the fiscal agents receive, instead of specie, what they consider an ample and safe substitute, and credit the treasury with specie alone, and pay out specie alone if requested.

In the convulsions of trade and excesses of speculation, which have characterized the last twelve months, with the large accumulation of public funds in the treasury, and the very extensive, if not over-issue, of bank notes by many institutions, it is only congress who should order, if deemed expedient, a change in the whole system and policy generally pursued during almost twenty years; and to give directions which may tend to increase the present large issues of paper: to endanger our own deposits; to diminish the whole specie of the country, and retard the more extensive circulation of a sound gold and silver currency for the numerous common purposes of life.

As materially connected with the system concerning the money received, the department, before the passage of this last act by congress, had within the year past, twice issued circulars about payments in specie and small bills, and sent frequent injunctions to the deposit banks, in accordance with the spirit of some of those provisions. Another was issued by Mr. Rush, as early as 1835, against the receipt of any notes under five dollars.

The department has felt still more encouraged, since the passage of the last act, to persevere, in all proper efforts to co-operate with what appears to be the frequent and clear expression of opinion on the part of the representatives of the people and the states, and with what accords with its own wishes and views, to preserve the financial concerns of the treasury and its fiscal agents, the deposit banks, in as safe a condition as possible, with an ample proportion of specie, and other effective means on hand, to answer with promptitude the demands which may be made through the authority of congress for the public money; to cause their disbursement as far as practicable and convenient, and especially in small sums, to be made in gold and silver alone; and to guard with vigilance against those disasters from over-issues, and receipts of paper, which, on some former occasions, aided to bring such calamities, not only on the state banks themselves, but on the community and the treasury.

The above are some of its principal reasons for entertaining an opinion that the deposit banks have, by law, no original or independent "authority to direct what money shall be received for public lands in the districts for which they are depositories;" but that such power belongs to congress alone, and, with certain modifications, not intended to violate the spirit of the acts of congress, to the treasury department, as the chief fiscal agent in enforcing those acts. Any course rightfully pursued by the deposit banks on this subject, except the numerous liberal indulgences granted at their own risk, must, therefore, conform to those acts, and to the instructions communicated to them and the receivers by this department, in accordance with the supposed intention and true construction of those acts.

Having answered this branch of the inquiry in the resolution of the senate, and presuming early information on the subject will be acceptable, I hasten to communicate it. So soon as a reply to the other branches of the resolution can be prepared, amidst the severe and uninterrupted pressure of other official engagements, I shall promptly submit it. Respectfully,

LEVI WOODBURY, secretary of the treasury.

To the hon. Martin Van Buren, pres't of the senate of the U. S.

CIRCULAR.

Treasury department, March 26, 1834.

SIR: Reports occasionally reach Washington unfavorable to the credit of particular state banks. Many of these rumors are, no doubt, without foundation. But it is the duty of public officers to be continually watchful of the public interests, and it is therefore expected that you will be careful to receive the notes of no banks except such as are in good credit, and pay specie promptly for their notes when presented, and you are to receive none except such as the bank in which you deposit will agree to pass to the credit of the United States as cash. And, in order to remove all possible grounds of controversy or complaint, you will immediately, on the receipt of this letter, obtain from the bank in which you deposit, a list of the state banks whose notes they will consent to receive and pass to the credit of the United States, as above mentioned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. B. TANNEY, secretary of the treasury.

DEBATE IN THE SENATE.

SPEECH OF MR. RIVES, (OF VIRGINIA),
On Mr. Benton's expunging resolution.
Monday, March 28.

Mr. Clayton moved that the resolutions of the senator from Missouri should be taken up, in order that the discussion upon them might proceed. The motion being adopted—

Mr. Rives then rose, and addressed the senate, in substance, as follows:

If no other gentleman, Mr. President, be disposed to do so, I will avail myself of the opportunity afforded by the motion of the senator from Delaware, to trouble the senate with some remarks on the subject now under consideration. In doing so, I do not propose, at this time, to go into the wide field of diversified and interesting matter opened for discussion by the resolutions of the senator from Missouri. My purpose will be to confine myself, at present, strictly to the constitutional question which has been raised as to the power of this body to expunge from its journal an entry heretofore made upon it, trusting to the indulgence of the senate, in a future stage of the discussion, to be permitted to present my views of the other highly important questions involved in the general subject. I propose thus to limit my remarks for the present, because the constitutional question is naturally and properly preliminary to all the rest, standing first in the order of discussion, as well as first in importance, for, however justly obnoxious I deem the resolution of March, 1831, to the various exceptions which have been taken to it, it certainly ought not to be expunged, unless, under the constitution, we have the rightful authority to do so. It seems proper to confine my remarks, for the present, to this single view of the subject, for the further reason that, as yet, the able and lucid arguments of the senator from Missouri on the other branches of the discussion have remained without any answer, or even an attempt to answer them.

A free people, Mr. President, and especially the enlightened people of this country, are naturally and wisely jealous of the observance of their fundamental law, and acutely sensible to any violation, actual or mediated, of its provisions. Hence it is that, in the warfare of parties, appeals are so frequently made to this patriotic instinct in the public mind, and alarms, often groundless and artificial, attempted to be raised in regard to the security of the constitution. Hence it was, I presume, that in the memorable contest of which this chamber was the theatre two years ago, the president was denounced as a usurper of ungranted power, as a violator of the constitution and the laws of his country; when, if all that was alleged by his adversaries could be sustained, it would have made but a case of the misapplication or abuse of power granted both by the constitution and the laws. Hence it is, too, I suppose, that, on the present occasion, a new panic is attempted to be raised, by holding up the image of mutilated records and a violated constitution, and that the exercise of a lawful discretionary power over their own journals and proceedings, which has been known and admitted since the origin of legislative bodies, and is familiar in parliamentary practice, wherever such bodies exist, is represented as something monstrous, iniquitous, and even felonious. If gentlemen expect thus, by the use of strong language, bold assertion, and vehement denunciation, to carry the public judgment by storm, they will, in my humble opinion, find themselves woefully deceived. The public mind is, at this moment, calm, self-balanced, scrutinizing, inquisitive; and, instead of mere assertion and vague denunciation, it will require reason, argument, proof.

It is in this spirit, Mr. President, that I shall proceed to the examination of the objection which has been made to the proposition under consideration, on the ground that it demands an act to be done which is forbidden by the constitution. What, sir, is the argument of gentlemen on this subject, so far as argument has been attempted? It is, that as the constitution requires that "each house shall keep a journal of its proceedings," an entry once made upon that journal can never thereafter be, in any manner, touched, altered or removed; that, if we do so, we fail, from that moment, in the language of the constitution, to "keep a journal of our proceedings." The connexion between the premises and the conclusion in this reasoning is, I must confess, Mr. President, to my mind incomprehensible. If this body shall, by a formal resolution, entered on its journal, direct a previous entry, improvidently, wrongfully or erroneously made, to be corrected or removed, does it follow from thence that we do not still keep a journal? On the contrary, this very proceeding, in being entered on the journal, and embodying the whole history of the transaction, is itself a fulfilment of the constitutional injunction in its true and well understood sense—that of writing down, from day to day, our daily transactions as they transpire.

But it is not my intention, Mr. President, to discuss this question on the niceties of verbal criticism. I choose rather to take it up on the broad views of the common sense and practical meaning and operation of the constitution. While the constitution requires that each house shall keep a journal of its proceedings, it does not direct how that journal is to be kept. The manner of keeping it, what is to be put upon it, what not; the nature, the form, the fulness of the entries, are all matters left for the regulation and control of the body whose duty it is to keep the journal. In these respects there is great diversity of usage among legislative bodies. By some the entire bill presented for its action is spread on the journal, as was done during the two first congresses under the present constitution by this body. By others, the title of the bill only is entered on the journal, as is now the practice both of this house and the other branch of congress. By some, the reports of committees are entered in full on the journal, as was done by the old congress under the articles of confederation, and is still practised, I believe, by the legislature of Virginia. By others, the resolutions only, reported by committees, are admitted to a place on the journal. According to the rules and practice of some legislative bodies, as, for example, of this, proceedings in committee of the whole are entered on the journal; while in others, as in the house of representatives, no notice whatever appears on the journal of what has been done in committee of the whole. I might mention, also, as illustrating the discretionary powers which every legislative body possesses over its journal, the apparently anomalous practice, founded, however, on long usage, of both this house and the other, to enter on their respective journals the messages of the president, though not forming a part of their own "proceedings," of which only they are required to keep a journal.

It results from these considerations that, although each house of congress is bound to keep a journal of its proceedings, yet that journal, as to the manner of keeping it, the nature and character of its contents, what is to be upon it, what not, is necessarily subjected to the control of the body whose duty it is to keep it. This control is an inseparable part of that self-governing power, in all matters of interior economy and parliamentary regime, which the constitution expressly delegates to either branch of the legislative department. Each house, by the constitution, is "to choose its own speaker or president, and other officers." "Each house, also, shall be the judge of the elections, returns and qualifications of its own members." "Each house may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member." "Each house shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and, from time to time, publish the same, excepting such parts as may, in their judgment, require secrecy." In regard to all these powers and functions, a very large discretion is necessarily left to either house, in the exercise of which abuses doubtless may be committed. But the possibility of abuse is no argument against the existence of a power. Congress has, by express and unequivocal grants in the constitution, power "to lay and collect taxes," &c. and "to raise and support armies." In the exercise of these powers, congress might raise, even in time of profound peace, an army of half a million of men, and levy upon the people annually two or three hundred millions of dollars for their support, converting one-half of the nation into soldiers, and the other half into paupers. There could be no grosser abuse; and yet the constitutional power would still be incontestable. Where it has been deemed necessary and proper, for the public good, to vest any particular power in the government, or a department of it, the constitution grants the power, and provides securities against its abuse in the structure and organization of the government itself. The periodical election of the public functionaries by the people, and for the most part for short terms, their responsibility to their constituents, and the constant influence and control of public opinion, are relied upon in our system as conferring every reasonable security against the gross abuse of necessary powers.

The large discretionary power which the constitution has left to either house of congress over its journals is strikingly exemplified in the provision respecting their publication. Each house is required by the constitution to publish its journal from time to time, excepting such parts as may, in their judgment, require secrecy. Now, under the terms of this provision, either house of congress, if disposed to abuse the trust reposed in them, might suppress and withhold from the knowledge of the people the most important part, if not the whole of their proceedings, under the plea that they were such as, in their judgment, required secrecy.

In the jealous apprehensions which were entertained at the time of the adoption of the constitution, of the encroachments and abuses of the new government, this objection was strongly urged against the clause in question; but it was replied and with success, that every legislative body must have the power of concealing important transactions, the publication of which might compromise the public interests; and as it was impossible to foresee and enumerate all the cases in which such concealment might be necessary, they should be left to the sound discretion of the body itself, subject to the constitutional responsibility of members, and the other securities provided by the constitution against the abuse of power. These securities have hitherto been found sufficient, and, in point of fact, the journals of both houses have been published from day to day, with such special and limited exceptions as have been universally approved by the public judgment.

This publication, when made, is the practical fulfilment and consummation of the design of the constitution in requiring a journal to be kept, by either house, of its proceedings. It is agreed, on all hands, that the great object for which a journal is required to be kept is, to give authentic information to our constituents of our proceedings; and that information is to be given, as the constitution provides, by means of a publication, from time to time, of the journal itself. The requisition to keep a journal, on which gentlemen have laid so much stress, is therefore merely introductory, or what the lawyers call matter of inducement only, to that which forms the life and substance of the provision, to wit, the publication, from time to time, of the journal. The whole structure and sequence of the sentence sustains this interpretation: "Each house shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and, from time to time, publish the same." It is evident that the whole practical virtue and effect of the provision is in the latter member of the sentence, and that the former would have been implied and comprehended in it, though not expressed. It will be seen that the corresponding provision in the articles of confederation was founded explicitly on this idea; for, presupposing the keeping of a journal as a matter of course, it proceeded at once to require that "congress shall publish the journal of their proceedings monthly, excepting such parts thereof relating to treaties, alliances or military operations, as, in their judgment, require secrecy."

Nothing was said of keeping a journal, that being presupposed, and necessarily implied; but can any one doubt, though the articles of confederation were silent as to keeping a journal, that congress was as much bound to keep a journal of their proceedings under that instrument, as each house is now bound to do under the existing constitution? How could they make the required monthly publication of their journal, unless a journal were kept by them? The requisition, therefore, in the present constitution, to keep a journal, is but an expression, for the sake of greater fulness, of what would otherwise have been implied, and serves only as a more formal introduction to the practical end and substance of the constitutional provision on the subject, and that with which it emphatically concludes, to wit, the publication, from time to time, of the journal. That publication once made, and the people put in possession of the authentic evidence of the proceedings of their agents, the purposes of the constitution are fulfilled, and the preservation of the original manuscript journal becomes thenceforward an official formality.*

Even if the true and only meaning of the requisition to keep a journal were that which has been so much insisted on, that is, to preserve, do not gentlemen perceive that the preservation of the journal is fully and most surely accomplished in its publication? The thousand and ten copies which the secretary has told us are regularly printed and distributed by order of the senate to the members of congress, to the various public functionaries to the state governments, to public institutions and societies throughout the union, furnish a far better security for the preservation of the journal than the most scrupulous care and vestal guardianship of the original manuscript; which, in spite of every precaution, might yet be lost or destroyed by inevitable accident. These multiplied printed copies, while placing the preservation of the journal beyond the reach of contingency, are, at the same time, for every practical public use, whether of legal evidence or political accountability, on a footing of equal validity with the manuscript original.

The numerous parliamentary precedents in England, as to the power of legislative bodies over their journals, are not denied; but it is contended that these precedents should have no weight here, because the constitution of the United States expressly requires that each house of congress shall keep a journal; while in England, it is said no such requisition exists in regard to either house of parliament. The requisition in the constitution of the United States, I have already shown, is but declaratory of the natural and pre-existing law of all legislative bodies of whose organization and functions it is a necessary and invariable incident to keep a journal of their proceedings; and in this view I am borne out, not only by the example of the articles of confederation, but by that of several of the state constitutions, which, presupposing the keeping of a journal as a matter of course, provide only, after the manner of the articles of confederation, for the periodical publication of it from time to time. But, without dwelling farther on this view of the matter, it is altogether a mistake to say that there is no positive requisition that either house of parliament in England shall keep a journal of their proceedings. I find the classic historian of that country stating that, in 1607, when the nascent pretensions of the Stuarts, and the spirit of the age, first made the house of commons sensible both of its importance and responsibility as a guardian of the public liberty, that body entered a formal order for "the regular keeping of their journals." Subsequently, in 1621, as I learn from another authority not less authentic, (Hatsell), an entry was made in the journal of the house of commons, on the motion of sir Edward Sackville, in these words: "That all our proceedings may be entered here, and kept as records." Now, sir, it is very remarkable that these two orders of the house of commons contain the identical language of the constitution of the United States, to wit, that a journal shall be kept of their proceedings. In each of them, the magic word to keep, which seems to have exerted so potent a spell on the imaginations of gentlemen, is found; and yet we know it has never been held to be a violation of, or inconsistent with, this order to keep a journal of their proceedings, for the house of commons, in certain cases, to apply an effectual corrective to wrongful or improvident entries previously made in it. It may be said, however, that this order, being made by the body itself, is not obligatory on its own action. To this I reply, that the rules prescribed by parliamentary bodies for their government are always binding upon them, till rescinded or repealed; and while a rule or order is retained, nothing inconsistent with it can be done, unless the rule be first suspended by a vote of the body. Such is the invariable practice, both of this and the other house of congress, as of legislative bodies elsewhere.

But this matter stands on still higher ground. An act of parliament, which all will admit is binding on the respective houses, and which neither house can repeal or control by its separate action, virtually requires a journal to be kept by the house of commons, in requiring certain entries to be made in it. I refer to the statute of 6 Henry VIII, which provides "that the license for members departing from their service shall be entered of record in the book of the clerk of the parliament, appointed, or to be appointed, for the commons' house." The book of the clerk for the commons' house, here referred to, and in which certain things are required to be entered of record, is of course the journal of the house. But how can these entries be made in the journal unless a journal be kept? This act of parliament, therefore, requires, and virtually commands, the keeping of a journal by the house of commons; just as the articles of confederation, already referred to, in providing that congress "shall publish the journal of its proceedings monthly," virtually requires congress to keep a journal; for, otherwise, the required publication could not take place.

The distinction, therefore, which has been relied upon to justify the rejection of the British precedents on this subject, is not founded in a just view of the constitutional or parliamentary history of that country. The two houses of parliament are, in fact, bound and required to keep a journal of their proceedings, as well as the two houses of congress.—They are bound to do so by the very nature of their institution, by their own rules and orders, and by the virtual command of act of parliament. If, therefore, a similarity or community of principle could, in any case, justify arguing from the institutions and usages of the one country to those of the other, it is certainly upon a question like the present. I find that much use was made on another and recent occasion in this body, of British parliamentary precedents, by gentlemen who seem now inclined to disavow and reject them altogether. If I am not mistaken, the senator from South Carolina, (Mr. Calhoun), on the question which was so earnestly and ably debated here recently, as to the right of either house to refuse to receive a petition, introduced Hatsell's work, the great repository of British parliamentary precedents, and drew largely from it in support of the position he maintained, that it would be no violation of the right of petitioning, as guaranteed by the constitution, to refuse to receive a petition after presentation.

Mr. Calhoun here explained, and was understood to say that gentlemen on the other side of the question in that discussion had referred to the English laws and doctrines on the subject of the right of petition, and that he made use of the parliamentary precedents from Hatsell to show that, in the British parliamentary practice, it was held no violation of the right of petition to refuse to receive a petition.

Mr. Rives said he had not the pleasure of hearing the speech of the gentleman from South Carolina, but he inferred from

*It is a remarkable fact, that there is no original manuscript journal of the house of representatives in existence from the date of the adoption of the constitution to the 1st session of the 18th congress, 1823-'24. As soon as the journal was printed and published, it was supposed there was no longer any practical motive for retaining the original manuscript journal, which was, therefore, never taken care of or preserved. Such was the practice during the whole period of the clerkship of the celebrated John Beckley, than whom there never was a more accomplished clerk, and but few able men; and if there be propriety in the maxim, culpa in sua arte erodendum est, such a practical construction of the constitution, in this regard, by a man so conversant with his business, must be admitted to be entitled to no slight consideration.

reading it that he considered the parliamentary practice of Great Britain as, at least, high authority in reference to the question then under discussion. I am not at all disposed, (said Mr. R.) to question the propriety of the application then made by the senator from South Carolina of precedents from the English parliamentary practice. I mean only to say that, however applicable they may have been on that occasion, they are at least as much so on the present.

The precedents in the British parliamentary practice, (which, it must be admitted, has furnished the model, and, to a great extent, the law of the proceedings of our legislative bodies here, and in every state of the union), are, on the subject now under consideration, full, unequivocal, and conclusive. Some of them have been mentioned on this floor, and are familiar to the minds of gentlemen. I will not repeat them; but there are two cases which, I believe, have not attracted the notice of gentlemen, and which, from the peculiar grounds on which they stand, illustrate so forcibly the high supervisory and controlling power of parliamentary bodies over their journals, that I will take the liberty of detaining the senate a few moments, with their recital. In 1668, Skinner, an English merchant, presented a petition, to the king, complaining of various wrongs and outrages he had sustained from the East India company. The matter was considered not cognizable by the ordinary tribunals, and was referred by the king to the house of lords. Strong objections were urged to the jurisdiction of the house of lords; but they nevertheless, took cognizance of the affair, and finally entered a judgment in favor of Skinner against the East India company, for £5,000 damages. This proceeding was immediately and earnestly resisted by the house of commons, as contrary to the law of the land, and an invasion of the rights of the people. A violent and protracted controversy ensued between the two houses; and the lords being compelled at last, after a struggle of eighteen months, and repeated prorogations of both houses, to yield their claim of jurisdiction, they expunged from their journal the judgment they had entered in favor of Skinner against the East India company, and the whole of their proceedings connected with it; whereupon the commons, in like manner, expunged from their journal the various resolutions and proceedings they had adopted. In this instance, we see a proceeding even of a judicial character, under which private rights might be claimed, expunged, in virtue of the high discretionary authority of parliamentary bodies over their journals; and in such a case, perhaps, the expunction is admissible, mainly on the ground that the obnoxious proceeding took place in the exercise of an illegal jurisdiction, at last admitted to be such, and intended to be renounced, as in fact it was finally abandoned, by the act of expunging the judgment, which was its fruit.

The other case to which I have alluded occurred in the proceedings on the recognition bill in 1690. A clause was introduced into that bill on the motion of the whig party of that day and the friends of the revolution, declaring that the acts of the convention parliament, though assembled without the formality of a royal summons, were good and valid. This was strongly objected to by the tory lords; a number of whom, by the leave of the house, entered their protest against it on the journal.

The senate well know that it is a distinctive and fundamental principle in the constitution of the house of lords, that any member or number of members, dissenting from a measure which has passed that body, have the right, with the leave of the house, to enter a formal protest against it on the journal. In this case, the leave of the house was granted. The right of the protesting lords became thereby vested and complete; and yet it appearing, on a subsequent examination of the protest, that the grounds of objection taken in it assailed, and were subversive of, the principles of the revolution, and settlement of the government just accomplished, the house ordered it to be expunged from their journal; which order was carried into execution, and gave rise to another protest for expunging the former protest.

But the precedents of parliamentary expunging are by no means confined to the land of our ancestors, from which we derive the model of our parliamentary institutions and proceedings. Similar instances have occurred in our own country, both before and since our revolution, subsequent as well as previous to the adoption of our present federal constitution, both in the state and in the national legislatures. There is a case in the history of my own state, which, as there appears to have been singular misconceptions about it, the senate will excuse me for mentioning somewhat in detail. I refer to the expunging of a resolution of Mr. Henry, which took place in the house of burgesses of Virginia in 1765. This transaction has been referred to as an odious and abortive attempt at expunging made by the king's party in the house of burgesses, which was defeated by the energy and talents of Mr. Henry. Such, sir, are not the facts, as transmitted to us by the most unquestionable contemporary testimony. The attempt to expunge was not defeated. The proposition, on the contrary, was carried. It was carried not by an odious king's party, but with the concurrence, as we are authorized to believe from the only account extant of the transaction, of men who were, and who proved themselves to be, among the brightest champions of American freedom and independence; such men as Peyton Randolph, the president of the first American congress, George Wythe, Edmund Pendleton, Richard Bland, Richard Henry Lee, all of whom afterwards put their hands to the Declaration of American Independence, or bore a conspicuous part in the deliberations which led to and established it. The circumstances were these: Mr. Henry moved a series of resolutions, five in number, declaratory of the rights of the colonists. The four first of these resolutions merely re-affirmed what had been earnestly asserted only six months before by the house of burgesses in three several documents of the most solemn character, an address to the king, a memorial to the house of lords, and a remonstrance to the commons. The fifth resolution, however, went somewhat further, and seemed to tender at once an issue of force with the mother country. These resolutions were opposed by Messrs. Randolph, Bland, Pendleton, Wythe and other gentlemen, as devoted and firm friends of the rights of America as any of the great statesmen and patriots of that day, but who deemed Mr. Henry's resolutions inexpedient at that moment, inasmuch as the sentiments and principles they contained had already and very recently been expressed in other proceedings, to which the expected answers from the government in England were not yet received. The fifth resolution was deemed especially inexpedient in the then feeble and defenceless condition of the colony, as it might provoke a conflict of force, for which time and forecast were necessary to prepare. The resolutions, however, under a powerful display of Mr. Henry's eloquence, were passed by one or two votes only; but on the following day, on a motion made for that purpose, and carried, the fifth resolution was expunged from the journal. These are the facts as vouched by the testimony of Mr. Jefferson and the elder judge Carrington, (both witnesses of the transaction), and as recorded by the eloquent biographer of Mr. Henry himself. There was then no odious and abortive attempt to expunge, made by a king's party, in the house of burgesses. The attempt was not defeated, as has been said; on the contrary, the proposition to expunge was carried, and carried, as we are authorized to believe by the only authentic account which has reached us of the transaction, by the influence and with the concurrence of high-souled American patriots—of Peyton Randolph, president of the first congress, Richard Bland, one of the chosen delegates of Virginia to that glorious assembly, Edmund Pendleton, another delegate, and George Wythe, whose name stands proudly at the head of the Virginia signatures to the Declaration of Independence. The two last named gentlemen, Mr. Pendleton and Mr. Wythe, afterwards, and for a long period, respectively presided in and adorned the highest courts of law and equity in the state; and it will be no disparagement, I humbly conceive, to the pretensions of the highest here, to say that they understood as well, and felt as religiously, the sanctity of a record, as any gentleman on this floor.

Examples of the like character have occurred in the other states. In the senate of Massachusetts, as is well known, a few years after the close of the late war with Great Britain, a resolution was triumphantly carried for expunging from its journal the anti-American sentiment which the baleful spirit of party had recorded there, in the very midst of the conflict that it was unbecoming a moral and religious people to rejoice in the successes of our arms. At a more recent period, some seven or eight years ago, the senate of another highly respectable state, (Tennessee), as I learn from undoubted authority, directed a formal and important entry on its journal to be stricken out; which was done in the very manner proposed by the resolution on your table, by drawing a black line around the condemned entry. But, without dwelling on these instances, let us descend to cases which come more immediately home to ourselves. The case which occurred in this body in 1806, and which has been already noticed by the senator from Missouri, has been in vain attempted to be parried or evaded.*

* In that case, the following are the facts: on the 21st day of April, 1806, being the last day of the session, Mr. Adams presented two memorials, which are thus noticed on the journal:

"Mr. Adams communicated two memorials, one from Samuel G. Ogden, and the other from Wm. S. Smith, stating that they are under a criminal prosecution for certain proceedings, into which they were led, by the circumstance that their purpose was fully known to, and approved by, the executive government of the United States; that on this prosecution, they have been treated by the judge of the district court of the United States, at New York, Mathias B. Tallmadge, esq. in such a manner that the same grand jury which found the bills against them made a presentment against the judge himself, for his conduct in taking the examination and deposition of the said Samuel G. Ogden. And the memorialists, considering congress as the only power competent to relieve them, submit their case to the wisdom of congress, and pray such relief as the laws and constitution of this country, and the wisdom and goodness of congress, may afford them; and the memorials were read; and, on motion,

"Ordered, That the memorialists have leave to withdraw their memorials respectively."

These memorials appear to have been presented in the morning. After disposing of them, and a variety of other business, the senate took a recess, and met again at five o'clock P. M. The very last entry on the journal of the evening session is the following order, adopted on ayes and noes, for expunging every thing in the journal relative to the aforesaid memorials:

"On motion, that every thing in the journal relative to the memorials of S. G. Ogden and Wm. S. Smith be expunged therefrom;" it passed in the affirmative. YEAS: Messrs. Adair,

In that case, a formal entry, made on the journal in pursuance of the standing rules of the senate, and in strict conformity to the truth of facts, as they transpired, was ordered to be expunged, and actually expunged. The entry recited the substance of two memorials presented by a member of the senate, containing grave and criminal insinuations against the executive, and stated also, the proceeding of the senate, which took place on their presentation. This entry, as I have already remarked, was in strict pursuance of the standing rules of the senate, the 32d article of which expressly requires that "a brief statement of the contents of each petition, memorial or paper, presented to the senate, shall be inserted on the journal;" and, in general, that "a true and accurate account of the proceedings of the senate shall be entered on the journal." Now, sir, how is the force of this precedent in the annals of our own body attempted to be parried? Why, sir, by the circumstance that the order for expunging the obnoxious entry was adopted on the same day (the last of the session) that the entry itself was made, it being contended that the journal is not complete till it is read over in the senate, as it usually is the following morning, for the purpose of correcting any mistakes which may have been made in it; and that, till that ceremony has been gone through, it is under the perfect control of the senate, and fully open to revision and correction. This is the argument of the honorable senator from Louisiana, (Mr. Porter.) It is obvious to remark upon it, in the first place, that it confounds two things entirely distinct in their nature, and wholly different in the principles on which they rest—the correction of mistakes in a journal, and the expunging of matter therefrom, in which there has been no mistake, but which is otherwise and intrinsically objectionable. The purpose for which the journal is ordinarily read over in the morning, after it is made up by the secretary, is simply to correct any mistakes which may have been made in the entries upon it. This is explicitly declared by the standing rules of the senate, the very first of which provides that the "president having taken the chair, and a quorum being present, the journal of the preceding day shall be read, to the end that any mistake shall be corrected that shall be made in the entries."

Now, sir, in the precedent of 1806, there was no mistake in the entry which was ordered to be expunged. It recited truly, and in compliance with a positive injunction of the rules of the senate, the substance of the memorials presented, and the proceeding of the senate on their presentation. There was and could be no allegation of any error in these respects. The entry was ordered to be expunged, not because of any mistake in it, but because the matter of it was unjust and wrong; because it went to criminate the executive administration of the country, without proof or probability; and for that reason ought not to stand upon the journal of a co-ordinate department. It is in vain, therefore, to endeavor to resolve the precedent of 1806 into the ordinary power of revising and correcting the journal before it is finally made up. It was a far different thing. It was no process of correcting mistakes in entries on the journal, which is ordinarily done the morning after the entries are made, and without the formality of an order or resolution. It was the exercise, on the part of this body, of a higher and more important power—a power not to correct mistake, (for there was none), but to redress wrong—to purge its journal, not of erroneous entries—but of improper matter, in the entry of which there had been no error or mistake; a power which, from the nature of it, and the principles on which it is founded, must exist in as full force the next year as the next morning after the objectionable entry has been made.

No ingenuity, Mr. President, however great, no effort of mind, however gigantic, can ever succeed in the attempt which is made to reconcile the senatorial precedent of 1806 with the doctrines of gentlemen who oppose the resolution now under consideration. On what, sir, is their whole argument built? Is it not the assumption that each house of congress, in being required to "keep a journal of their proceedings," is bound to preserve to all future time the record of each and all of their proceedings; that every act or proceeding of either house should be entered on the journal; and once truly entered there, that entry can never thereafter be touched, altered or removed, but must remain in as it is, without the change of a letter or comma, to the "last syllable of recorded time?" Now, sir, can it be contended that the presentation of the memorials of Messrs. Smith and Ogden, by a member of the senate, the reading of those memorials, the action taken upon them by the senate, were not proceedings of which the constitution requires a journal to be kept? We have already seen that the rules of the senate, adopted for the purpose of fulfilling the injunction of the constitution, expressly require all these things to be entered on the journal. Can it be pretended that these matters were not truly entered? By no means. In every possible aspect, then, in which the proceedings of this body, in 1806, can be viewed, it utterly prostrates the whole fabric of technical refinement on which the arguments of gentlemen against the power to expunge have been raised.

A case of expunging, involving precisely the same principle, and leading to the same consequence, occurred in the house of representatives not many years ago. On the 25th of February, 1823, Mr. Randolph, of Virginia, being informed that Mr. Pinckney had just died in this city, (where he then was,) rose and announced the event to the house, with the impressive eloquence which the loss of such a man naturally drew from a genius of kindred inspiration, and moved an immediate adjournment of the house. It afterwards appeared that Mr. Pinckney was not dead at the time that Mr. Randolph communicated the event to the house, though he died some few hours after. The fact, however, of Mr. Randolph's having announced the event, and the consequent adjournment of the house, were necessarily entered on the journal as a part of its proceedings; and the following day, Mr. Randolph, after an explanation of the circumstances, moved that the entry on the journal of the preceding day should be expunged, which was ordered, and accordingly done. Now, sir, if the extreme, and, I might well call it, superstitious strictness which is now inculcated in regard to the sanctity and inviolability of entries once made on our journals had prevailed then, this expunction, however simple and proper in itself, could not have been made. It will be remarked that there was no mistake in the entry made on the journal. The entry was not of Mr. Pinckney's death, but of the fact that Mr. Randolph on a given day announced to the house that Mr. Pinckney was dead, and then moved an adjournment. That fact was truly entered, precisely as it occurred. If there had been a mistake in the entry, the motion would have been the ordinary one to correct, and not the extraordinary one to expunge it. If moreover, the doctrine now so earnestly contended for by gentlemen were well founded, that a transaction or proceeding in either house once truly entered on its journal, the entry must stand there to all future time, and cannot be touched or changed in a letter or a comma, without a violation of the constitution, then Mr. Randolph, instead of the short and obvious remedy of an expunction of the entry of the preceding day, could have constitutionally attained his object only by a distinct entry of his explanation on the journal of the succeeding day.

But, sir, the senator from Louisiana, even conceding the power of each house over entries previously made on its journal, contends that this power is limited to the current congress and that the senate or house of representatives of a succeeding congress has no control whatever over the journal of the senate or house of representatives of a preceding congress. Without stopping to show that this argument, even if correct in its principle, would be wholly inapplicable to the senate, which, from the successive partial renewals of its members, (one-third of the whole being replaced by new elections every second year), is a perpetual body, I choose rather to meet the principle of the objection at once, by demonstrating its utter incompatibility with the nature of the legislative trust. It is a fundamental principle in regard to legislative bodies, that, in their ordained succession by virtue of periodical elections, one legislature has precisely as much and the same power as another; a law enacted by one legislature, or in one session of a legislature, may be repealed by another or during a subsequent session. What one resolves another may rescind; and in like manner, and on the same principle, one legislature has as much and the same power over the legislative records as another. In this respect, there is an obvious and important distinction between legislative and judicial bodies; a supposed analogy in whose functions and proceedings has, doubtless, misled the honorable senator. After the adjournment or close of the term of a court, its proceedings, its orders, its judgments, its decrees are final and irrevocable, so far as it depends on its own action. It has no power, as legislative bodies have, at a subsequent term or session, to revoke, change or set aside anything done by it at a preceding term or session. If error has been committed, that error can be corrected after the expiration of the term only by a higher tribunal, and certain limitations of time are prescribed within which even these appeals to higher tribunals must be prosecuted. So imperative is the maxim, "interest reipublice ut sit finis litium," the public repose requires a limit to be fixed to judicial controversies. The nature of the legislative trust, however, being altogether different, and requiring that the exercise and expression of the public will should be at all times unfettered in matters of general concern, every legislature, or session of a legislature, has an unlimited control over the acts, proceedings or resolutions of a preceding legislature or session.

Gentlemen have been misled, as it seems to me, through the whole course of this discussion, by a supposed analogy between legislative and judicial proceedings, when in fact, none exist. Either from the force of professional habits, or from a hasty consideration of the subject, we have heard legislative journals and judicial records constantly confounded, when no two things can be more distinct. The security of private rights, titles to property, real and personal, repose on the judicial records of the country; and hence those records are every where guarded by proper penal enactments against unauthorized interference, or any alteration whatever. But in regard to legislative journals, while they are necessarily confided to the sound discretion of the respective bodies whose duty it is to keep them, private rights and the security of property can never depend upon them. Important rights and interests may sometimes be claimed or acquired, and I know, under legislative acts, but those acts, if laws, are never spread upon the journal, or, if joint resolutions, they are enrolled and preserved, like the laws, out of, and independent of, the journal, and both are included in annual and authorised publications of the acts of congress, which are received in evidence in all the courts, without further proof of authenticity.

Dismissing, for the present, Mr. President, the authority of precedents, there are cases in which, upon the mere reason of the thing, I think all would agree that the right of this body to expunge an entry from its journal would be unquestionable. The constitution requires each house to keep a journal of its "proceedings;" that is, I presume, its proceedings as a constitutional body, acting in discharge of its appropriate constitutional functions. On this point, I beg leave to read a passage from Mr. Jefferson's manual, the authority which especially governs our proceedings in this body—a passage which seems to me to have an important bearing on the question we have been considering.

He says: "Where the constitution authorises each house to determine the rules of its proceedings, it must mean, in those cases, legislative, executive or judiciary, submitted to them by the constitution, or in something relating to these, and necessary towards their execution. But orders and resolutions are sometimes entered in the journals, having no relation to these, such as acceptances of invitations to attend orations, to take part in processions, &c. These must be understood to be merely conventional among those who are willing to participate in the ceremony, and are, therefore, perhaps, improperly placed among the records of the house."

The result of this, as it seems to me, very clear and just distinction is, that nothing is to be regarded as properly a proceeding of either house, of which a journal is required to be kept, but such acts as are done in discharge of the legislative, executive or judicial functions, respectively, committed to them by the constitution. If any act be done by either house, not appertaining to the discharge of its constitutional functions, that act ought to be considered as extra-official, or, as Mr. Jefferson expresses it, as merely conventional among the members participating in it; consequently, not as a proceeding of the body to be entered on the journal, and, if improperly placed there, may be, and ought to be, taken off. With this distinction as my guide, let me suppose a case. Let us suppose that this body, imitating the irregular practice which has obtained in some of the state legislatures, should, while still organized as a senate, proceed to the nomination of a president of the United States: let us suppose that the very resolution which is now proposed to be expunged had been used, as it well might, as a preamble to such a nomination: let us suppose that the president had been in his first term, and then the preamble and nomination would have run thus: "Whereas Andrew Jackson, (the president of the United States, has, in the late executive proceedings in relation to the public revenue, assumed upon himself authority and power not conferred by the constitution and laws, but in derogation of both," and has thereby proved himself unworthy of the confidence of a free people: Resolved, therefore, as the opinion of the senate, that — be, and is hereby, recommended to the good people of the United States as the most fit and proper person to replace the said Andrew Jackson in the office of president," &c.

Suppose, Mr. President, that such a resolution had been adopted by the senate, organized as it is at this moment, yourself in the chair, all the senators in their seats, the secretary at his table, the yeas and nays called upon it, and the resolution finally entered upon the journal: could such a resolution, notwithstanding all the senatorial forms which might have accompanied it, be considered as a proceeding of the senate, within the meaning of the constitution? Can any one doubt that there would be full authority in this body, when it should see the error and evil tendency of its act, to expunge such a resolution from its journal? If so, the question of power is settled, and the propriety only of its exercise would then depend upon a question, which I will not anticipate the discussion of, but which it may be well to suggest for the consideration of gentlemen, whether the resolution actually adopted on the occasion referred to had more relation to the functions, legislative, executive or judiciary, entrusted by the constitution to this body, than the resolution supposed would have had?

While, therefore, Mr. President, I cannot doubt that there are cases in which an entry, improperly placed upon our journals, may be removed or expunged therefrom by actual erasure or obliteration, it must yet be borne in mind that no such obliteration or erasure is contemplated or required by the resolution now under consideration. It contemplates a moral, not a physical expunction—an expunction of the act, without expunging the record. It seeks to deprive that act of all legal force and validity, by applying to it the appropriate and significant language of parliamentary condemnation; and, without erasing or oblittering the original entry of it on the journal, to affix to that entry a visible mark, which shall show, in all time, that the act there recorded had been revoked, annulled and repudiated by the solemn judgment of the senate and the nation; so that if, in any future search for precedent, the act be found, its condemnation be found inseparably associated with it. That this is the meaning and intention of the resolution, is shown by its own express declaration. But it is objected that, in that sense, the term expunged cannot be properly used. The question, then, becomes one of mere verbal criticism; and surely gentlemen will admit that it is the privilege of public bodies, as well as private individuals, to define the sense in which they use terms susceptible of a difference of signification. This is explicitly done by the resolution under consideration, and all objections founded on the assumption of a meaning, different from that in which the resolution interprets and defines its own language, must, of necessity, fall to the ground. But I willingly meet gentlemen on the question they have made, and maintain that the use of the word expunge, in the sense in which it is employed on the present occasion, is perfectly correct and consistent in itself, and justified by numerous parallel examples in the usage of language, both in judicial and parliamentary proceedings. I will call the attention of my learned colleagues especially, (Mr. Leigh,) to a striking illustration, furnished by the decisions of the highest courts in our own state, with which he is far more familiar than I can pretend to be. We all know, Mr. President, that in law a deed is an instrument signed, sealed and delivered; that it is an essential and indispensable element in its legal character that it should be sealed, and that a seal, in the common understanding of the word, and as defined, I believe, by lord Coke himself, is an impression made on wax or wafer; and yet the court of appeals in Virginia, as have more recently, I believe, the courts in a majority of the other states, decided, on principles of common sense and common law, independently of any statutory provision on the subject, that a scroll or black lines drawn in any shape to suit the fancy of the drawer, when declared to be intended for a seal, does, in fact, constitute a seal, and make the paper to which it is attached, to all intents and purposes, a sealed instrument. Now, sir, if black lines can thus be made to constitute a seal, a thing which, in its ordinary sense, is formed of wholly different materials, surely they may be made to stand for expunging, which, in its strictest and most literal sense, demands only the use of the same materials. In either case, the declared intention stands in place of, and is equivalent to, the thing itself.

Again, sir, the term cancel, if not of precisely the same, is certainly of every analogous import to the word expunge. Its etymological meaning, as well as that which is given to it in the legal definition, is to destroy a deed or other writing by drawing lines across it in the form of lattice work. It is a principal branch of the common law jurisdiction of the court of chancery in England to cancel letters patent, (which are records), obtained from the king upon false suggestions, or otherwise void. In both legal and popular phraseology we speak of a deed or will (all matters of record) being cancelled by the decree of a court. Now, sir, in these cases, I presume the lord chancellor does not actually draw lines in the form of lattice work on the letters patent which he cancels; nor does the court run the pen across the will or deed which is cancelled and set aside by its decision. On the contrary, it is the decision of the chancellor, or the decree of the court pronouncing the patent, will or deed, to be fraudulent and void, which, per se, cancels it; that is destroys its legal validity and effect, while leaving the record of its material existence unimpaired. In like manner, the word expunge, in the present instance, exerts its whole force on the legal act or precedent itself, without impairing the written entry of it upon our journal.

The illustrations furnished by familiar parliamentary proceedings are not less forcible, while they have the advantage of coming still nearer home to us. When a motion is made and carried to strike out a clause or section in a bill, it is not, as I understand, actually stricken out or erased with the pen, but the portion voted to be stricken out is indicated by suitable marks, with a corresponding notation on the margin of the bill, or on a separate paper, and is considered as stricken out by the mere force of the vote. What is directed to be done, is, by a parliamentary fiction, if you choose, considered as actually done. It is a singular coincidence that, in the earlier period of our parliamentary history, this very word expunge, which has of late furnished such a fruitful theme of commentary, was habitually used instead of the phrase to strike out, in reference to amendments, and in the sense in which the latter phrase has just been explained. During the two first congresses under the present constitution, I find that, in the journal of this body especially, the word expunge is of constant recurrence; and that, in proposing amendments to bills, the motion was to expunge, instead of strike out; and when carried, the clause or section which was the subject of the motion was said to be expunged, though, as in the case of striking out, there was no actual erasure, which it is now contended the word necessarily imports.—From its frequent recurrence in the same application, in Yates's report of the proceedings of the convention which formed the constitution, we are authorised to infer that its use in the same sense was also familiar among the learned statesmen who composed that illustrious assembly.

But there is an example of its use which I cannot forbear to mention.

In the draught of the Declaration of Independence, this significant word is used in the very sense which is assigned to it on the present occasion. After stating the fundamental principle of the right of the people to alter or abolish their institutions, a right which prudence requires should not be exercised for light and transient causes, and, accordingly, that all experience hath shown mankind more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to abolish the forms to which they are accustomed, the following pregnant sentence occurs: "Such has been the patient endurance of these colonies, and such is now the necessity which constrains them to expunge their former systems of government."

Now, sir, as Mr. Jefferson was what lord Clarendon, I think, called John Hampden, a root and branch man, he might be considered, perhaps, both in temperament and principle, as an ex-junger. It may not, therefore, be improper to add that this word stood in the Declaration of Independence, not only as it came from the pen of Mr. Jefferson, but as it was reported to congress, and sanctioned by the rest of the committee, by John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, Robert Livingston and Roger Sherman. What, sir, did these great men and illustrious patriots mean by expunging our "former systems of government?" Did they mean that the royal charters, in which those systems of government existed and were delineated, were to be erased and obliterated with the pen, as modern commentators would have us believe the word expunge can only mean? No, sir, they meant as we mean on the present occasion, that the institution, the act should be expunged, leaving the record of it unimpaired.

Having thus, sir, I hope, satisfactorily established the true parliamentary sense of expunging, permit me to say something of the thing itself. Attempts have been made here and elsewhere to represent it as something very odious and iniquitous. Now, sir, I take upon myself to say that, from the nature of the thing, implying necessarily a deliberate change in the public councils, it never can be resorted to in a representative government, but with the sanction and under the authority of the people, and in their hands will never be used but for the vindication of their rights and of the principles of their fundamental law. In the history of our British ancestors, sir, it comes down to us through a long line of glorious traditions. In that country it has been the instrument by which every great principle of civil and political liberty has been successfully vindicated and established. How was expunging used, sir, in the celebrated case of John Hampden and ship-money in 1640? We all know, sir, that in that case the king claimed an arbitrary power to levy upon the people, at his own discretion, whatever imposition he might deem necessary for the support of the government and the defence of the kingdom. This enormous usurpation was sanctioned by the judges, not merely in an extra judicial opinion irregularly obtained from them, but in their solemn judgment rendered in the exchequer chamber against John Hampden, for his refusal to pay the odious tribute exacted of him. These iniquitous proceedings were afterwards expunged in the high court of parliament; and by that expunction the great principle of free government, that the people can be taxed only with their consent given through their representatives, that principle which gave birth to our own glorious revolution, was, for the first time, successfully and irrevocably established. In the case of Skinner and the East India company, in 1669, to which I have heretofore referred, what was the great principle involved? In addition to that ultimate appellate jurisdiction in questions of law, of which the house of lords in England has been long possessed, it claimed on that occasion cognizance of original suits, in utter subversion of the trial by jury. By being forced at last, by the noble resistance of the house of commons, to expunge the judgment they had pronounced and their other proceeding in that memorable case, they renounced, finally, this dangerous claim of original jurisdiction, and the glorious institution of our Anglo-Saxon ancestors, the great bulwark of British and American freedom, the trial by jury, was thus triumphantly rescued and maintained.

In the case of the protest of the tory lords in 1690, to which I have also had occasion to refer, the principle involved and finally vindicated by this odious process of expunging was even of a deeper and more vital character. The senate will recollect that the clause in the recognition bill to which the tory lords objected, and against which they entered their protest, was one asserting the validity of the acts of the convention parliament; that parliament under whose auspices the glorious revolution of 1688 had just been achieved. The tory lords were unwilling to recognise the validity of its acts, because it was called together in the emergency of a great crisis, by the voice of the nation itself, speaking in the person of the prince of Orange, and without the formality of the king's writ, which these lords held was indispensable, under all circumstances, to constitute a lawful parliament. This objection, formerly recorded in their protest, struck at the vital principle of the revolution which had just been accomplished—the sovereign right of the people to alter or abolish their institutions without a slavish submission to pre-existing forms. The house, therefore, ordered their protest, which had been regularly entered on the journal, to be expunged, and, in doing so, worthily vindicated the vital principle of the right of the people to change, modify or abolish their institutions, whenever it shall seem to them good—a principle which stands in the very front of the Declaration of American Independence, and is even more essential to American than British liberty.

The case of the Middlesex election, which gave rise to another instance of expunging in 1782, is perfectly familiar to the minds of the senate. There the great right of the people freely to choose their own representatives was vindicated and established by expunging a resolution of the house of commons, adopted fourteen years ago, and which was justly described as "subversive of the rights of the whole body of electors in the kingdom." We have seen, then, this denounced and calumniated process of expunging, through two centuries of British freedom, used as the efficacious instrument by which every great constitutional right, every cardinal principle of popular liberty dear to the hearts of freemen, has been successfully vindicated and redeemed; in 1640, the right of the people to be taxed only with their own consent; in 1769, the right to jury trial; in 1690, that right which is the mother of all others, the right of the people to organize, modify or abolish their political institutions at their own pleasure; in 1682, that right which forms the practical security for the rest, the right of the people freely to choose their own representatives. In view of these facts, it is no exaggeration to say that every cardinal principle of British and American freedom has, at one period or another, been vindicated and established by this remedial but calumniated process of expunging.

I have already remarked, Mr. President, that this remedy for the abuse of delegated power can never be resorted to, in a representative government, but with the deliberate sanction, and under the formal authority, of the people. Expunging is, in fact, the embodied and potential voice of the people, bursting by its legitimate power, the doors of legislative assemblies, and correcting, in the most solemn form, the deviations and assumptions of their servants. It necessarily implies a change in the public councils by the operation of the public will; for the body, which has committed an error or been guilty of a usurpation, remaining constituted as it was, will not be the willing instrument of correcting or expunging its own wrong. Accordingly, in every one of the cases which I have mentioned, the final parliamentary action has been preceded by the matured, the settled, the irreversible judgment of the public mind. In the case of Hampden and the ship-money, the proceedings which were expunged took place in 1637; the expunction followed three years after, in 1640. In the mean time, the public mind had been anxiously and intensely exercised on the subject; the question had been publicly and solemnly argued before all the judges in the exchequer chamber, from time to time, through a period of six months. After their decision was pronounced, the merits of that decision continued to furnish the theme of able and earnest discussion at the bar of public opinion; and, finally, the settled judgment of the nation was carried into execution, by the order of the high court of parliament, for expunging the rolls of the obnoxious proceedings. In the case of Skinner and the East India company, in like manner, the question between the two houses was pending, and earnestly debated before the nation for eighteen months; and the house of commons was but the organ of the settled public opinion of the country, in finally wresting from the lords the expunction of their dangerous and illegal proceedings. In the case of the protest of the tory lords, in 1690, the great principles involved had been kept constantly before the public mind, by the profound interest awakened by the revolution of 1688, and the faithful and patriotic whigs of that day but acted out a deliberate and forgone conclusion in the public judgment, by expunging a protest which assailed "the vital principle of popular sovereignty." In the case of the Middlesex election, the question had been pending before the nation for fourteen long years; during which time it had been the subject of public discussion in every possible form—popular, parliamentary and legal, in meetings of the people, in both houses of parliament, and incidentally before the judicial tribunals of the country. Public opinion was never more maturely formed, more fully expressed, or more faithfully represented, than in the order for expunging the unconstitutional and obnoxious resolution in that case.

So it is, sir, on the present occasion. It is this day precisely two years since the resolution now proposed to be expunged was adopted by this body. During the whole of that period, the public attention has been constantly recalled to it by able and eloquent debates here—by the searching discussions of the press—by the calm and self-directed inquiries of the public mind. This subject has been constantly under the consideration of the people, in one form or another. Every temporary and artificial excitement has passed by, and the public judgment has been left to its own self-balanced wisdom to pronounce on the issue joined before it. Its decision, I believe, sir, has been made up, and, in great part, pronounced. Eleven of the sovereign states of this union have spoken, and spoken authoritatively, demanding the expunction of this resolution from our journals. There can be but little hazard in saying that four or five more desire and would approve it, though they have not yet spoken in an authoritative form, probably because they have supposed it to be unnecessary to do so. The judgment of our constituents, then, of the people, and of the states, has passed on this transaction—I believe irrevocably passed upon it. They consider the resolution adopted by this body on the 25th March, 1834, as irregular, as illegal, as unjust, as unconstitutional; and the more alarming, as proceeding from that branch of the federal legislature which is the most irresponsible, and as tending dangerously to increase its power, already sufficiently great. On these grounds, they demand that that resolution be expunged from our journals; and seeing not the slightest constitutional impediment to the remedial process for which they have indicated their preference, I, for one, Mr. President, will cheerfully obey their voice.

SPEECH OF MR. LEIGH, (OF VIRGINIA),
On Mr. Benton's expunging resolution,
Monday, April 4.

Mr. Leigh said he wished the senate, and especially his friends who concurred with him in sentiment on this very peculiar and important question, to understand that private cares, from which he could not withdraw his mind, had alone prevented him from giving that undivided attention to the subject which would have enabled him to call it up for consideration at an earlier day.

He said the resolution of the 28th March, 1834, declaring "that the president in the late executive proceedings in relation to the revenue had assumed upon himself authority and power not conferred by the constitution and laws, but in derogation of both," presented in itself, two questions for consideration: 1st. Whether the proposition there affirmed was just and true, in point of fact and in point of law? and 2d. Whether it was within the constitutional competency of the senate to entertain such a resolution, and to determine upon it? And it was upon the negation of these two points, for reasons set out in the preamble, that the gentleman from Missouri founded the proposition now made, to expunge the resolution from the journal. Now, (said Mr. Leigh), it is most obvious, that if the gentleman had proposed a preamble and resolution, reciting that the resolution of March, 1834, was false and unjust in fact and in law; that it was an assumption of the powers of the house of representatives; an impeachment, trial, and prejudication of the president, on a criminal charge; and resolving, therefore, that the resolution be rescinded—this would have been as strong a censure of the resolution, as effectual an exoneration of the president from all blame, as effectual an expression of that sentence of condemnation, which, we are told, the people have pronounced on our conduct, and of the judgment imputed to them, of acquittal and approbation of the president, as this resolution to expunge the entry of the former resolution from the journal. No one doubts the constitutional right of the senate to rescind the resolution of March, 1834, if it really think the proceeding a usurpation of power, incompatible with our duties, unjust in fact and in law, and mischievous. And his mind must be strangely constituted, who does not see that the right of the senate to expunge the resolution from the journal is, to say the least, questionable. The very argument of the gentleman from Missouri on the point, and much more that of my colleague, evince that, even in their own sense, the right is not free of doubt; that of my colleague seemed to me to betray not a little skepticism. The known, the recorded hesitancy of many senators at the last session, as to the right of expunging, who were ready and desirous to rescind, ought, I should think, to satisfy gentlemen that the right to expunge is, at best, doubtful. Why, then, is that course, as to the constitutionality of which there is no question, and which would present the whole merits of the contested resolution for consideration, relinquished, and this course, the constitutionality of which even its advocates, though they have reasoned themselves into a belief that it is right, must, I presume, admit to be somewhat questionable, preferred and resorted to?

"Expunge," says the gentleman from Missouri, "expunge is the word"—because it serves to fix a mark of disgrace on the conduct of the senate—because it condemns not only our resolution, but our motives—because it pronounces sentence on the senate (as a reward to the president) of "dishonor, denunciation, stigma, infamy;" because "it is the only word that can render adequate justice to that man who has done more for the human race than any other mortal who has ever lived in the tide of time;" and because, says my honorable colleague, (if I rightly apprehend his meaning), the senate is the most irresponsible body in this government; for I can conceive no reason for this allegation of irresponsibility against the constitution of the senate, in the present debate, but to show the wisdom and necessity of humbling it, or to rouse against it the indignation and jealousy of the public, which may stand in place of a reason for the proposed sentence of condemnation.

As to the panegyric on the president, I shall only say, for the present, that if he desires this poor triumph over his political opponents—a triumph more humiliating to himself, in truth, than to them—as Cato's image, drawn in Caesar's train, detracted nothing from the fame of the dead patriot, but only showed the pusillanimity of the victor—"ignobly vain and impotently great;" this alone would be sufficient to evince that he deserves no such panegyric. I agree with the gentleman from Missouri, that the president's name and memory will live as long as the history of these times shall be extant; but, whether they will live for honor and gratitude, or for contempt and detestation—whether he shall be regarded, in aftertimes, as the benefactor of his country, or as the destroyer of its free institutions—whether his history shall be written by some future Plutarch, or by a Tacitus or Sallust—whether his name and deeds shall be the theme of immortal praise, or "damned to everlasting fame;" this let me tell the gentleman from Missouri, it is no more within his competency to decide or foresee, than it is within mine. All-trying time can alone determine. Henry VIII was lauded, during his life, for piety, generosity and justice, and James I for his wisdom; Cicero paid the forfeit of his life for his patriotism and virtue; and John De Wit was torn in pieces by the people, to whose service, to the establishment of whose civil liberty and republican institutions, he had devoted his whole life and his great abilities. But history has been impartial.

I am sorry my honorable colleague thought it proper, on this occasion, to denounce the senate as the most irresponsible body in this government. I must say, that it is of a piece with the denunciations of the senate, that have been, for some time, going round of the ministerial newspapers. It is truly astonishing to me that any statesman should entertain such an opinion. The president, wielding the whole of the vast patronage of this government, and being, in the nature of things, the head of the dominant party for the time being, is, in every practical view, far less responsible than the senate; and, if the gentleman's opinions of the constitutional powers and rights of the executive be correct, I shall show him, before I have done, that the president is absolutely irresponsible.

But, if my colleague founds this allegation of irresponsibility against the constitution of the senate on the length of its term of service, I think he must admit, upon his own principles, that the judiciary is yet more irresponsible; and therefore I apprehend, that when the senate shall be disposed of, when it shall be reduced to insignificance and utter inefficiency, the constitution of the judiciary department will be taken up for subversion under pretext of reform. Indeed, the note of war against it has already been sounded. I presume my honorable colleague will not deny that this alleged irresponsibility of the senate, if it exist, is ordained by the constitution; and then, I ask him, whether to stigmatize the senate for that cause, to point public jealousy and indignation against it, to degrade, to humble it at the foot of the presidential throne, is not an attempt, so far forth as it may work, to effect a practical change in the constitution of the senate? and this for the very reason that it has approved itself capable of fulfilling (though but for a brief space) the purposes of its institution; namely, of exercising a check on the executive power and on the national popular branch of the legislature. If the senate be not sufficiently responsible, that may be a good reason for resorting to the direct remedy for this vice in the government, and proposing an amendment of the constitution; but it is no reason for fixing a stigma upon it, or for rousing the resentment and indignation of the public against it. And it was with surprise and chagrin that I heard my colleague urge this imputed irresponsibility of the senate, in an argument to show the propriety of setting a mark of ignominy on its proceedings.

The constitutional question involved in the proposition to expunge the resolution of March, 1834, lies, in truth, in a very narrow compass—whether such expunction be consistent with the provision of the constitution, that "each house shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such parts as may, in their judgment, require secrecy; and the yeas and nays of the members of either house, on any question, shall at the desire of one-fifth of those present be entered on the journal?" I stand on the supremacy of the constitution, and the plain meaning and intent of the express requisition, that the senate "shall keep a journal of its proceedings;" and my task is to expose the fallacy of those glosses, by which the advocates of the expunging process would persuade us to avoid the constitutional provision, and defeat its purpose.

My honorable colleague told us with admirable gravity that, as it has been the known, invariable and indispensable practice of every legislative body to keep a journal of its proceedings, the constitutional injunction upon each house of congress to keep a journal, taken substantively by itself, is wholly supererogatory; and that every legislative body has an absolute discretion over its own journal, inherent in the very nature of parliamentary institutions; an unlimited right to make what disposition in respect to them it thinks proper, and may exercise such discretion at any time; which he did not attempt to prove by argument, but only to establish by precedents. And so he concluded, very logically, that we have a right to expunge the entry of this offensive resolution from the journal of the session of 1833-'34. Never have I read or heard any thing put in the form of argument, that was so perfect a specimen of the petitio principii. The gentleman has begged the whole question. He has stated the propositions it was his duty to prove as postulata; and then concluded to give the very propositions he had taken for granted. Give him his premises; grant that the constitutional requisition that we shall keep a journal is supererogatory, and so of no effect; allow him to expunge those words from the constitution; and grant, too, that every legislative body, the two houses of congress not excepted, has an absolute, unlimited discretion to do what it thinks proper with its journal, and then I myself should not controvert the conclusion, that we may expunge this entry of the resolution of March, 1834, from our journal. But he cannot show a right to expunge this entry from our journal, unless he can show a right to expunge the injunction to keep the journal from the constitution.

When gentlemen propose to expunge the resolution of March, 1834, from the journal of that session of the senate, what do they mean by expunging? The English verb to expunge has, (according to Dr. Johnson), only two senses; 1. to blot out, rub out; 2. to efface, annihilate. The word is used metaphorically, when, in any thing written for the purpose of being fairly copied or printed, a word or passage is struck out by running the pen through it, which prevents it from being copied or printed, and so expunges it in effect. It is in this sense that Swift uses it in the passage quoted by Johnson as an example. "Neither do they remember the many alterations, additions and expungings, made by great authors, in those treatises which they prepare for publication." But in this sense gentlemen do not mean to expunge our resolution from the journal; they do not profess an intention or wish so to expunge it; in truth, they cannot so expunge it, for it has been already printed and published.

Can the resolution be expunged from the journal; in the true literal acceptance of the phrase, without a violation of the constitution? The argument is, that the injunction upon each house of congress to keep a journal is simply a requisition to make one, which is to be printed and published, and is to be made only for the purpose of being published; that, after the publication, the duty to keep the journal is at an end; the printed copy is the journal—the manuscript copy is functus officio—it is mere waste paper—and the keeping of the original manuscript is only matter of form. If this be true, what is it? I ask, in the name of common sense, what is it gentlemen are proposing to do? Not to expunge an entry from the journal of a former session of the senate, but only to deface a piece of waste paper they have found in the secretary's office, which they, or the secretary, or any body else that can lay his hands upon it, may destroy without fault or blame; which they might carry to the president, lay it at his feet, and invite him to trample upon this east-away memorial of the transactions of the refractory senate, or throw it into the flames, or order it to be burnt by the common hangman; which any man may, without fault or hazard, the moment after the expunging process shall be completed, tear in pieces, and give to the winds. Do gentlemen seriously desire to expunge the resolution from the journal in effigy? Can they really think that expunging in this wise, defacing a piece of waste paper, "is the only word that can render adequate justice to that man who has done more for the human race than any other mortal who has lived in the time of time?" What an appropriate act to signalize their real estimate of the merits they so highly extol! What a glorious triumph, what a pleasing gratification, must this "avenging word expunge," thus understood and applied, afford to the president!

But what, in truth, is the journal of the senate? The original manuscript journal, made out from the minutes of our proceedings, according to the rules and orders of the senate, read over every morning, amended and corrected if erroneous, and finally deposited in our archives; or, the numerous printed copies, made from a copy furnished by the secretary to the public printer, distributed to members of congress, to the federal, executive and legislative offices, the state governments, foreign ministers, universities and public libraries? Gentlemen say, the printed copy; because, forsooth, a printed copy of the journal published by authority is received as primary evidence in the courts of justice. True, it has been held to be so admissible; but this is on a principle of general convenience; because the printed copy is very seldom erroneous, and its accuracy is hardly ever questioned or questionable; and because to require an exemplification, or an examined sworn copy, in every case in which such a document may be wanting for evidence, would lead to unnecessary delays, trouble and expense. But to bring this question to a plain decisive test: Suppose the journal of the senate should be offered as evidence of any right or claim, and it should be alleged that the printed copy published by authority varies from the original manuscript journal, and this should be made to appear by an inspection of the original: which would be respected, the printed copy or the original manuscript journal? No one who has the least notion of the law of evidence will hesitate for the answer. The original manuscript journal is the evidence which the court must respect.

The printed editions of the constitution and laws of the U. States, published by authority, are resorted to as evidence of the law in all the courts of justice of the union, state and federal. Is it to be, therefore, inferred that the original manuscript enrolments of them are no longer of any use? That the laws having been made, printed and published by authority, there is no longer any duty to keep the rolls of parchment on which they are written? That they may be effaced, mutilated or destroyed, or applied to any purpose to which they can be applicable; as the monks in the dark ages used the parchments on which the Latin classics were written, for inditing their own worthless treatises of theology?

There are two facts in the history of our legislation which furnish a most apt and perfect illustration of this part of the subject.

In Bioren's edition of the constitution and laws of the United States, published by authority, and daily resorted to for evidence of the law, in all our courts of justice, there is found a 13th amendment of the constitution, ordaining that "if any citizen of the United States shall accept, claim, receive or retain any title of nobility or honor, or shall, without consent of congress, accept and retain any present, pension, office or emolument, of any kind whatsoever, from any emperor, king, prince or foreign power, such person shall cease to be a citizen of the United States, and shall be incapable of holding any office of trust or profit under them, or either of them." But we all know that this is not a part of the constitution, that it has not been ratified by a sufficient number of states to make it so. And I see that in the copies of the constitution printed under the superintendence of our secretary, and furnished to the members of the senate, it has been, very properly, wholly omitted. Now suppose that any man should receive and retain a present from a foreign potentate: suppose, for example, my honorable colleague, (there is no want of courtesy in making the supposition, since no one can believe the case possible in fact) had, during his embassy to France, received a present from Louis Philippe, and retained it for his own use, and his citizenship and capacity for public office should be drawn in question, and impugned on that ground, and the fact should be proved by incontestable evidence, I ask him to tell me what ought to be thought of the judges who should take and apply to his case that 13th amendment of the constitution, printed in Bioren's edition of the laws, published by authority, and deny him all recourse to the evidence which the journals of the state legislatures would afford, that this provision is not a part of the constitution?

At the last session of congress, there was a bill that passed one house, but was not, in fact, passed by the other; yet through inadvertence, it was enrolled, signed by the president of the senate and by the speaker of the other house, and actually approved and signed by the president. The mistake (as I understand) was discovered before the acts of the session were printed and published. But suppose the discovery had not been so timely made, and the act had been printed and published by authority; this, surely, would not have been of force to make that a law which had received the assent of only one branch of the legislature. But the truth could nowise be ascertained but by an examination of the journal. It may be said, indeed, that the truth would equally appear by an inspection of the printed copy as of the manuscript original. And this would be true enough, upon the supposition that the printed journal is an exact copy of the manuscript, and capable of being verified by a comparison with it; but if we shall assert and exercise a right to expunge any entry from our manuscript journal, and thereby to prevent the insertion of it in the printed copy, we shall take away all faith, all confidence, all certainty, from the printed journal; and if we shall establish the doctrine, that the original manuscript need not be preserved for a moment after the printing and publication of it, by what possible means shall the true history of our proceedings be ascertained? If the act I have mentioned, which, though passed by only one house, was enrolled and signed by the presiding officers of both houses, and approved by the president, should be adduced, with all these evidences of authority upon it, as the foundation of any right claimed under it, and it should be objected that the act never received the assent of the senate, the answer would be plausible, if not conclusive, that, for aught that appears, the senate may have expunged the entry of its assent to the act, after it had been perfected by the approbation of the president, and that the act must be regarded as a law. The answer certainly could not be refuted by an appeal to any authentic written evidence. I beseech gentlemen to reflect upon the possible consequences of this "avenging" process of expunging—what doubts it may bring upon the evidence of our proceedings—how it may impair the authority of our acts—how it may, perchance, have the effect of giving authority to acts as laws, which, in truth, have never been passed.

The original manuscript journal is the journal; that journal which the constitution commands us to keep. But gentlemen insist that the constitutional provision, that "each house shall keep a journal," imports only that they shall make one, without requiring that they shall preserve it.

This Anglo-Saxon word to keep is generally used in a strict literal sense, and then always imports to preserve, and nothing else or more. It is used in divers metaphorical senses, which, from frequency, have the appearance, at first view, of being literal; but it always imports the idea of preservation or indefinite continuation, intended, requested or commanded. It is never used as synonymous with making any thing. Every child of three years old knows, when his mother tells him to keep any thing, that she means he is to take care of it. The very instances stated by the gentleman from Missouri, to show that to keep does not mean to make, but to preserve or to continue indefinitely. Take a few of the least obvious of them for specimens: "To keep company," does not mean to make the company one keeps, but to frequent one or more persons, often and habitually, not to pay a single casual visit. "To keep a mill" means not to make the mill, or to make the grain to be ground, or to grind the grain, but to take care of the mill, attend to the working of it, preserve the corn for grinding, and, after it is ground, preserve the meal for use. "To keep a store" or "to keep a bar," most certainly does not mean to make the goods or the liquors, nor (as he supposes) simply to sell them; it means to take care of the goods for sale, sell them, and preserve the proceeds for further use.

But let us resort to better authority than either the gentleman or I can pretend to be. The English translation of the Bible is one of the best authorities we have in the language for the meaning, propriety and purity of words and phrases; it is "the well of English undefiled." This word keep is very often used in holy writ, and always imports the idea of careful preservation or endless indefinite continuation. "The Lord's portion is his people; Jacob is the lot of his inheritance. He found him in a desert land, and in the waste-howling wilderness; he led him about, he instructed him, he kept him as the apple of his eye." "Except the Lord keep the city, the watchman walketh about in vain." "Holy father, keep through thine own name those thou hast given me, that they may be one as we are. While I was with them in the world, I kept them in thy name. All thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost but the sons of perdition." "Hold fast the form of sound words which thou hast heard from me, in faith and love, which is in Jesus Christ. That good thing which was committed unto thee, keep by the Holy Ghost." So, in the catechism of the Protestant Episcopal church, the child is taught, as part of his duty to his neighbor, "to keep his hands from picking and stealing, and his tongue from evil-speaking, lying and slandering." No one would be willing that his children should be taught that they are not bound to keep themselves steadily in the practice of honesty, truth and charity throughout their lives, and under all temptations; that they may cast them off whenever it may suit their convenience or gratify their passions. One more instance, taken from Locke: "If we would weigh and keep in our minds what we are considering, that would instruct when we should or should not branch into distinctions."²

Our business is to ascertain the meaning of the phrase used in the constitution, which expressly requires us to keep a journal of our proceedings. Gentlemen say this only requires us to make a journal, and to print and publish it, but not, after having made and published it, to preserve it also. To give even a plausible color to this construction, gentlemen should at least have shown that there can be no possible use in preserving the original manuscript journal after the publication of the printed copies. But this they have not attempted, nor (apparently) even thought of. I say that, to keep a journal means to make one, and to preserve the very journal made; and I have shown the reason, the use, the necessity for doing so.

For the meaning of the phrase, in common speech, we may safely confide in Johnson. "A journal is 'an account kept of daily transactions.'" And the example is extracted from Hayward on Edward VI—"Edward kept a most judicious journal of all the principal passages of the affairs of his estate." If that precocious prince only made, and took no care to preserve his journal, how came Hayward to know that he made one, and a most judicious one?

The technical parliamentary meaning of the phrase is ascertainable without difficulty and beyond all doubt. The kindred phrases—to keep the rolls, to keep the records, keeper of the rolls, keeper of the records—all imply the duty of most careful preservation. But I find a conclusive authority in a passage of the printed speech of the gentleman from Missouri himself. The clerk of the English house of commons was the keeper of the journal, and he took an oath to make true entries, remembrances and journals of the things done and passed in the house of commons. As far back as 1641, the clerk was moved against for suffering his journals, or papers committed to his trust, to be taken by members of the house from the table, and it was declared that the clerk, who was the sworn officer, and entrusted with the entries and the custody of the records of the house, ought not to suffer any journal or record to be taken from the table, or out of his custody; and if he shall hereafter do it, after this warning, that at his peril he shall do it." This account is truly taken from Hatsell; and it proves, clearly, that the duty of keeping the journal, imposed on the clerk, was the duty both of making up the journal, faithfully and truly, and of preserving the journal so made, carefully in his own custody. And Hatsell elsewhere informs us that in January, 1681, upon information given to the commons, "that the clerk of the lords' house permitted the original rolls of acts of parliament to be carried to the printer, and that they were ripped in pieces, and blotted and abused, and in danger of being eunzebled or altered, it was ordered that a message be sent to the lords to desire them to give orders that these rolls may be kept in the office, and not delivered to the printer, but that true copies, fairly written and examined and attested, may be delivered to him." I know not what has been the practice here, in this particular; but I hope our rolls are never sent to the printer. I presume our acts are printed from the engrossed bills, from which the enrolments have been previously made.

My honorable colleague says that the constitutional requisition to keep a journal of our proceedings is mere matter of inducement to the requisition immediately following in the same sentence, to publish the same from time to time; so that we are bound to keep, not only for the purpose of publishing, and, when we have published, our whole duty is fulfilled. Indeed! He finds two positive injunctions in the constitution respecting the same thing, and thinks he may absolve himself from the obligation of the first, by complying with the last! This is a novel specimen of that kind of ingenuity by which constitutions and laws have been made to mean any thing, every thing, nothing.

The verbal criticism into which I have entered may have appeared to some gentlemen trivial, and to many superfluous; but I hope it will be remembered that I have entered into it only for the purpose of exposing the fallacy of other verbal criticisms, by which the plain meaning of the plain words of the constitution has been obfuscated, and the duty it imposes sought to be avoided. If I have ascertained the true meaning of the constitutional provision, that "each house shall keep a journal of its proceedings;" if that requires us to make and preserve a journal—a fair and full, not a false journal, garbled, mutilated or defaced; and if the original manuscript be the journal, the question, one would think, is at an end. But no; precedents have been brought to bear upon the subject—forced, indeed, into the service—the authority of which, it is supposed, will outweigh the conclusions of reason.

The precedents of expunging entries from the journals of either house of the English parliament can, by no violence, be made applicable to the purpose. The journals of the two houses of parliament are kept in pursuance of a simple order of each house; and in the expunging of any entry from the journal of either, the house merely disregards its own order, which, as it was ordained by its own several authority, may, by its several authority, too, be suspended, avoided, or contravened, at its discretion. The duty of the two houses of congress to keep a journal of their proceedings, is imposed by the constitution; by the sovereign authority, whose commands neither branch of the legislature, nor the whole legislature, is competent to annul or dispense with. The rules, orders and usages, by which each house of the British parliament governs itself, are not law, in the absolute sense of the word, much less constitutional law. But the rules prescribed to the two houses of congress by the constitution are part of, (what Bacon justly and appropiately calls), the leges legum—the laws by which the legislature itself, and the laws it makes, are governed, controlled and limited. Mr. Jefferson says, in the preface to his manual, that "the law of proceedings in the senate is composed of the precepts of the constitution, the regulations of the senate, and, where these are silent, of the rules of parliament;" and this is as a warrant for appealing to parliamentary precedents, on a point where the constitution is not silent! where its precept is express, plain and positive!

It is true that, in the theory and practice of the British government, the parliament is omnipotent; the constitution itself may be changed by the act of the three estates king, lords and commons concurring. And gentlemen think they have found an act of parliament, whereby the house of commons is required to keep a journal of its proceedings; and thence they infer that the precedents of expunging entries from its journal by order of the house are an authority for us to expunge an entry from our journal. The statute they allude to is that of 6 Henry VIII, chapter 16, which recites that many members of the house of commons left their places before the end of the session, and that many great and weighty matters were usually enacted at the end of the session; and therefore enacts that "no member shall depart without license, to be entered of record in the book of the parliament, appointed, or to be appointed, for the commons' house," upon pain of forfeiting his wages, payable by his county, &c. Now, it is plain that it was only these leaves of absence that were required by the statute to be recorded in the journal; and the entries of them were in the nature of a record, (in the legal signification of the word), since they contained conclusive evidence of private right—the right, namely, of the member absent on leave, to his wages. I ask gentlemen whether do they really think that it would have been competent to the house of commons to have expunged from its journal the record of a leave of absence granted, which it was required by statute to enter, and, by so expunging, to have inflicted an ex post facto forfeiture of his wages on the member to whom the leave of absence had been given? These leaves of absence are the only proceedings ever required by any statute to be entered on the journal of the commons; and these obviously, they could not, without a plain violation of right, have expunged from the journal. That the requisition of the statute was confined to that particular proceeding—that the commons themselves did not regard it as requiring them to keep a general journal of its proceedings—is absolutely certain. For Hume says, it was not till the reign of James I, namely, in July, 1607, that an order was entered by the commons, for the first time, for the regular keeping of their journals; and we learn from Hatsell, that this order was repealed in May, 1621, by a resolution of the commons, that "all their proceedings should be entered there, and kept as records;" that is, (as I understand it), not that all their proceedings were matters of record, in the legal meaning of the phrase, but only that their journals should be kept in the way records are kept.

Not to pass over without notice other authorities referred to by gentlemen, to show that the duty of the two houses of the British parliament to keep journals of their proceedings rests on a like foundation with our duty to keep a journal of our proceedings, I have to tell the senate that the passage in Hatsell referred to by my honorable colleague (3 Hats. 28, 29) only states that, in March, 1606, the commons insisted that their house was a court, while, at the same time, they have always denied that their journals were public records. The lords denied that the commons were a court. The commons referred to the statute of 6 Henry VIII, ch. 16, requiring leaves of absence to be entered of record in their journal, by way of argument to support their claim; but the point was left, and yet remains, undecided. Hatsell further informs us that the great lawyers of those times entertained different opinions on the question; that Coke earnestly maintained that the commons were a court of record. But it appears from 4 Inst. 23, 24, referred to by the gentleman from Missouri, that Coke only held that the commons are a court of record in cases where they act judicially.

And now, sir, I repeat, with perfect confidence, that, as the keeping of the journals of the two houses of the British parliament is required only by the orders of each house, made by itself, and for itself, severally, no precedents of either house, dispensing with or contravening its own orders, by expunging any part of its journal, can be any authority or any apology to us, who are commanded by the constitution to keep a journal of our proceedings, for expunging any part of our journal. The same reasoning applies with equal force to avoid the authority of any precedent of expunction ordered by any colonial or state legislature in our own country, before or since the revolution, whose journals have been kept in virtue of its own orders, and not in pursuance of any constitutional provision.

But the precedents of expunging in the British parliament, that have been brought to the notice of the senate by my colleague, are so pregnant with instruction on other topics of this debate, that they cannot be passed over without particular consideration. Really, sir, one that did not know better, might have been apt to imagine that they were collected and referred to for the purpose of confuting some of the leading arguments of the gentleman from Missouri, for they are more apposite to that purpose than to any other.

The first instance he mentioned was that which occurred in the memorable proceedings of parliament in the case of ship-money, during the reign of Charles I. The account he gave of the transaction was so different from my recollection of it, that it surprised me not a little. He supposed that the judgment in the exchequer against Mr. Hampden for the twenty shillings of ship-money assessed upon him, was cancelled by an order of the house of commons, (in which he was probably misled by the concise account of the proceeding given by Hume, who had no purpose, and no reason, to enter into details), and here presented it as an instance in which the process of cancellation or expunction was applied even to a judicial record. The fullest and most authoritative account of the transaction, that I know of, is to be found in the 3d volume of the state trials; and the story is this: on the 7th December, 1640, the commons voted that the levying of ship-money by the crown, the extra-judicial opinions of the judges sustaining the king's prerogative in that respect, delivered in the star chamber, and enrolled in the courts of Westminster, the warrants for levying ship-money, called ship writs, and the judgment in the exchequer against Mr. Hampden, were all contrary to the laws of the realm, the rights of property, the liberty of the subject, former resolutions of parliament, and the petition of right. And they afterwards delivered these votes to the lords at a conference of the two houses; and, at the same time, they gave in articles of impeachment against sir Robert Berkley, one of the judges of the king's bench in which they accused him (among other things) of delivering an extra-judicial opinion in the star chamber, affirming the prerogative of the crown to levy ship-money, and concurring in the judgment of the exchequer against Mr. Hampden, (setting out the opinions and judgment at length); "all which words," (they charged), "opinions and actions, were so spoken and done by him, traitorously and wickedly, to alienate the hearts of his majesty's liege people from his majesty, and to subvert the fundamental laws and established government of his majesty's realm of England." After the conference, and while the articles of impeachment were pending against sir Robert Berkley, and while, too, it was well known that all the other judges who had concurred with him in opinion on the question of ship-money were liable to impeachment on the same grounds, the house of lords, on the 20th of January, 1640, old style, resolved nem. con. that the ship writs, the extra-judicial opinions of the judges therein, and the judgment against Mr. Hampden, were contrary to the laws and statutes of the realm, the rights and properties of the subject, former judgments in parliament, and the petition of right: that is, the lords, though they were to sit in judgment upon the articles of impeachment against the judges who had affirmed the prerogative of the crown to levy ship-money, condemned the act of the judges as strongly as the commons, who had impeached one judge, and might, and probably would, impeach the others. On the 20th February following, the house of lords ordered that all the rolls containing the opinions of the judges, the judgment against Mr. Hampden, and the records of the proceedings, should be brought into the house; that vacats thereof should be entered "by the judgment of the lords, spiritual and temporal, in the court of parliament;" and that the rolls should "be ras'd cross with a pen and subscribed with the clerk of parliament's hand." And this was accordingly done.

Let me pause here, and ask my honorable colleague whether he thinks this proceeding a precedent that we may safely follow throughout? Whether, if the supreme court should give a judgment ever so plainly illegal and unconstitutional, we could in like manner vacate and cancel it?

[Mr. Rices explained. He was understood to say that he was not uninformed of the particulars of the proceedings in parliament on the case of ship-money, as they had been stated by Mr. L. and that he had not referred to them as a precedent for cancelling or expunging a judicial record, but simply as an instance in which cancellation had been resorted to for the purpose of vindicating and maintaining the principles of civil liberty.]

I understood my colleague to refer to these proceedings as a precedent of expunging which might serve as an authority for our expunging—then to cite his other English precedents for the like purpose—and, after stating them as precedents in point, to recommend them as good guides for us, by displaying the benefits to civil liberty which the process of expunging had been employed to accomplish. But he knows his own purpose best, and I cheerfully take his explanation.

And now, let me tell my colleague that this proceeding of the house of lords is not to be regarded as a case of cancellation by mere authority of that house. It will be observed that the vacats and cancellations were ordered "by judgment of the lords, spiritual and temporal, in the court of parliament." They professed to act judicially; and, in doing so, they assumed jurisdiction to vacate and cancel a judgment which had not been brought before them by appeal. They had claimed a like jurisdiction before; but, as they well knew, it had been disputed and denied. Therefore, they ordered a bill to be prepared, to confirm their vacats and cancellations; which bill was passed; and it is upon the strength of this act of parliament that the legality of the cancellation rests.

But the principal purpose, for which I have called the particular attention of the senate to these proceedings in the case of ship-money, is to show that the house of lords, the high court of impeachment, while an impeachment against one judge, for illegal, unconstitutional and extra-judicial opinions and judgments, was actually pending before them, and impeachments against other judges on the like grounds might probably be expected, did not regard it as at all incompatible with their judicial character to declare, by unanimous resolutions, that the acts of the judges were illegal and unconstitutional: they did not suppose that they were prejudging the person accused, much more those who might be accused; they understood that the guilt of the judges did not depend on the illegality of their opinions and judgments, but upon the wilful criminal intent imputed to them. Now, the main argument of the gentleman from Missouri, to show the incompetency of the senate to entertain the resolution of March, 1834—to show that "expunging is the word," because it alone can condemn our proceedings as having begun in wrong—is, that the resolution was an impeachment, trial and pre-judication of the president on a criminal charge, though the resolution alleged no criminal intent; though no man imagined the possibility of an impeachment against the president, for the acts which the resolution declared illegal and unconstitutional; and though it is perfectly obvious that the illegality imputed to the president's conduct might be owing to error of judgment, without the least intentional wrong. And thus this precedent, which my colleague has brought with commendation to our notice, serves to confute the argument of his friend from Missouri; and it serves no other purpose.

The case of Skinner against the East India company, which was the next precedent referred to by my colleague, (as an instance of expunging even a judicial decision), has been considered important in England, only because it resulted in an informal but effectual settlement of a disputed point of the jurisdiction of the house of lords as a court of civil judicature. Skinner had gone to the East Indies upon a mercantile adventure, but he purchased an island, and endeavored to establish himself upon it as his own domain. The East India company thought this an invasion of their rights, and they took away his goods, and drove him from his island. Skinner preferred his petition to king Charles II, for redress. The king referred the case first to two members of his council, and, after a long delay, sent it to the house of lords, that it might administer justice. The lords assumed original cognizance of the case, cited the East India company to answer Skinner's petition, overruled a plea put in by the company to the jurisdiction, and finally gave judgment for Skinner for £5,000. Meanwhile, the company presented a memorial to the house of commons, complaining of the proceedings of the lords, as an unwarrantable assumption of original jurisdiction in a civil cause, which deprived the company of its right to a trial according to the due course of law. The commons remonstrated against the jurisdiction claimed by the lords, as unjust, oppressive, illegal and against common right; and the lords, on their part, remonstrated against the conduct of the commons, in receiving a libellous complaint against them and their proceeding. A long and angry controversy ensued between the two houses. The commons resolutely forbore to act on the bills of supply to the government. The king, hoping to put an end to the quarrel, in December, 1669, prorogued the parliament to the February following. But, when parliament met again, the commons renewed the quarrel with increased warmth. The king, finding that he was to get no supply (which was all he cared about) till the controversy between the two houses should be terminated, made a speech to them, in which he proposed and recommended that each should expunge from its journals every entry relating to the subject, so that no memorial should be preserved of the proceedings of the lords against the East India company, or of the controversy between the two houses that grew out of it. Both houses saw the wisdom and even the necessity of compliance. The lords expunged all, without exception; the commons entered the king's speech on their journal, and expunged all the rest. The house of lords have never since attempted to exercise original jurisdiction in any civil cause. Now, in fact, there was an expunging of entries from the journals by the concurrent act of the three estates, kings, lords and commons, though it was not effected by a formal act of parliament; and whoever will attentively examine the history of the transaction, (as it is reported in the sixth volume of the state trials), will see that there was no other way in which the object could have been accomplished; for had a bill been introduced for the purpose, that would have engendered a dispute concerning other kindred points of jurisdiction claimed by the lords, and the quarrel between the two houses would have been renewed.

But this case serves to show how and why the process of expunction was originally introduced, and its meaning, purpose and effect. It began at that time when the two houses of parliament were not in the habit of printing and publishing their journals promptly after each session, and when, of course, the expunging of an entry from the journal had the effect of preventing the entry from appearing on the journal at all when it should be printed and published. They expunged in the sense in which Swift speaks of the "expungings made by great authors in those treatises they prepare for publication." They did the very reverse of that which it is proposed we shall now do. It will be found by an examination of the printed journals of parliament for the time (they are in our library) that no trace of the proceedings in or concerning this case of Skinner against the East India company is to be found in them. The same remarks are probably applicable to the expunging of the protest of the tory lords in 1690, which was the next precedent referred to by my colleague.

In the first parliament regularly called, after the expulsion of James II, and the accession of William and Mary to the throne, a bill was introduced in the house of lords for recognising the title of the king and queen to the crown, in which a clause was inserted, declaring that the acts passed by the convention parliament "were, and are, laws." The tory lords, in the progress of the bill, succeeded, by a small majority, in having this clause struck out; and the whig lords protested. In the sequel, the clause was reinstated in the bill by a majority of six votes; and the tory lords, in their turn, entered a protest, the terms of which indicated disrespect towards the majority, but the principal objection to it was, that it, in effect, denied the legal authority of the convention parliament, and so impugned the fundamental principles of the settlement that had been so happily accomplished by the revolution. The whig lords immediately ordered this protest to be expunged from the journal. I pray the attentive consideration of the senate to the circumstances of this transaction. The tory lords (as my colleague truly observed) had an undoubted acknowledged right to enter a protest upon the journal, expressing their dissent from the opinion of the majority, and their reasons for it: the majority, notwithstanding, expunged the protest; and this proceeding is quoted with approbation, and held up to us as an example and authority. The president of the U. States, who has no manner of right to judge of our rights and privileges, of which the constitution makes us the sole judges—who has no color of right to protest against any of our proceedings, sent us a protest in against our resolution of the 28th March, 1834, and the loudest complaints are made against us for refusing to consent to this irregular, unauthorised interference with our proceedings, and for declining to receive the protest, and enter it on our journal! It is said the president's protest was respectful and temperate. That is matter of taste; but, granting that that is the true character of the protest, the senate would still, in my opinion, have been wanting in a just sense of self-respect, careless of its own privileges, wholly unmindful of the place which the constitution has assigned to it in the system, if it had received such a paper, and entered it on its journal, and thereby set a precedent of acquiescence in the pretension of the executive to reconstitute against its proceedings.

As to the famous case of the Middlesex election, it is true that the resolutions of the house of commons, in 1769, declaring that Mr. Wilkes, having been expelled from the house, was incapable of being elected to the same parliament, and that Mr. Luttrell, who had received a comparatively small number of votes, was duly elected, was expunged from the journal in 1782. Mr. Fox, who had earnestly supported the resolutions of 1769, made indeed a faint opposition to the expunging of them—so faint, that he may be regarded as having acquiesced in it, and in effect giving his consent to it, especially, as he held a position in the house which would have enabled him to prevent the expunging, if he had had any care to do so. The precedent would have been in point to the present purpose of gentlemen, but for this little circumstance—that the house of commons is not, as the senate of the United States is, bound by a constitutional provision, to keep a journal of its proceedings.

There is another case of expunging by the house of commons, worthy of particular attention, since we happen to have lord Chatham's opinion upon it. In 1770, the commons, considering the publication of accounts of their proceedings and debates a violation of their privileges, issued warrants for the apprehension of the offending printers. Some submitted, some evaded the process. One was arrested and carried before alderman Wilkes, who discharged the printer, and bound him to prosecute the person who apprehended him for an assault and false imprisonment. Another printer, being arrested by a messenger of the house of commons, sent for a constable, and delivered the messenger into his custody; and both parties were carried before the lord mayor of London; the printer, I suppose, in the custody of the messenger, and the messenger in the custody of the constable. The lord mayor held the arrest of the printer, under the warrant of the house, illegal, and discharged him, and committed the messenger for illegal arrest and imprisonment, till he entered into a recognizance to appear and answer an indictment for the offence. This recognizance was entered in the book kept for the purpose; and as it was, in case of forfeiture, to be the foundation of a judicial proceeding, it was of the nature of a judicial record. The commons, angry at this resistance of its authority, brought the lord mayor to their bar, and thought proper to wreak their vengeance upon the recognizance he had exacted of their messenger, by expunging it from the book in which it was written. Now, it happened that, not long after the proceedings against the printers, a motion was made in the house of lords to expunge from its journal a resolution it had adopted, disclaiming all right to express any opinion on the proceedings of the commons in the case of the Middlesex election; and this proposition to expunge the resolution of the lords from the journal was earnestly supported by lord Chatham in debate. But in a speech he made about the same time, on a motion for an address to the king to dissolve the parliament, speaking of the misdeeds of the house of commons, he referred to their expunging of the recognizance, (which he justly regarded as a judicial record), and said that it was the act of a mob, not of a parliament. In his opinion, then, the lords might expunge a resolution previously adopted, from their own journal, which was kept only under authority of their own order; but when the commons expunged a judicial record, which the law requires those entrusted with its custody to keep, he denounced it as the act of a mob. In what words would that great and virtuous statesman have described such an act as that now proposed to the senate—the defacement of an entry from the journal of the proceedings of a legislative body, which the constitution of the country, superior to the law, expressly enjoined it to keep!

With respect to the case of expunction by the legislature of Massachusetts, I have only to say that the journals of that body are only required to be kept by its own rules or usages, not by any constitutional provision. I am surprised that the proceeding in the senate of Tennessee should have been referred to at all. That body, sitting as a court of impeachment, were told, entered judgment of acquittal one day, and the next day, the court, being not yet dissolved, expunged the entry. The case is precisely the same, as if a jury bringing in a verdict are sent back to reconsider it, and upon reconsideration return a contrary verdict. Do not gentlemen know that the judgments of every court of justice are in its own breast during the whole term at which they are pronounced, and that that is the reason why the court is competent to alter, set aside, or cancel them at any time during the same term?

My colleague tells us that the house of burgesses of Virginia expunged the last, and far the most important, of Mr. Henry's celebrated resolutions in 1765, and that the worthiest of our patriots concurred in the act. If that resolution was expunged, the precedent would be nothing to the purpose; because we know there was no constitutional provision requiring the colonial legislature to keep journals of its proceedings. But though the fact is stated on the highest authority, I acknowledge, yet I cannot help thinking there may be some mistake about it. There is evidence under Mr. Henry's own hand, that he was not aware that the resolution was expunged; and if it was expunged, all accounts agree that it was done in his absence. It is upon the strength of that very resolution that we have claimed for him the honor of having been the first to set the ball of the revolution in motion. If the resolution was expunged, the house of burgesses threw away the palm of glory which Mr. Henry might have won, and we of Virginia must concede it to James Otis and Massachusetts. It has hitherto been a subject of honorable contention between us.

My colleague, with a view to recommend the expunging process to especial favor, took the pains to explain to us, that, in every instance which has been resorted to in the English parliament, the purpose and the effect have been to vindicate some important principle of civil liberty. The warmth of his zeal prevented him from perceiving the contrast which the story of the proceeding we are engaged in will present to the world and to posterity. It is as striking as it is melancholy.

Thus, in the famous case of ship-money, the house of lords vacated and cancelled the opinions of the judges, and the judgment against Mr. Hampden, in order to condemn, and abrogate forever, a dangerous prerogative, claimed by the crown upon the strength of old precedents, to raise revenue for itself, without consent or authority of parliament; but the purpose of the proposition to expunge our resolution of March, 1834, from our journal, is, and its effect will be, to affirm and establish the executive prerogative claimed by the president, to exercise a complete control over the custody of the public treasure, and to give the use and profit of it, in the interval between the collection and disbursement, to persons of his own selection. We have seen, too, that the house of lords, in the course of the ship-money transaction, passed a resolution, condemning in the strongest terms, the conduct of impeachable officers as illegal and unconstitutional—though an impeachment against one of them was actually pending, and impeachments against others, on the same grounds, were anticipated, which impeachments that house was the tribunal to try and determine, without incurring the blame of prejudging the cause of him who was accused, and of all that might be accused, of participation in the act declared illegal. But it is one of the main objects intended to be accomplished by expunging our resolution, to establish the doctrine, that the judicial powers vested in the senate by the constitution, instead of being an addition to, operate as a limitation upon, its legislative powers; and that the senate cannot express an opinion against the legality of the measures of the president, or, by consequence, of any other impeachable officer, without exposing itself to the reproach of impeaching, trying and condemning, without hearing, the officer who may, by possibility, be impeached.

The expunging of the proceedings and judgment of the house of lords, in the case of Skinner against the East India company my colleague says, and says justly, was intended (and, in fact, accomplished the object) to vindicate the common right of the subject to trial by jury in due course of law. And he counsels us to expunge our resolution, for the purpose of acknowledging and confirming the power of the president, without judge or jury, to take away the public deposits from the bank of the United States, which the bank claimed by virtue of a contract, upon a charge alleged by himself of criminal conduct in the bank, which the president himself declared afforded just ground for a judicial proceeding against it, to revoke its charter.

The expunging of the protest of the tory lords in 1690 was designed to vindicate the principles of the glorious revolution of 1688, which finally established and confined to the people of England the blessings of civil liberty—the security of a government of laws, as distinguished from a government of will; and pursuing that end, the whig lords expunged a protest which impugned the principles of the revolution, though the protesters had an undoubted right to enter their protest. The senate of the United States is now to be condemned for refusing to receive, and insert in its journal, a protest of the president against its proceedings, who had no color of right to make any such protest; and the justice of the president's protest is to be acknowledged, by expunging from our journal the entry of the proceeding against which he protested.

The house of commons expunged its resolution in the case of the Middlesex election, and thereby acknowledged the eligibility of all persons, not under some known legal incapacity, to a place in that house, and (what was infinitely more important) the right of the people to be represented by the man of their own choice. Our expungers have never thought of expunging the proceedings on the subject of the sedition law—a statute which invaded the constitutional rights of the people, which, in the almost unanimous opinion of the nation, uniformly maintained for thirty-five years, was plainly unconstitutional, and which, therefore, had its beginning in wrong. They only have recourse to the process of expunction, in order to vindicate and confirm executive power.

I cannot, for my part, look at this contrast, without mortification and alarm. The parliament of England, professing monarchical principles, have exercised the power of expunging obnoxious proceedings, in order to establish principles in their nature truly republican. American senators, professing (sincerely, I do not doubt), democratic republican principles, flushed with recent victory over their opponents, are endeavoring to apply this same process of expunction, in order to establish a power in the executive, which appears to my anxious mind monarchical prerogative. I do not impute the design to them, I do not, I cannot, suspect them of any such purpose. I am speaking only of the tendency and effect of the principles they are maintaining.

[Here Mr. Leigh gave way for a motion to adjourn.]

Tuesday April 5.

Mr. Leigh resumed the debate. He said the principal purpose of the remarks he had addressed to the senate yesterday, was to show that the original manuscript journal of our proceedings was the journal which the constitution required us to keep; that the requisition to keep the journal imposed on us the duty to preserve it—to preserve it permanently and carefully, without defacement or mutilation; that no authority for expunging any entry from our journal could be found in English parliamentary precedents, or in those of any legislative body in America, whose duty to keep a journal was not imposed by a constitutional provision; and that, consequently, the senate could not expunge the resolution of March, 1834, from the journal, in the literal sense of expunging, without a violation of the constitution. He had taken the more pains to establish this conclusion on grounds of irrefragable reason, because in his opinion, it involved the whole question. It seemed to him, indeed, that the gentleman from Missouri and his colleague, both, thought so, too; for they had exerted their faculties to the utmost to prove the right of the senate to expunge, literally and absolutely, as an essential ground of the argument for expunging, in the typical manner proposed. And he supposed it would be very hard for any man who sincerely thought that the constitution forbade us to expunge literally, to reconcile it to reason or conscience to expunge typically.

For, (said Mr. Leigh), granting it to be true that those who have a right to expunge and annihilate any written instrument or evidence may do any thing short of actual expunction and destruction, which shall indicate the intent to expunge and destroy; those who have no right to expunge and annihilate the evidence of any particular transaction have no right to declare their will to expunge and destroy it, in any form of words or action whatever, and to substitute such manifestation of their will in place of the act to which they are incompetent. To illustrate this: A testator has a right to cancel or destroy his own will; and if he run a single stroke of his pen across it, with intent to cancel it, or write "cancelled" in the margin, without actually cancelling it—or, if he tear it, with intent to destroy, without actually destroying it, no doubt, such an indication of his purpose is proper enough, and may stand for the act he might rightfully perform. But no one can cancel or destroy his own deed; and, therefore, if he happen to get into his possession, he has no right to avoid the guilt, and yet accomplish the purpose of destroying it, by any manner of defacement his ingenuity can devise. In sound morality, men may make an indication of their will stand for their act, if they have a right to do the act; but if the act be criminal or vicious, even the will to do it, without a single step towards the accomplishment of it, is not blameless. In the present case, sir, so entirely does the right to expunge the resolution in question from the journal, in the emblematical manner proposed, depend on the right to expunge it actually and literally, that if we shall adopt this notable device for expunging it, this may and will be regarded as a precedent, in all future times, to justify an actual obliteration, mutilation, erasure, or other destruction of the journal, as to any obnoxious proceeding.

There is another objection to this scheme of typical expunction, which weighs much on my mind. I hold it the duty of every man to speak the simple truth on every occasion, without mental reservation or equivocation; and especially is this the duty of men acting or speaking in public stations, under the sanction of an official oath. Now, what is it that is proposed to us? Why, that we shall pass a resolution to expunge an entry from our original manuscript journal, by drawing black lines around it, and writing "expunged by order of the senate" across it; and in order to obviate a constitutional objection to any defacement of our journal, this is explained in argument to be no expunging at all, because it will leave the whole entry still perfectly legible; and more, that it will not be an expunction of the journal, for the original manuscript is not the journal. I mean no offence to any body, but I must say that, to my heart and understanding, this is exactly what is called an equivocation. I have taken into my head, during the present session of congress, to read Paschal's Provincial letters, which I had not read before for thirty years; and whoever will take the trouble to look at the ninth letter, will find this doctrine of equivocations, as laid down by Filiutius and Sanchez, and the convenient uses to which it is applicable, fully explained.

But, sir, I presume it will not be affirmed by any gentleman that it is within the competency of the senate, at this session, to exhaust the whole power of the senate in all times to come, over this or any other subject; and yet the act which we are urged to commit, will, in reality, have the effect of preventing the counter-action of any future senate. Supposing we were literally to expunge the resolution of March, 1834, from the journal—to blot it out: how shall the senate at a future session, entertaining a different opinion of the merits of the resolution, expunge the expunction? How shall it blot out the blots? Shall it erase them, and reinstate the words of the resolution? Then another obliteration at a subsequent session would effectually prevent the possibility of ever afterwards replacing them on the journal, let the paper on which it is written be never so substantial. Suppose the typical process of expunging the entry shall be adopted and carried into execution: a succeeding senate, entertaining different opinions, and following our example as to the manner of manifesting and enforcing them must draw black lines around our black lines, and write a sentence of expunction across our sentence of expunction; and if the party character of the senate shall afterwards again undergo a change, before the present party heats shall subside, the process may be reiterated. This would be farcical, to be sure, but public bodies, acting under the influence of strong party feelings, are often unmindful of their true dignity, and sometimes sacrificing it to the indulgence of their resentments, incur the contempt and scorn they would bring upon others. I wish from my heart that the proceeding was only ludicrous. I hope and trust, most sincerely, that the example of this "avenging" process may never be followed; but I am most serious when I tell gentlemen that they are proposing to do what they have not the moral or legal power to do; they are vainly attempting to anticipate and prevent the judgment and action of their successors in all times to come, and to pass and execute final and irrevocable sentence of condemnation on the senate of 1833-'4.

I cannot be so wanting in respect to the gentlemen who have so gravely and so earnestly recommended this typical expunging (which they tell us, is really no expunction) of our resolution of March, 1834, from the original manuscript journal, (which, however, they say is not the journal of the senate), as to suppose that they have taken so much pains to accomplish an act which, in their own opinion, will be in itself absolutely vain and nugatory. And, therefore, I take it for granted that they intend, in the proceeding they propose—while they leave the verbal record of our resolution on the journal substantially unimpaired—to annihilate its efficiency; and this in truth, upon the supposition that it is within our competency so to expunge the resolution, must be the legal effect of such an expunction. Now let it be remembered that the duty enjoined upon the senate by the constitution, to keep a journal of its proceedings, is equally applicable to all its proceedings, legislative, executive and judicial; that if we are not bound to make and preserve a journal, fair and unimpaired, of our legislative transactions, so neither are we bound to keep the journals of our executive or judicial proceedings; that we have the same duty to perform, and have as large discretionary powers, in respect of one as of the others; that, if we may expunge any one entry from the legislative journal, and thereby invalidate the act it records, we may expunge and invalidate any other; that, exactly in the same manner and with the same effect that we may expunge and invalidate an entry on our legislative journal, we have a right to expunge and annihilate the legal efficacy of any entry on our executive or judicial journal. And then I ask gentlemen to give their serious and calm consideration to the consequences.

If the senate may expunge, and by expunging (in any form or manner) invalidate the resolution in question, there is no good reason why it may not, in like manner, expunge and invalidate any entry of any other of its proceedings in its legislative capacity. Suppose, among the numerous private acts passed at the session of 1833-'4, there was one granting land, money, or any other property to an individual, which, in the opinion of the senate at the present session, was corruptly passed by the majority of the senate at that session, (as a reward, for example, for partisan services,) and so had its beginning in wrong; or, suppose there was any act passed at that session, which the senate at this time shall deem unconstitutional, and for that reason impugn as having commenced in wrong, as gentlemen would have us impugn the resolution of March, 1834, it is just as much within the competency of the senate now to order all its proceedings manifesting its assent to such acts to be expunged from the journal, as it is to expunge this resolution. He that shall hold that such acts would cease to be valid as laws, in consequence of the expunging from the journal of the evidence of their having been passed by the senate, must admit the competency of the senate alone, by the application of this expunging process, to invalidate, in effect, an act of the whole legislature; and he that shall hold the laws valid, notwithstanding the expunging of the proceedings of the senate upon them, must admit that the act of expunging is a mere nullity; in other words, that the senate has no right to expunge. Then, with respect to our executive journal, (which it is not our course to publish so promptly as our legislative journal,) what would be the condition of a person nominated by the president to an office, and the nomination confirmed by the senate, but the act of confirmation afterwards expunged by order of the senate? Would he be an officer or not? If not, no man can feel perfectly safe in exercising the functions of any office depending on the appointment of the president, by and with the consent and advice of the senate; or, the senate may, without the concurrence of the president, remove the officer, expunge him from office. If, on the contrary, in spite of our expunging the confirmation of his appointment from our journal, he would still be entitled to his office, then our act of expunging the entry of confirmation is unauthorised and void. But the consequences are yet more glaring and enormous when we come to consider the possible application of this expunging process to the journal of our judicial proceedings. A man is impeached before the senate of high crimes and misdemeanors, tried and convicted, and sentence of incapacitation for public office solemnly pronounced upon him; the court is dissolved; the senate, afterwards, becoming convinced of the injustice of the judgment and sentence, order the entry of them to be expunged from the journal. If the senate is really competent to invalidate the judgment by expunging it, his sentence is in effect reversed, and his incapacity removed; and, at any rate, if he shall be elected a member of the senate while the expunging senate is in power, he will be permitted to take his seat there. But suppose the accused acquitted, and the senate, at a future day, honestly imputing the acquittal to partiality or corruption in the senate that tried his cause, should order the judgment of acquittal to be expunged from the journal, and then a new prosecution should be commenced against him on the same charges, how could he have the benefit of that inestimable principle of justice so dear to the people of this land, that no man shall be twice brought in jeopardy for the same offence? how could he plead his former acquittal, and show the record of the fact? If the judgment should have been literally expunged from the journal, it would be impossible for him to make good his defence. And if it should have been typically expunged, and the record should be produced, with black lines drawn around it ("black"), as the gentleman from Missouri says, "black as the injustice," and with the "avenging" sentence of expunction written across it, his doom, I apprehend, would be equally certain if it should be his hard fate to be arraigned before the same senate that had thus expunged the former judgment of acquittal. Again I implore gentlemen to forbear. I pray God to put it in their hearts to pause, to reflect upon the consequences involved in the principle they are maintaining, and to spare our country the establishment of a precedent that may be bealleged hereafter as an example and authority for wrongs like these.

But to all appeals, and all arguments, of this kind, my colleague has one general, compendious, all-sufficing answer: that it is not fair to argue, from the possible abuses of a power, against the existence of the power. Did he not perceive that that remark, as he applies it, would equally serve as an answer to all objections to an assumption of any power whatever, which should be dangerous in itself, as well as unconstitutional? Or, does he think that an unconstitutional power is less liable to abuse than a constitutional one? Sir, the argument I am urging against the proposition he has maintained is, that it involves other principles plainly unconstitutional; and I show the application of which it is susceptible, to other uses of the same kind, in order to expose the inherent vice of the proposition itself. I have not been arguing from the abuses of this expunging process, but from the uses which the principle, if constitutional and just, would as well justify as the use to which it is now proposed to apply it. And no one, I should think, ought to be more sensible than my honorable colleague, of the extent to which the authority of precedents may be strained; for he has given us a notable example of it himself, in the application he has made to his present purpose, of the two instances of expunging that have been found in the proceedings of the senate.

As to one of them, I have only to state it. Mr. Randolph, having received information of the death of Mr. Pinckney, announced it as a fact to the senate; and the senate, to testify its respect for the memory of a man who had once been so distinguished a member of its own body, immediately adjourned—expressing of course, the reason of the adjournment, which was entered by the secretary on his minutes. It turned out, however, that Mr. Pinckney was not yet dead; and, the next morning, when the journal was read, according to rule, "to the end that any mistake might be corrected that had been made in the entries," the senate ordered the entry stating the fact of Mr. Pinckney's death to be expunged from the journal. This was not, indeed, as my colleague says, a correction of a mistake of the secretary in making the entry; but it was a correction of a mistake, in point of fact, into which Mr. Randolph had fallen, and had misled the senate. Whether the correction was strictly within the rule of the senate as to correcting mistaken entries in its journal no one thought of inquiring at the time, and I shall not now stop to inquire: the correction was intended to be made in conformity with that rule of the senate, for making up the journal, which the constitution requires the senate to keep.

The other instance of expunging by the senate is hardly more important in itself, but it calls for a more particular consideration. On the 21st April, 1836, being the very last day of the session, it appears, by the rough minutes taken at the table, that Mr. Adams presented two petitions of S. G. Ogden and W. Smith, and the first entry on the minutes in respect to them is, "read, and to be"; then, "motions be rejected"; then the words "be rejected" struck out with a pen, and, instead of them, "leave to withdraw" inserted. After this, there is an entry more in detail—that Mr. Adams communicated two memorials from S. G. Ogden and W. S. Smith, stating that they were under a criminal prosecution for certain proceedings, into which they were led by the circumstance that their purpose was fully known to and approved by the executive government of the United States." (the prosecution, we know, was for the part the memorialists had taken in Mina's expedition), complaining of such maltreatment by the district judge of the United States at New York that the grand jury had made a presentment against the judge for it, and praying relief from congress; and then the entry is, "on motion ordered, that the memorialists have leave to withdraw their memorials respectively." Finally, the last minute of the proceedings of this last day of the session was, "on motion that every thing in the journal relative to the memorials of S. G. Ogden and W. S. Smith be expunged therefrom, it passed in the affirmative, by yeas and nays, 13 to 8." The adjourning order follows immediately. It has been said that all the republicans voted for and the federalists against the motion—how that is, I do not know. Now, the first remark that occurs is, that this is manifestly an expunction from the minutes, not from the journal; an order that, in making up the journal, those entries on the minutes should not be inserted. The next consideration is, that the reasons of the expunging nowise appear; they are not stated in the proceeding itself, and I understand, no notice of the transaction is to be found in the newspapers of the day. For aught that appears, the previous entries might have been expunged, because they did not truly state the fact when they represented that the memorials had been received, and leave given to withdraw them; and I have no doubt those entries did not truly state the real opinion of the senate on the subject at the time the memorials were first presented. We all know how such things are done, especially during the hurry of a last day's session. The gentleman from Missouri thinks that the reason of expunging the entries concerning those memorials was, that they contained disrespectful imputations upon the chief magistrate and a judicial officer; in which his conjecture may be right, and I think it probable enough that it is. But, thirdly, the least attention to the circumstances of the transaction will suffice to convince every mind that hardly any thought was bestowed upon the expunging, as very little could have been given to the proceeding ordered to be expunged; that both probably passed sub silentio; that the constitutional question as to the right of the senate to expunge any proceeding from its journal was not suggested, much more discussed. And is such a precedent of expunging as this—an expunction made up by the senate to be kept, founded on what reasons, no one knows, and none ever inquired, done in haste, and amidst the confusion of the last moments of an expiring session—ordered without discussion, and probably without a question made as to the constitutional propriety of the proceeding, so passed as to attract no attention, to elicit no investigation—is such a precedent to be hegravelly much more triumphantly, quoted as an authority in this debate?

But suppose that vote of April, 1836, was (what it certainly was not) a deliberate expression of the opinion of the senate on the very point, that the senate may constitutionally exercise a discretion to expunge from its journal, at any time, the entry of any proceeding which it disapproves as irregular and unjust: it would only add another instance to the thousands with which all history abounds, of the truth of the common observation, that it is during the administration of the most popular chief magistrates that precedents dangerous to liberty are most to be apprehended, most to be deprecated, and most carefully to be avoided; not on account of any design on their part, or of vicious design in any quarter, but simply because confidence in them not only serves to give authority to their example, but disarms the public mind of that wholesome jealousy, that constant vigilance, which (as Mr. Jefferson has himself justly said) is the eternal price that men must pay for liberty. To do

*Mr. Leigh forgot to ask what those gentlemen would think of the authority of this precedent, who maintained the opinion that the senate had no constitutional right to refuse to receive the memorials of the abolitionists, or any other petition not disrespectfully to the senate or some member of it, or any petition no matter what its character.

Mr. Jefferson justice, it must be remarked that there is not the least reason to believe that he approved, or even knew of that expunging order of the senate in April, 1806, much more counselled or wished it. Whether the present chief magistrate has taken any pains, or expressed any wish for the accomplishment of the expunction now proposed, I do not know; though I could give a shrewd guess.

There was another precedent during Mr. Jefferson's administration, which I shall mention, to illustrate the wonderful power and influence of precedents in human affairs. In December, 1787, Mr. Jefferson wrote a letter to Mr. Madison on the subject of the present constitution of the United States, then recently framed, but not yet adopted, in which one of his chief objections to that instrument was the omission of a bill of rights, providing (among other things) for "jury trial" and "the eternal and unremittent force of the habeas corpus laws;" and he repeated the objection in letters to another correspondent afterwards. He was not then content with the provision of the constitution (art. 1, § 9), that "the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended," (that is, even by congress), "unless when, in cases of rebellion or invasion, the public safety may require it;"—he thought there ought to be "no suspensions of the habeas corpus;" for my part, I am content with the security provided by the constitution, if it shall be fairly observed. Now, in the winter of 1805-7, general Wilkinson made a military arrest of three persons in New Orleans—Swartout, Bolman and Alexander, and sent them to Washington; and it was not till they got here that they were discharged on a habeas corpus by the supreme court. They belonged not to the army; they were nowise amenable to martial law. As to the two first, there was reason to believe that they were implicated with colonel Burr in his projects, whatever they were; for, to this day, the public is not informed what they were. But against Alexander no evidence of guilt, no ground of suspicion, that I remember, ever appeared; no colorable pretext was stated to the public for his arrest. Did Mr. Jefferson censure these illegal arrests, made by an officer subject to his absolute control? did he disapprove this violation of the personal security of the citizen, by military power? did he call the general to any account? did he order any inquiry? I only know that the president of the United States gave the general his countenance, approbation and support; and the confidence of the public in the president's prudence and justice, and their detestation of the guilty schemes imputed to colonel Burr, had the effect of exempting general Wilkinson from blame. And in September, 1810, Mr. Jefferson wrote a letter to a Mr. Colvin, in which he deliberately justified general Wilkinson's conduct upon the ground of the necessity of the case, which, as he states it, was the oddest case of necessity that ever was imagined: the letter has been published by his grandson. The fact of his entertaining such an opinion, was generally known, or at least reported at the time. The necessity of the case might (for aught that I know) have afforded an excuse for general Wilkinson's conduct—might have entitled him to pardon and indemnity; but it could not have afforded him any justification; and I say before high heaven, that if all the great and good men of the revolution had signed that letter with Mr. Jefferson, I would still lift up my voice to protest against the dangerous unconstitutional doctrines it inculcates. There, then, was a precedent of military arrest, set even during Mr. Jefferson's administration, without being seriously questioned, and without exciting any jealousy or alarm in the public mind. And some few years afterwards, general Jackson, charged with the defence of New Orleans against an invading army, improved upon the precedent; abrogated the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus for a time, proclaimed martial law, and turned the state legislature out of doors. His conduct, too, may have been prudent and founded in laudable motives; he, too, might have been entitled to complete indemnity; but he violated the constitution of his country—he suspended, for the time and place, the sacred principles of civil liberty. The glory of the victory of New Orleans justified all; and great glory there was, and great good accomplished for his country, I willingly acknowledge—though (by the way) in my opinion, his fame as a general rests more on his spirited and judicious attack upon the enemy on the 23d December, than on his crowning victory of the 8th January. Allow him the fullest meed of praise; still, the sense of that brilliant and most important public service, the gratitude it deserved, the admiration it excited, the glory it achieved for the general and the nation, ought not to have stifled our love and care for the constitution. He was entitled to honor and gratitude for the good he did, and to indemnity for any wrong he committed through necessity, and with virtuous motives; and that was the most. He knows nothing of the principles of the constitution, and nothing of the influence of dangerous precedents, who is willing that that conduct of general Jackson should be represented as justifiable. During the second administration of lord Chatham, a proclamation was issued, under an apprehension of scarcity, prohibiting the exportation of corn, and thus suspending the statute law of the land; and he and lord Camden, too, insisted that the proclamation was strictly justifiable. They supposed a necessity, (of which the king was to judge), and founded on that necessity, attributed to the crown a legal power to suspend the operation of a statute not given by the statute itself; and they even opposed an indemnifying bill. They incurred the reproaches of their warmest friends and admirers, for holding such language, the only language, perhaps, that ever fell from the lips of either which offended against the general principles of civil liberty. Junius told lord Camden that an Englishman "should not suffer dangerous precedents to be established because the circumstances are favorable or palliating;" that "instead of asserting that the proclamation was legal, he should have said—I know the proclamation was illegal; but I advised it because it was indispensably necessary to save the kingdom from famine; and I submit myself to the justice and mercy of my country." And, sir, that is the true doctrine.

But general Jackson succeeded in establishing a second precedent in our history, of an unquestioned violation of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus. And afterwards, again, in time of profound peace, at Pensacola, he established a third precedent of the same kind; and this again passed unquestioned; indeed, it was defended and justified, on the ground that the constitutional privilege of the writ of habeas corpus did not extend to the territories of the United States. He has been since twice elected to the high office of chief magistrate of this great and free country; and if his admirers had been content with saying that the people have elected him because, in their estimate, his merits and services far outweigh his faults and errors, though I never have concurred, and never can concur, in that opinion, I should not have adverted to the disagreeable topics I have now mentioned; but we are constantly told that the people have approved, justified, sanctioned all his conduct. Since he has been in the administration of affairs, precedents favorable to the extension of executive power, to a degree that I had never imagined the possibility of, have been multiplied, and are multiplying. I look to the consequences with terror. God grant I may be mistaken in my impressions of the past, and my forebodings of the future; but I must declare my opinion, that never did any republic make such rapid strides towards pure monarchy as we have done within these few years past. Saying this, let me be understood. I impute no such designs to any body, much less do I impute any inclination for monarchy to the great body of the people. I believe no republican people ever, knowingly and of purpose, gave up the blessings of free government; but in the heat of violent political contentions, the official agents of the people, and the people themselves, have but too often unwarily concurred in introducing and sanctioning principles of administration which, once put into operation, work with uncontrollable effect, beside and beyond the original purpose and design, and, in the end, endanger the very being of the republic. And this, in my opinion, is what we have been and are now doing. The very confidence we have in ourselves and in our institutions, as it stifles in the public mind that jealousy, vigilance and care, so essential to security, is a principal source of our danger.

Well was it said the other day by the gentleman from South Carolina, (Mr. Calhoun), that precedents apparently trivial are often of the utmost importance, because they may be applied, stretched or perverted to cases never apprehended or foreseen; and that precedents affecting constitutional questions are rarely resorted to as authority for the exercise of any but doubtful powers, for the plain reason that the authority of precedents is never necessary, unless the power they are wanted to sustain is doubtful. Witness the use now made of the two precedents of expunging, found in the proceedings of the senate! Sir, we shall find it an eternal truth, that "there is no other course to be taken in a settled state, than a steady constant resolution never to give way so far as to make the least breach in the constitution, through which a million of abuses and encroachments will certainly in time force their way." I quote the words of Swift, a monarchist and a tory to be sure, yet they are the words of political prudence and wisdom; they embody the lessons and the warnings of experience, which the republicans of this country will do well to hearken to and remember.

And now, sir, I think myself well warranted in saying that the expunging of the resolution of the senate of the 28th of March, 1834, from the journal, literally or figuratively, is wholly irreconcilable with the constitution, upon any fair construction of its words; and that no authority for such expunction can be found in any precedence whatever at all applicable to the purpose, or entitled to the least weight. I think myself warranted in saying, too, that if the senate shall adopt this proposition, and carry it into execution, it will set a precedent fraught with the most dangerous and pernicious consequences. But there was one position taken by the gentleman from Missouri, (which indeed I consider as the main ground of his argument), so important in itself, that I have reserved it for a separate consideration.

I understand the gentleman to insist that it will not suffice to reverse, repeal, rescind, annul, make void, the resolution of March, 1834, because "all these admit either a legal or an innocent beginning;" and that expunction is the proper remedy, because "that implies an original wrongful proceeding, which infers misconduct as well as error, and requires rebuke as well as reversal." And his leading argument to prove that the resolution began in wrong, is, that the senate had no right to entertain and act upon such a resolution; that it was an act of a judicial nature, not belonging to us in our legislative capacity at all, and incompatible with our judicial functions and duties; that the resolution is an impeachment of the president of a high crime or misdemeanor, which the house of representatives alone has the power to prefer; that we impeached the president, tried him without a hearing, prejudicated his cause, convicted him, and only abstained from passing sentence of incapacitation upon him. This argument was first suggested to my mind by a gentleman from New York, (Mr. Wright), in a speech in the debate on the resolution; and I then weighed it well. It was repeated in the president's protest against our proceedings, and in the debate which ensued; I re-examined it; I expected to hear it reiterated on this occasion; but if it be well considered, I am persuaded it will never be repeated again.

The resolution declares "that the president, in the late executive proceedings in relation to the revenue, had assumed upon himself authority and power not conferred by the constitution and laws, but in derogation of both." The words cannot be tortured into an allegation that the president wilfully assumed and exercised illegal and unconstitutional power; no criminal intent is charged, expressly or by implication; the language is (and was, in fact, intended to be) carefully confined to the acts of the president, without imputing or touching his motives at all. If this is not plain upon the face of the resolution itself, no argument can make it plainer.

The gentleman from Missouri, as if sensible that the resolution itself imported no criminal charge, has, in the preamble to the resolution he has now offered us, recited the resolution which was first proposed concerning the removal of the public deposits from the bank of the United States, as a key, I suppose, to unlock the meaning of the resolution that was adopted; and, in his speech, he has referred to speeches made in the debate on the subject, in order to ascertain from them, that criminal motives and design were intended to be imputed to the president. Sir, to my mind, the first resolution proposed, concerning the removal of the deposits, does not vary, in this particular, from the resolution that was finally adopted: there is no charge of criminal intent, no imputation on the president's motives, in the first any more than in the last. But suppose there were—with what color of reason or justice can the gentleman from Missouri, in order to ascertain the meaning of the language which the senate used, have recourse to language which it did not use? resort to a resolution, which the senate did not adopt, to find a reason for reprobation of that which it did adopt? As to the speeches that were made on this floor, which, in the gentleman's apprehension, distinctly imputed wilful guilt to the president, I cannot take upon me to contradict him, for I was not then here, and did not hear them; the debate was drawing to a close when I took my seat in the senate. I can only say that I read no reported speech containing any violent denunciations of guilt and crime, at all answering the description he has given. But here, again, I ask, what right has he thus to take the sentiments of particular members expressed in debate, as a certain exponent of the sentiments of every other senator who, in the result, votes with him? Does he suppose that every gentleman who votes with him, on any question which he debates, enters into all the feelings, motives and sentiments, adopts all arguments that influence his judgment and conduct, and makes them his own? But I recall the attention of the senate to this singular method of detecting offence in the resolution of March, 1834, chiefly for the purpose of showing the manner in which it affects the freedom of speech in this body, and the reverential awe with which it supposes we ought to examine the official acts of the president. All proper decorum and respect ought to be preserved towards him, I agree—for his sake, for our sake, out of respect to the public, out of a just sense of the dignity of the government: but shall those strong (if you please, too strong) expressions of disapprobation or censure, which fall from gentlemen in the ardor of extemporary debate, which, perhaps, in cooler moments, they would have left unsaid—shall these be treasured up in memory, and urged as censure, not only against them, but all that vote with them, upon the question in debate? What is this sanctity in the office of president of the United States, which all men should have forever before their eyes, present in their thoughts, inviolable in their speech? No such sanctity hedges the impeachable ministers of the British government. Lord Chatham once said, in the house of lords, that the minister (the prime minister) had advised the king to tell a deliberate falsehood. The gentleman from Missouri says, "we have borrowed largely from our English ancestors, and, because we have so borrowed, results the precious and proud gratification that our America now ranks among the great and liberal powers of the world;" and he traces our dearest institutions to English origin. I hope we have not forgot to borrow from them freedom of parliamentary debate. That high encomium which the gentleman pronounced upon our English ancestors is just and true, and, therefore, I was pleased to hear it fall from his lips; but if it had come from me, it would have been regarded as a proof of my aristocracy; for it has often been imputed as aristocracy in me, that I make frequent reference to English history, (which, in truth, I have read more of than any other, but only because it has been more accessible to me); that I have studied the history of the English government and laws, and imagine that instruction may be found in them applicable to our own. I am content to bear the imputation: if the fact, without any criminal intent, constitutes guilt, I must be convicted: I know no method of acquiring a thorough knowledge of our own institutions but by cultivating a knowledge of English institutions.

In all impeachments that I have seen, the facts of misconduct are specifically alleged, and some criminal intent, more or less heinous, expressly imputed to the accused. We have seen that, in the articles of impeachment against sir Robert Berkley, for his extra-judicial opinions, and his concurrence in the judgment against Mr. Hampden, in the case of ship-money, the opinions and the judgment are set out at large; the fact that they gave them, and the gross illegality of them, are distinctly alleged; and then it is charged that all those "words, opinions and actions were so done and spoken by the said sir Robert Berkley, traitorously and wickedly, to alienate the hearts of his majesty's liege people from him, and to set a division betwixt them, and to subvert the fundamental laws and established government of his majesty's realm of England." And whoever will search the numerous precedents of articles of impeachment in England, I will answer for it that he will find this precedent substantially complied with, in charging the facts and laying the criminal intent. The gentleman from Missouri says that no criminal intent is charged in three of the articles of impeachment against judge Chase, and (as I understand him) in one of the articles against judge Pickering. The gentleman is certainly mistaken. The criminal intent is distinctly charged in all of the eight articles against judge Chase, except one; that, namely, in which it is alleged that, in Callender's case, he did not conform with the statute of Virginia regulating the process in prosecutions for misdemeanor. That article alleges the departure from the law, but omits to allege that he did so wilfully, or even that he was aware of the provisions of the statute; and upon that charge he was, of course, unanimously acquitted. The article of impeachment against judge Pickering, in which the gentleman supposes no criminal intent was laid, imputes to the judge the grossest intemperance and indecency in the judgment seat; nor could the criminality of such conduct (than which hardly any official misconduct could be more clearly criminal, however it might be more heinous), have been more strongly and expressly charged. He was convicted upon this charge. The gentleman says that, in fact, the judge was insane, and was incapable of crime. How the gentleman got his information, I do not know; he certainly did not get it from the record. [Here Mr. Leigh referred to the record of the impeachments and trials of judge Pickering and judge Chase, in the journals of the senate, and showed the exact state of the facts.]

The resolution of the 28th March, 1834, declares that the president's conduct in relation to the revenue was illegal and unconstitutional, without more. Gentlemen say that the fact alleged implies crime; that it implies a violation of his official oath "to preserve, protect and defend the constitution of the United States." Now, in the first place, let us advert once more to the proceedings in the ship-money case, which my colleague has quoted with so much approbation, where the house of lords declared the extra-judicial opinions of the judges, and the judgment against Mr. Hampden, illegal and unconstitutional, in the strongest terms, without imagining that that declaration was a prejudication of the impeachment against one of the judges then pending, which the lords, as the high court of impeachment, were to try; in other words, that it did not occur to them that the fact of extra-judicial illegal conduct implied crime. In the next place, let me ask gentlemen whether they suppose that, in maintaining that this expunging process they are so intent upon is unconstitutional; in declaring my opinion (as I do most conscientiously) that it is a plain violation of the constitution, I mean to charge them with a wilful violation of the constitution, and of their official oaths? I know mankind too well. It has been said that, if men's passions could be made to enter into the question, they would differ and dispute upon the plainest proposition in Euclid; and there is no passion so apt and so potential to influence and determine the judgments of public men as party spirit. Gentlemen, in both houses of congress, are daily alleging that measures strenuously maintained by others are unconstitutional, plainly unconstitutional; yet no one ever thinks of giving or taking offence, which, surely, all would do if they thought that to allege unconstitutional conduct is to charge wilful guilt. The president has often put his veto on acts passed by both houses of congress, on the ground that he thought them unconstitutional. I can hardly believe that he meant to charge the majority of both houses with an intentional violation of the constitution and breach of their official oaths. I have heard the judgments of the supreme court publicly impugned, as being contrary to the constitution. I have heard chief justice Marshall's opinion so impugned by men who entertained the highest respect for his abilities and integrity, and would have considered it a reproach to themselves if they had been gravely told that they had imputed to the court a wilful departure from right, truth and justice. Sir, there is but one hypothesis upon which the allegation made in the resolution of March, 1834, that the president's conduct was illegal and unconstitutional, can imply crime, and that is, that his judgment is infallible, and that it is morally impossible for him to do an illegal and unconstitutional act, through error of judgment. That is very far from my opinion. There is no man whose judgment I should esteem infallible on such a subject, and the president is one of the last men to whom I should attribute any such infallibility. And, though I believed at the time I gave my vote on the resolution of March, 1834, that the conduct of the president therein referred to was illegal and unconstitutional, and though that it still, and probably will always continue to be, my firm, undoubting opinion, I have no hesitation in saying that, if the president had been regularly impeached for that conduct, and I had been called upon to decide his case as one of his judges, upon all the evidence then (or, indeed, yet) known to me, touching the motives of his conduct, my voice must have been for his acquittal. I could not have found the wilful criminal intent essential to constitute guilt.

The gentleman from Missouri loudly reprobates the resolution in question, on the ground that its allegations are vague and indefinite; not perceiving that that very circumstance furnishes the strongest proof that a criminal accusation was not made or intended. The idea of impeaching the president of crime or misdemeanor never entered into the thoughts of any senator who voted for the resolution; and there was not a human being, I am quite sure, who so much as imagined the possibility of an act of impeachment by the house of representatives; the case of such impeachment was only supposed in argument, never apprehended in fact.

It is said that the resolution of March, 1834, cannot be regarded as a proceeding in our legislative capacity; and in proof of this, it has been observed that no legislative measure was founded upon it, and that none was intended. This appears to my mind the most gratuitous assumption that ever was made. It was the opinion of the mover in those proceedings, that the public deposits, at least of the revenue which should afterwards accrue, ought to be restored to the bank of the United States; and it was proper to ascertain the sense of the senate on the question, whether (for the reasons assigned by the executive) they had been constitutionally and legally withdrawn or not; for, if the senate had held the affirmative on that point, it would have been vain and idle to prepare and bring in a bill for the purpose. The course pursued is usual in all legislative bodies. As it was, I have not the least doubt that the known state of opinion in the house of representatives upon the subject alone prevented the senate from passing a bill for the restoration of the deposits. The senate did take measures, some time after, to ascertain the sense of the house: on the 4th of June, 1834, it passed a joint resolution directing the deposit of the public moneys to be made with the bank of the United States and its branches. The house never acted upon it.

But let us examine more closely the reason and foundation of this opinion, that the senate cannot, in its legislative capacity, discuss and determine upon the constitutionality or legality of any act of the president; and let us see, too, the extent of the principle. It is supposed that the judicial power vested in the senate, as the court for the trial of impeachments, operates as a limitation upon the action of the senate in its legislative capacity; that the senate cannot, in its legislative capacity, express any opinion impugning the constitutionality or legality of any official act of the president, because it may be called upon to decide the same question judicially, upon an impeachment against him for the same act. Now, it is obvious, that if the senate is, for this reason, incompetent to pass any resolution, impugning the conduct of the president as unconstitutional, neither is it competent to pass a resolution approving his conduct as constitutional and proper; for it can be no more within the competency of the senate to prejudice the president's cause, and acquit him, than to prejudice and condemn. Partiality in judges towards the accused is as vicious as prejudice against him. Nay, more: it is the duty of every senator to avoid the forming, and expression of, an opinion on the constitutionality of the president's conduct; to close his mind against all information on the subject; to hold his judgment in suspense. Nor is this all. The senate and house of representatives are made by the constitution co-ordinate branches of the legislature, and their legislative powers are coequal, too, with the single exception, that money-bills can only be originated in the house; and then a distinct judicial function is assigned to each. The house is the grand inquest of the nation to accuse and impeach; the senate is the court to try and determine. As to all matters of criminal accusation and impeachment, the action of the house is just as much judicial in its nature as the action of the senate; the only difference is, that their judicial functions are different. If the senate, in its legislative capacity, is incompetent to examine the constitutionality of the president's conduct, and express its opinion upon it, the house, also, in its legislative capacity, is incompetent to do so.

If, therefore, the president shall, upon any occasion, adopt any measure questionable on constitutional grounds, no matter how mischievous the measure may be in its operation—no matter how urgent the necessity for prompt and decisive legislative action, to correct the procedure and arrest the progress of the evil—neither branch of the legislature can examine, or even inquire into, the subject in its legislative character, much more pass an act to remedy the mischief. The house of representatives must first resolve itself into a grand inquest; examine the president's conduct in that character; impeach him, if it find just cause for impeachment; prosecute him before the senate; and prosecute him to conviction by the judgment of two-thirds of the senators sitting on the trial; and then, and not till then, the two houses may set about devising measures to counteract the unconstitutional and illegal measures of the executive. And furthermore, as the senate cannot convict the president, without being satisfied in its conscientious judgment that his unconstitutional proceedings are justly imputable to criminal motives and designs, no unconstitutional acts of the president can be corrected by any legislative measures of congress, if the president's violation of the constitution and laws shall appear to be justly imputable to an innocent error of judgment as to the extent of his own powers—an error into which (of all others that can be conceived) men in power are most apt to fall. Meanwhile, the measures of the executive continue in operation, and perhaps work their full effect, unchecked, unembarrassed, by any manner or counteraction which the legislature can constitutionally devise and provide. Sir, if this doctrine that the senate, and by parity of reasoning, the house of representatives, also, are incompetent, in their legislative capacity, to examine and determine upon the constitutionality or legality of executive acts, shall be established, then I say that the executive is, really and truly, the government, and the whole government; that the president is, in every practical view, absolutely irresponsible; that he is a more absolute potentate than any prince, king, or emperor, in Europe, except, perhaps, the autocrat of all the Russians; and the grand signor of Turkey. And this process of expunction of our resolution of March, 1834, is to be resorted to on the supposition that this doctrine is just and true, and to establish it as a constitutional principle of this federal republican government.

During the same session of 1833-4, at which the resolution concerning the president's conduct in relation to the revenue was adopted, there was an inquiry into the state of the post office department, and the administration of its affairs by the then postmaster general, Mr. Barry; and that proceeding of the senate resulted in the following resolution, passed on the 27th June, 1834: "That it is proved and admitted that large sums of money have been borrowed at different banks by the postmaster general, in order to make up the deficiency in the means of carrying on the business of the post office department, without authority given by any law of congress; and that, as congress alone possesses the power to borrow money on the credit of the United States, all such contracts for loans by the postmaster general are illegal and void." This was at least as strong a condemnation of the conduct of the postmaster general, as the resolution concerning the conduct of the president in relation to the public revenue contained. I should certainly have voted for it myself, had I been in my place at the time, because the proposition it asserted was true in fact, and just in law; but, in giving that vote, I should not have been influenced by and opinion, that the illegal conduct of the postmaster general was imputable to criminal motives and designs. Enough had appeared to satisfy my mind that the grossest abuses and corruptions had crept into the administration of the department; enough to convince me that Mr. Barry was wholly unfit for his office; but the very circumstance of his unfitness, and much more besides, that came to my knowledge, inclined me to take a charitable view of his conduct and character; and I more than once publicly intimated this sentiment. And now that he has gone to his grave, I find a real pleasure in saying that I saw no evidence to implicate him in any intentional guilt. The resolution concerning his conduct was adopted by the unanimous votes of the senators present. It is manifestly upon its face liable to exactly the same objection now made to the resolution of March, 1834; namely, that it imported a criminal charge against the postmaster general, an impeachable officer; and, therefore, it was not within the competency of the senate in its legislative capacity to entertain and act upon it. The gentleman from Missouri voted for it; and, to avoid the charge of inconsistency, he now tells us that "the proceeding against Mr. Barry was objected to, and that in the first stages of it, upon the same grounds on which we now stand in the case of the president," (and of this he adduces proof), "and the vote which was given by me and my friends, was a vote forced on us by the majority of the senate, and, being so forced upon us, was given, as we believed, according to the truth and the fact. I well recollect that vote, and the conversation among us to which it gave rise. Some thought we should vote against it on the ground that the proceeding was unconstitutional, and that a vote in its favor would commit us on that point; others, of whom I was one, objected to the negative vote, because it would be against evidence, and would subject us to the imputation of voting as partisans and not as senators, and because a negative vote admitted the jurisdiction just as much as an affirmative one."

Now, I ask, if a negative vote admitted the jurisdiction just as much as an affirmative one, in Mr. Barry's case, how is it that the negative vote which the gentleman gave in the president's case had no effect to admit the jurisdiction of the senate to entertain and pass the resolution of March, 1834? But this may be thought an argumentum ad hominem, which is never quite fair. I am afraid myself that it is not fair; because, though this is one reason which the gentleman assigns for his course, it is not the only reason; and because he has vindicated his general consistency in relation to this question, by showing that he maintained the same opinion he now contends for in February, 1831. I did not myself perceive the inconsistency between the vote against the resolution of the 28th March, 1834, and the vote for that of the 27th June, until it was pointed out to me; and my impression was, that it might be accounted for by the hurry of business when the last vote was given, and the little importance of the subject of that vote, compared with the vast importance of the subject of the first; so that the principle involved escaped attention when the last resolution was adopted. The only question at all material is, whether the opinion the gentleman now advances concerning Mr. Barry's case, is right or wrong? I have no wish or care to convict the gentleman of inconsistency, nor was that my purpose in adverting to this topic. My purpose lies much deeper. I pray the senate to observe that it is now admitted, nay, contended, that the same principle which should interdict the senate, in its legislative capacity, from examining and determining on the constitutionality of the acts of every impeachable executive officer; and then all the consequences follow: the unconstitutional acts of all executive officers can only be examined by the house of representatives, in its judicial character, as the grand inquest of the nation; can only be examined by the senate, in its judicial character, as a court of impeachment; can never be corrected by legislative action, until the impeachment is determined; cannot be corrected even then, if the senate, convinced of the innocence of the accused of all criminal motive and intent, should be itself bound in conscience to acquit him of guilt; and meantime the unconstitutional measure will have been in full operation. And thus, this process of expunction will have the effect of establishing a principal vitally affecting the competency of the two houses of congress in their legislative character; and a principal that will protect not only the unconstitutional acts of the president, but those of all his subordinate executive officers, from legislative inquiry, examination, counteraction and correction.

I shall not now enter upon a discussion of the question whether it was true, in point of fact and in point of law, as the resolution of March, 1834, declared, that the president's proceedings therein referred to were illegal and unconstitutional; because, supposing that declaration not just and true, yet, if the senate had competency to act upon the subject, its action did not begin in wrong, and the remedy is to correct our error by rescinding, not by expunging, the resolution. Surely, the present majority of the senate are not going the length of expunging every proceeding of the then majority, which it shall consider erroneous in principle and in fact. The question of the competency of the senate to pass the resolution of March, 1834, lies at the bottom of the argument of the gentleman from Missouri, in support of his motion to expunge, in preference to rescinding. That question I have now discussed. I wish to confine myself to what affects the question of expunging only. If a motion shall be made to rescind, though I shall have no new argument of my own, I may find it my duty to recapitulate the conclusive arguments of others to show that the resolution of March, 1834, is just and true in all respects, and that the principle it asserts is essential to the maintenance of our free institutions.

The gentleman from Missouri said that "expunge is a severe remedy, but it is a just one. It reflects reproach, but the fault is not ours, but of those who compel us to it. Let us go on, then, and neither compromise for difficulties, nor despair for failures. If we fail now, let us try again. If we continue to fail, and have to retire before the good work is accomplished, let us transmit and bequeath it to the democracy of America. Let us give it to the aged sire, that he may hand it down to his heir—to the matron, that she may deliver it to her manly son—to the young mother, that she may teach her infant babe to suck in the avenging word EXPUNGE, with the life-sustaining milk which it draws from her bosom." As to that young mother who shall be willing to mix the bitterness of that "avenging word expunge," or any other vengeance, with the milk which, with the sweetness of maternal love, she should minister to her babe, it is to be hoped she will never have any more off-spring, and the unhappy babe shall suck the spirit of vengeance with his mother's milk, what deeds he may perform in his mature manhood, it is revolting to reflect. But none of the young mothers are going to take this advice—that I am sure of. And if the democracy of America shall be willing to accept the legacy, which the gentleman from Missouri is so bountifully desirous of bequeathing to them, and to improve it to the degree of which it is susceptible, I fear some future advocate of monarchy may find cause to remember and apply to us the contemptuous language which the tyrion of Swift has applied to all democratic states—"that an usurping populace is its own dupe—a mere underworker, and a purchaser in trust for some single tyrant, whose state and power they advance to their own ruin, with as blind an instinct as those worms that die with weaving magnificent habits for beings of a nature superior to their own." And, sir, I venture to warn my countrymen, that if they would avoid the reproach of being dupes, they must never indulge the vain-glorious imagination that they are incapable of being deluded; that they must distrust and watch their agents, distrust and watch themselves, watch over their constitution, their laws, and especially their public treasure, upon which the rights they so dearly value essentially depend.

A LETTER WRITTEN IN 1776. From the Boston Transcript.

The subjoined letter was rescued the other day from the maw of a paper mill. We thought it worth preservation, as indicating the feelings of the "king's own" toward the "rebels," and for the very handsome compliment the writer pays, with more sincerity than he was aware, to the "d—d Connecticut and New England people." The letter was written from New York, and the writer, we presume, was an officer of the British navy. It is directed "To Mr. Archd McNeal, at Halifax: per favor capt. Barnwell Stephenson."
